Section 5(5) of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 requires that applicants for project licence give adequate consideration to the possibility of achieving the objectives of the programme of work using methods which do not use animals. In addition, when assessing licence applications, the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Inspectorate ensures that protocols are refined to minimise the suffering to animals and the number of animals used.

The Home Office, through the Animal Procedures Committee, sponsors research into alternatives and industry itself has spent millions of pounds each year in the search for alternatives.

The types of replacement alternatives which are available include the use of human volunteers; computer simulation and mathematical modelling; improved storage, sharing and use of results from previous animal experiments to avoid unnecessary repetition; the use of non-protected animals, micro-organisms or plants; the use of non-living tissue; physical and chemical techniques; and in vitro studies.

Homosexuality

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the advice he has issued concerning the prosecution of private consensual homosexual acts involving males between the ages of 16 and 18 years. [11268]

Mr. Michael: My Department has issued no such advice. Prosecution policy is a matter for the Director of Public Prosecutions, as the head of the Crown Prosecution Service, under the superintendence of the Attorney-General. The law provides restrictions on prosecutions for certain homosexual offences in England and Wales. Under section 8 of the Sexual Offences Act 1967, no proceedings can be instituted except by or with the consent of the Director of Public Prosecutions against any man for the offence of buggery, or gross indecency with, another man or for aiding, abetting, counselling, procuring or commanding its commission where either of the men were at the time of its commission under the age of 21.

The Crown Prosecution Service applies two tests before it institutes proceedings. First, it decides whether the evidence affords a realistic prospect of conviction; secondly, if that exists, it decides whether prosecution is in the public interest. Prosecution of those under 18 is not undertaken lightly and is more likely where there is an element of seduction or corruption, coercion or force. Each case would be carefully considered in the light of its own facts.

Members of the European Parliament

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the election of British Members of the European Parliament by proportional representation. [11488]

Mr. George Howarth: The Government recently announced their intention to introduce legislation this Session to provide for the 1999 elections to the European Parliament to be conducted using a proportionally based regional list system.

Amsterdam Treaty

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the implications of chapter 14 of the Amsterdam treaty for the electoral systems in the United Kingdom. [11424]

Mr. George Howarth: We do not believe that chapter 14 of the provisional draft treaty of Amsterdam will have an impact on the electoral system in the United Kingdom.

We have recently announced our intention to change the electoral system for elections to the European Parliament to a proportionally based list system in time for the elections to be held in 1999.

National Lottery (Horserace Betting Levy)

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to publish the second report on the impact of the national lottery on the horserace betting levy. [12151]

Mr. George Howarth: An update on the impact of the national lottery on the horserace betting levy has been published today. This fulfils an undertaking made during the passage of the National Lottery Bill.

The paper, which has been prepared by the economics unit of the Home Office, examines continuing trends in off-course betting expenditure, on which the levy is closely dependent.

The statistical analysis suggests that, in 1996, betting expenditure off-course was about 10 per cent. below the level it would have reached in the absence of the national lottery. Horserace betting accounts for an estimated 70 per cent. of such expenditure, and therefore the levy yield is likely to have been similarly affected. This can be only an approximate figure, and the effect of the lottery may vary over time.

Crime (Sentences) Act 1997

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which provisions of the Crime (Sentences) Act 1997 will be implemented; and when. [12152]

Mr. Straw: I will implement most of the provisions of the Act, and to the same timetable as envisaged by the previous administration. The provisions of the Act which I will implement are set out, according to the target date of implementation.

Provisions to be implemented in 1997:

Automatic life sentence for a second conviction for a serious sexual or violent offence (section 2).

Mandatory minimum sentence of seven years for a third class A drug trafficking conviction (section 3).

Technical provisions and consequential changes arising from sections 2 and 3, including the extension of the automatic life sentence provisions to armed forces legislation (sections 1.5, 6, 7, and schedule 4 as they relate to sections 2 and 3).

New provisions for the release of those sentenced to detention during Her Majesty's pleasure (sections 28 to 33).

Increase in age limits from 21 to 25 for use of attendance centres for fine defaulters (section 36).

Abolition of consent requirements for certain community penalties (section 38 and related paragraphs of schedule 4).

Transfer of prisoners between jurisdictions (Section 41, schedule 1, and relevant paragraphs of schedules 4 and 5).

Repatriation of prisoners (section 42 and schedule 2).

Increase in maximum penalty for juveniles convicted of indecent assault on a female (section 44).

Naming juveniles in court proceedings (section 45).

Hospital and limitation directions for sentencing mentally disordered offenders, (section 46 and schedule 4, paragraph 12).

Power to specify hospital units for detention of mentally disordered offenders (sections 47, 49(2) and 49(4)).

Movement of conditionally discharged patients between jurisdictions in the United Kingdom (section 48 and schedule 3).

Extended maximum duration of interim hospital order (section 49(1)).

Transfer of prisoners to private psychiatric hospitals for treatment (section 49(3)).

Committals for sentence (section 51 and related paragraphs of schedule 4). This is linked to the plea before venue provision in the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 (section 49) which I propose to bring into force at the same time.

Provisions to be piloted in 1998:

Community service or curfew order enforced by electronic monitoring for fine defaulters (section 35, and paragraph 10(2) of schedule 4).

Community service for persistent petty offenders (section 37).

Disqualification from driving as a penalty (section 39).

Disqualification from driving for fine defaulters (section 40).

Curfew order enforced by electronic monitoring for juveniles (section 43).

Other provisions for which no implementation date has yet been decided.

New arrangements for crediting time spent in custody on remand in calculation of sentence (sentence 9 and related paragraphs of schedules 4 and 5).

Disclosure of pre-sentence reports to the prosecution (section 50).

Application of mandatory minimum sentences for drug trafficking to service law (section 7 as it applies to section 3).

The previous Administration said that implementation of what became section 4 of the Act would depend on the Prison Service's capacity and available resources. They said, as an "example", that these provisions could be implemented in October 1999. Because the relevant convictions do not count until the section comes into operation, very few people would be subject to the provisions of section 4 until 2001. Against this background, and given current pressures on prison capacity and available resources, it would not be practical to implement section 4 for the present. I shall, however, keep the matter under review.

I have also decided not to implement the new early release arrangements set out in sections 8, 10 to 26 and related paragraphs of schedules 4 and 5. The same effect can be achieved in a far more clear and straightforward way by ensuring that judges and magistrates spell out in open court what the sentence they have imposed really means in practice. Sections 20 to 21, which deal with extended post-release supervision of violent and sexual offenders, are integrally linked with the other early release provisions and will not be implemented, but I will bring forward in the Crime and Disorder Bill alternative provisions which will provide the additional protection of the public which they were designed to achieve.

Criminal Justice System

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he proposes to take on the recommendations of the review of delay in the criminal justice system. [12153]

Mr. Straw: The review of delay in the criminal justice system was set up in October 1996 and its report was published on 27 February 1997. Interested parties were then invited to comment on the 33 recommendations in the report. My right hon. and learned Friends the Lord Chancellor and the Attorney-General and I have considered these recommendations, taking account of the responses received, and we have concluded that many of them have the potential substantially to reduce delay without impairing the quality of justice.

We have therefore decided to accept the following recommendations, making legislative provision, where necessary, in the Crime and Disorder Bill:

- those which are designed to enable straightforward guilty plea cases to be dealt with a day or two after charge, thus restoring the concept of summary justice;
- proposals for improving case management in magistrates courts by allowing certain powers to be exercised by a single justice and to be further delegated where appropriate to clerks to the Justices;
- the proposal that indictable-only cases should begin in the Crown court (subject to arrangements being agreed for dealing with remand hearings, submissions of no case to answer and related matters); and
- some recommendations for procedural changes in the Youth court.

The recommendations relating to legal aid, which complement many of those provisions, will be considered by my right hon. and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor in the light of the pervious Government's proposed reforms and Sir Peter Middleton's review of legal aid which is now in progress.

We are not persuaded that the case for removing defendants' right of election has yet been made out, but since responses to the consultation exercise showed some substantial support for this proposal, we shall consider this question further, with a view to publishing a more detailed consultation paper in due course.

The Government's response to all the recommendations of the review of delay in the criminal justice system is set out in a document which has been placed in the Library.

Hong Kong Governor

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Governor of Hong Kong submitted a final report on the discharge of his functions under the British Nationality (Hong Kong) Act 1990. [12154]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Governor submitted his last report to my right hon. Friend on 20 June. A copy has been placed in the Library.

Data Protection

Ms Beverley Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish his proposals for the implementation of the EC data protection directive 95/46/EC. [12155]

Mr. George Howarth: Copies of the paper setting out the Government's proposals for new data protection legislation will be placed in the Library tomorrow at 10 am.

Dublin Convention

Valerie Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the implementation of the Dublin convention. [12156]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The convention determining the state responsible for examining applications for asylum lodged in one of the member states of the European Communities—the Dublin convention—will come into force on 1 September 1997. The convention, which was ratified by the United Kingdom in 1992, provides a mechanism for determining which member state should be responsible for deciding an asylum application made in the European Union.

Responsibility is determined according to a set of criteria. These include whether the applicant has a close family member recognised as a refugee in another member state; whether another member state has granted the person a residence permit or visa; the location of any illegal entry into the European Union; and the existence of a previous asylum application. The applicant can be transferred under the convention only if the receiving state agrees that it is responsible and if specific arrangements are made for the transfer. In many cases, the receiving state will not be the one from which the applicant embarked. There will be no change to the existing requirement that we must be satisfied that the applicant's life or liberty would not be threatened in the country concerned on account of his race, religion or any other factor; and that he would not be sent on to another state in breach of the 1951 United Nations convention on refugees.

The convention provides for the exchange of information on asylum applicants with other European Union states. This may include personal information such as fingerprints. The convention requires that such information may be used only for asylum purposes and may be communicated only to the authorities competent to make decisions on asylum cases. Information about the basis of an asylum claim itself may be exchanged only with the permission of the applicant.

Service Authorities

Mr. Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make an announcement about the establishment and membership of the service authorities provided for under sections 1 and 47 of the Police Act 1997 to maintain the National Criminal Intelligence Service and National Crime Squad. [12157]

Mr. Straw: I have decided to appoint Sir John Wheeler to chair the service authorities. I am delighted that Sir John has accepted this appointment. I have no doubt that his skills and experience will prove invaluable to the service authorities in their task of maintaining the National Criminal Intelligence Service and the National Crime Squad, both of which will substantially strengthen our ability to tackle organised and serious crime at national and international level. During his 18 years in Parliament, Sir John chaired a number of committees and groups, including the all-party penal affairs group and the Home Affairs Select Committee.

In 1990, he was awarded a knighthood for service to the Select Committee. He has been a justice of the peace in London since 1978 and is an active member of the Order of Saint John.

The other independent members I propose to appoint are Paul Lever and Peter Holland. Paul Lever is chairman of BSM Group plc and of Ashworth hospital authority. He has held senior management positions in major public companies and has considerable experience in the fields of strategic and financial management. Peter Holland is an independent business consultant and is also chairman of Hertfordshire police authority. He has held senior management positions in the Reuters Group, with responsibility for human resource and financial management.

I am also appointing Maria Callaghan to represent me in my capacity as the police authority for the Metropolitan police district. Miss Callaghan is a member of the Metropolitan police committee, chairs the Calotels Hotel Group and has extensive experience of business management. She holds a bachelor of law degree and has practised as a commercial lawyer.

These are four of the appointments for core members, of which there are 10 in all, who serve on both service authorities. The six other core members are:

Member	Position	Appointed by
Councillor Stephen Murphy	Greater Manchester Police Authority (LAB)	Police authorities (East and West)
Councillor Bob James	West Midlands Police Authority (LAB)	Police authorities (East and West)
Councillor Peter Fallows	West Mercia Police Authority (CON)	Police authorities (East and West)
David Veness QPM	Assistant Commissioner, Metropolitan Police	ACPO
David Phillips QPM	Chief Constable, Kent Constabulary	ACPO
John Warne	Director, Organised and International Crime Directorate, Home Office	Home Secretary

The NCIS Service Authority has a total of 19 members. The additional members are:

Member	Position	Appointed by
Cllr. Ron Fisher JP	South Yorkshire Police Authority (LAB)	Police authorities (E and W)
Cllr. Owen May	Devon and Cornwall Police Authority (Lib Dem)	Police authorities (E and W)
Cllr. Julia Sturrock	Taysie Joint Police Board	Police authorities (Scotland)
Pat Armstrong CBE	Police Authority for Northern Ireland	PANI
Ian Oliver QPM	Chief Constable, Grampian Police	ACPOS
Ronnie Flanagan OBE	Chief Constable, Royal Ulster Constabulary	Royal Ulster Constabulary
Dick Kellaway	Chief Investigation Officer, Her Majesty Customs and Excise	Commissioners for Customs and Excise
Duncan Macnivan	Head of Police, Fire and Emergencies Group, Scottish Office	Secretary of State, Scotland
John Steele CBE OBE TD DL	Senior Director, Northern Ireland	Secretary of State, Northern Ireland

The National Crime Squad Service Authority has a total of 17 members. The additional members are:

Member	Position	Appointed by
Cllr. Ken Walker	Cleveland Police Authority (LAB)	Police authorities (E and W)
Cllr. Barry Murray	South Wales Police Authority (LAB)	Police authorities (E and W)
Cllr. Neil Taggart	West Yorkshire Police Authority (LAB)	Police authorities (E and W)
Cllr. Sir. John Grugeon DL	Kent Police Authority (CON)	Police authorities (E and W)
Cllr. Elfyn Williams	North Wales Police Authority (Lib Dem)	Police authorities (E and W)
Cllr. Mrs. Angela Harris DL	North Yorkshire Police Authority (Lib Dem)	Police authorities (E and W)
David Wilmot QPM	Chief Constable, Greater Manchester Police	ACPO

The independent members were selected in line with Nolan principles following the procedures set out by Sir Len Peach in his guidance on public appointments. The police authority members for England and Wales were selected from among the local authority members of police authorities so as to ensure that, as far as practicable, the membership of the service authorities reflects the balance of parties across all local authority members of police authorities.

Private Security Industry

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy that any company supplying security services to his Department should be a member of the self-regulating organisations in the private security industry. [10448]

Mr. Straw: Current policy on appraisal of suppliers—including those providing security services—is to include, as best practice, criteria covering membership of self-regulating organisations. We recommend that is obtained. Such membership is not in itself mandatory for prospective suppliers of goods and services to the Home Department. It is one of a range of criteria on which a conclusion will be reached about the suppliers' ability to perform the proposed contract.

> "proof of enrolment on a professional or trade register, or register of companies in the country in which the supplier is established"

The planned introduction of statutory regulations for the private security industry, which I announced on 15 July 1997, will necessitate a review of our present guidance on supplier appraisal. This will follow a wide consultation exercise with the security industry over the next year.

Departmental Payroll

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list each of the functions relating to the payroll for which his Department is responsible, indicating the management systems purchased, all sub-contractors involved in the work, co-operative arrangements with other Departments and the costs of the systems and processes in the last year for which figures are available. [10732]

Mr. Straw: The payment of salaries and wages to staff in the Home Office, its agencies and some non-departmental public bodies is made through the Home Office payroll, which is managed in-house. Payroll services are not provided to other Departments. Funds are disbursed through the payroll for tax, national insurance, voluntary deductions made by staff, attachment of earnings etc. Financial management information is provided to budget managers. The cost of the service in 1996–97 was £3.7 million. Chessington Computer Services Ltd., provide a standard payroll package on licence to the Home Office. A software bureau, SEMA Group, processes the payroll data.

No management systems were purchased during the year.

Computer-related Expenditure

Mr Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of total departmental expenditure on computer-related current and capital work for (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98, (d) 1998–99 and (e) 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [11390]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 29 July 1997]: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Victim Support

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much financial support, at current prices, the Government have given to the voluntary organisation, Victim Support, in each year since 1979. [11353]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 29 July 1997]: In the following table, the annual Home Office grant to Victim Support has been revalued to 1997–98 prices using the gross domestic product deflator.

Financial year	Grant £million
1979–80	0.014
1980–81	0.023
1981–82	0.038
1982–83	0.031
1983–84	0.071
1984–85	0.110
1985–86	0.212
1986–87	0.466
1987–88	2.730
1988–89	3.977
1989–90	5.305
1990–91	5.948
1991–92	6.695
1992–93	8.227
1993–94	9.223
1994–95	10.866
1995–96	11.421
1997–98	12.682

The previous Government froze the grant to Victim Support at £11.7 million and made it clear that no more money would be forthcoming. However, support for victims is a top priority for us and, in furtherance of that aim, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced on Friday 13 June that the Home Office was increasing its grant to Victim Support by £1 million a year, taking it to £12.7 million.

Closed Circuit Television

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money at current prices has been invested by the Government in closed circuit television in each year since it was introduced. [11351]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 29 July 1997]: Home Office funding for closed circuit television has been provided through three rounds of the CCTV challenge competition—held in 1994–95, 1996–97 and 1997–98. Some £5 million was awarded to local crime prevention partnerships in round 1; £17.1 million in round 2; and £15 million in round 3. The funds awarded in 1994–95 and 1996–97 are worth £5.4 million and £17.6 million, respectively, at current prices.

Awards made in round 1 of the competition have all been paid in full. Awards under rounds 2 and 3 are being paid on a basis of need as projects proceed towards implementation. Actual expenditure in 1996–97 was £9.2 million—£9.5 million at current prices.

Funding for CCTV is available through other programmes such as the single regeneration budget. However, expenditure on CCTV is not identified separately on such programmes.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the level of recorded crime in each police area in England and Wales in each year since 1992. [11163]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 29 July 1997]: Information by police force area on the levels of crime in terms of numbers and percentages since 1992 is given in the table.

Notifiable offences recorded by the police by police force area

England and Wales 1992–96

Alcohol-related Crime

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the estimated cost to the police of alcohol-related incidents and offences in the last year for which figures are available. [11372]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 29 July 1997]: This information is not collected centrally. The cost to the police of responding to incidents and dealing with offences is a matter for individual chief constables.

Senior police officers have expressed concern about the level of drink-related incidents and the Under-Secretary, my hon. Friend the Member for Knowsley, North and Sefton, East (Mr. Howarth) has recently announced that we will be bringing in a range of measures to tackle the particular problem of young people and alcohol, including a new offence of buying alcohol for unsupervised under 18-year-olds and clarification of the position on test purchases. The Government will also implement on 1 August the Confiscation of Alcohol Act 1997 which will give the police a discretionary power to confiscate alcohol, or what appears to be alcohol, from under-age drinkers in any public place, or any other place to which the young person had unlawfully gained access.

Neighbourhood Watch

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many neighbourhood watch schemes there were in each year since the schemes were introduced. [11352]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 29 July 1997]: Neighbourhood watch schemes were first introduced in 1982. Statistics relating to the early years of their development were not collected systematically. Information is available only from 1991 onwards and is as follows:

	Number
January to December 1991	99,149
January to December 1992	115,678
January to December 1993	130,584
January to March 1994–95	143,002
April to March 1995–96	153,260
April to March 1996–97	161,397

Police (Wales)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers were employed by each of the four Welsh police forces in each year since 1979. [11199]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 29 July 1997]: The information is set out in the table:

Year	Police force
As at March	Dyfed-Powys	Gwent	North Wales	South Wales
1979	910	965	1,268	2,936

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Asian Initiative

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many and which countries are recipients of aid under the Asian initiative. [9952]

Clare Short: The initiative will work in high-priority countries in terms of reproductive health needs. The main recipients are expected to be Bangladesh, Cambodia, India, Laos, Nepal, Pakistan and Vietnam. Other countries may be included later.

Yemen

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on future levels of planned aid to Yemen. [11289]

Clare Short: The bulk of Britain's development assistance to Yemen is provided through contributions to the World bank and European Community. Our bilateral programme focuses on the Government of Yemen's priorities for economic recovery and includes support for the World bank's programme to regenerate Aden port. Projects funded under the British partnership scheme support local non-governmental organisations and small communities. We are currently reviewing our programme.

Sex Discrimination

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the countries which have not (a) signed and (b) ratified the convention on the elimination of all forms of discrimination against women; what steps her Department is taking to encourage them to do so; and if she will make a staement. [11490]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I have been asked to reply.

I shall write to my hon. Friend shortly.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Unemployed Graduates

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of students who graduated in June 1996 were unemployed in June 1997; and if he will make a statement. [10517]

Dr. Howells: The latest data available for unemployment rates of new full-time first degree graduates in the UK are for the academic year 1994–95 which show that 9 per cent. of graduates with known destination were unemployed six months after graduation. Data on the first destinations of graduates for the academic year 1995–96 will be published by the Higher Education Statistics Agency at the end of this month.

Unemployment among newly qualified graduates has declined annually since 1992 and this decline has occurred in spite of the increased output of graduates from universities and colleges of higher education. The unemployment rate for graduates in the economically active labour force is, however, much lower than this and stood at 4.1 per cent. in 1996. Those with degrees enjoy employment rates significantly higher than those without.

Higher Education

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of general national vocational qualification students will be attending higher education institutes from September 1997; and if he will make a statement. [10485]

Dr. Howells: Available information on applicants and acceptances to HE courses through the Universities and Colleges Admission Service scheme shows that in 1996 there were 21,308 applicants who had taken either units of the advanced GNVQ or the full award and were applying to higher education institutions HEIs. Of these, 13,090—61.4 per cent.—gained HE places. This compares favourably with 1995, when 5,942 UCAS applicants—58.5 per cent.—gained places at HEIs out of a total of 10.151. A total of 168 HEIs have accepted advanced GNVQ applicants on to their courses, with 50 accepting more than 100 such applicants, including 26 with more than 200 and eight with more than 300 GNVQ entrants.

Student Debt

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will conduct a national investigation into debts owed to universities and other higher educational institutes by graduating students; and if he will make a statement. [10519]

Dr. Howells: We have no plans to conduct such an investigation. Money owed to individual institutions is a matter between them and the students concerned.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate his Department has made of levels of average student debt for 2000; and if he will make a statement. [10524]

Dr. Howells: A typical higher education student graduating in the year 2,000 having attended a three-year course away from home and outside London would have a total debt of some £4,600 at 1997 prices if he or she took out the maximum available student loan each year. This figure excludes any commercial or family debts, information on which is not collected centrally.

Students Loans

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of student loans from each year since the scheme's inception remain in (a) arrears and (b) total default at the latest available date; and in what proportion of cases in each year recovery action is being taken. [11473]

Dr. Howells: This is a matter for the Student Loans Company. I have asked the chief executive to write to my hon. Friend with the information requested.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what arrangements he proposes to make in respect of expenditure related to the sale of student debt prior to Royal Assent being granted to the Education (Student Loans) Bill. [12219]

Dr. Howells: Parliamentary approval to this new service will be sought in a Supplementary Estimate for the Department of Education and Employment: Programmes and Central Services vote, class IX, vote 1. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure estimated at £1 million will be met by repayable advances from the contingencies fund.

Student Fees

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the cost of providing free tuition for all part-time undergraduates (a) in higher education and (b) on approved further education courses. [11182]

Dr. Howells: We estimate that the annual cost of meeting the fees currently paid in respect of (a) all part-time undergraduates in higher education and (b) all students, including full-time students, in further education who currently pay fees would be approaching £300 million and some £200 million respectively. It is not possible to estimate the fee income from all part-time students in further education separately, though it is known to be well in excess of £100 million.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if medical students following courses of between four and six years will be required to make a contribution to their tuition fees throughout their university and hospital training. [11036]

Dr. Howells: Under the plans announced by my right hon. Friend in the statement that he made in the House on 23 July, full-time students in higher education would pay up to £1,000 per year depending on parental income. But, as my right hon. Friend also made clear, we shall be considering the need for appropriate measures, such as bursaries for students entering some health and social care professional courses, as well as teacher training courses, given the state's particular interest in securing a continued supply of qualified professionals in these areas. We have invited the views of representative bodies by the end of September.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to make discretionary degree course fees subject to parental means-testing. [10769]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend announced on 23 July the Government's proposals to require full-time undergraduates to make a contribution to tuition fees of up to £1,000, dependent on parental income. The implications of these proposals for students who are not currently eligible for mandatory awards are being considered and will be dealt with in a more detailed policy statement in the autumn.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many and what percentage of employees, in each payband, in the quangos for which his Department is responsible, are of (a) Asian origin and (b) Afro-Caribbean origin. [8962]

Dr. Howells: The numbers employed are too small to make percentages by payband meaningful in those executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by this Department and using civil service grades[1]. Overall, staff of Asian origin represent 3.6 per cent., while those of Afro-Caribbean origin represent 2.9 per cent., of the 1,570 staff. These staff are found across the grades as follows:

Grade and equivalent	Number of staff of Asian origin	Number of Afro-Caribbean origin
Senior civil service grades	1	0
G6 and equivalent	3	0
G7	1	0
SEO	4	3
HEO	10	2

Grade and equivalent	Number of staff of Asian origin	Number of Afro-Caribbean origin
EO	19	14
AA	2	1

[1] Funding Agency for Schools, Education Assets Board, Higher Education Funding Council for England, Further Education Funding Council, Schools Curriculum and Assessment Authority, Equal Opportunities Commission, Teachers' Training Agency, National Council for Educational Technology, Investors in People UK Ltd.

Comparable data are not available from the other NDPBs. The latest figures for Remploy Ltd.—11,300 people—are:

Per cent.

Grade group	Afro-Caribbean black	Asian black
Shop floor grades	1	2
Staff grades	1	1
Management grades	0	0
Whole company	1	2

Recent available figures for the Construction Industry Training Board, with 900 staff, and the Engineering Construction Industry Training Board, with 40 staff, show that 0.4 per cent. of staff were Asian and 0.5 per cent. Afro-Caribbean; 1.35 per cent. of the Student Loans Company, with 295 staff in Glasgow are of ethnic minority origin and occupy supervisory and managerial grades. Statistics are not currently available for the National Council for Vocational Qualifications, with 282 staff and the Centre for Information and Language Teaching with 22 staff.

Dance and Drama Students

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make it his policy to bring forward proposals in his forthcoming White Paper on higher education to reform the system of finance for students of dance and drama; and if he will make a statement. [10815]

Dr. Howells: The Government are sympathetic to the position of certain students of dance and drama. They note the recommendations which the National Committee of Inquiry into Higher Education has made in this area—in particular the need to review the supply of dancers and actors—and in the light of these will consider with interested parties what new arrangements might be put in place once the current interim bursary scheme expires. The Government's response to the committee's report will be published in the autumn.

School Standards

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many special schools in England have been identified by Office for Standards in Education as falling or in need of special measures in each of the last three years (a) in total and (b) as a percentage of all special schools; [10352]

(2) what percentage of schools in England excluding special schools have been identified by Ofsted as falling or in need of special measures in each of the last three years. [10353]

Mr. Byers: The figures requested are set out in the table.

Schools identified by OFSTED as requiring special measures during the academic year beginning	Special schools				Other schools
	EBD	Other	Percentage	Total	Primary	Secondary	Percentage	Total
September 1994	2	3	0.4	5	32	20	0.24	52
September 1995	14	9	1.8	23	61	20	0.37	81
September 1996	12	16	2.3	28	117	26	0.65	143

Student Grants

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment by what means he will ensure that the removal of higher education maintenance grants will not restrict access for students from lower-income families. [11049]

Dr. Howells: The Government recognise that participation in higher education by students from poorer homes is closely related to educational achievement up to 18 years of age. The policies set out in our White Paper "Excellence in schools" should greatly improve educational opportunities for all children.

The current student support arrangements have not encouraged students from lower-income families to enter higher education. The Government are therefore proposing to replace the existing mixture of maintenance grants and student loans with new system of loans which will be repaid by graduates in work. The new system will be fair and progressive, as repayments will be related to graduates' incomes, which are on average significantly higher than those of non-graduates. Parents in lower income families will not be expected to contribute to the costs of their children's maintenance while they are studying.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of average earnings the standard student grant and loan currently represents; and if he will make it his policy that that proportion is maintained in future years. [11493]

Dr. Howells: The support available through maintenance grant and loan to full-time higher education students studying away from home and outside London in academic year 1996–97 represented 18 per cent. of the value of gross national average earnings as at April 1996.

Future levels of student support will be determined at the appropriate time, taking into account all relevant factors.

Employment Service

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what targets he has set the Employment Service for 1997–98; and what plans he has for reviewing these in the future. [12160]

Mr. Blunkett: I have today placed in the Library copies of the 1997–98 Employment Service annual performance agreement, which sets out the standards and targets I expect the Employment Service to achieve this year. The new agreement reflects our commitment to helping people, especially those who are at a disadvantage in the labour market, find employment, and stresses that the priority for Employment Service managers this year is to take the necessary steps to prepare for the introduction of the new deal in April next year.

The Employment Service will have a key role in implementing the new deal, and is at the heart of our efforts to help unemployed people, acting as a gateway to job vacancies and a wide range of initiatives tailored to address each individual's needs. The breadth of ES's current work is reflected in the targets I am announcing today—from placing 1.75 million unemployed people directly into jobs, to helping to ensure that JSA is paid quickly and accurately.

I am also announcing today a review of ES's targets, including a consultation exercise with those who work with the ES, to make sure that the targets fully reflect this government's commitment to creating a fair and efficient labour market, in which all have the chance to prosper.

Teachers' Pay

Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement about teachers' pay in 1997–98. [12158]

Mr. Byers: I am today laying before Parliament a second Pay and Conditions Order bringing the provisions of the school teachers's pay and conditions document into force from 1 September 1997. Copies of this order are being sent to local education authorities and the teachers' and employers' organisations.

The school teachers' pay and conditions document 1997 and the Department's accompanying circular of guidance, "School Teachers' Pay and Conditions of Employment 1997", circular No. 9/97, were published on 18 July following detailed consultation with the teachers' and employers' associations and representatives of governors of voluntary and grant-maintained schools. The document sets out the statutory pay and conditions of employment for teachers in maintained schools in England and Wales.

Class Sizes (Selby)

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what are the (a) average and (b) maximum numbers of children in primary school classes in the parliamentary constituency of Selby. [9974]

Mr. Byers: The available information is shown in the tables. The information in table 2 puts into context the information on maximum class sizes in table 1.

The information derives from classes as taught during a single selected period on the census date in January. This can include some unusually large classes. Classes can include nursery as well as infant classes, classes engaged in activities such as physical educations, games, drama, music, singing, watching television or listening to a radio programme, and classes supported by one or more members of the non-teaching staff of the school. Class sizes can be affected by one or more of these factors.

Airborne Stand-off Radar Programme

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Defence concerning the number of jobs which would be created within the United Kingdom through the Ministry of Defence ASTOR programme; and if he will make a statement; [10813]

(2) what is his estimate of the number of additional jobs which would be created through use of the bombardier global express platform in the ASTOR programme. [10814]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Ministry of Defence aims to place the contract for the ASTOR programme in the next year. Two contractors, Lockheed-Martin and Raytheon E-Systems, have completed the competitive project definition studies for the ASTOR programme and invitations. Final offers for the full development and production phase are currently being prepared, following which the companies' detailed industrial participation proposals will form part of the assessment in awarding the contract.

Therefore, at this stage of what is a sensitive competition, we cannot speculate about the number of jobs that may be created.

Bullying

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what plans he has to reduce the level of bullying in schools; and if he will make a statement; [11462]

(2) what plans he has to meet World Health Organisation representatives to discuss the (a) causes of, (b) effects of and (c) possible solutions to reduce the incidence of bullying in schools; and if he will make a statement. [11477]

Ms Estelle Morris: My right hon. Friend has no plans to meet World Health Organisation representatives to discuss bullying in schools. We are, however, concerned that all schools treat the issue of bullying seriously and take steps to combat it promptly and firmly whenever and wherever it occurs. To that end, our White Paper, "Excellence in Schools" has reminded schools that effective strategies to deal with bullying, developed and implemented by the whole school community including pupils, should form a central part of schools' behaviour policies.

We are currently looking at what further action we might take to help schools tackle bullying and reduce its incidence. This will include taking more active steps to spread information on good practice in combating the problem.

Encouragement of Enterprise

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to encourage enterprise among those who have been made redundant or taken early retirement. [9727]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I believe that it is important to ensure that people receive the help they need to become self-employed.

The Department's expenditure review will set our future priorities for employment and training initiatives to complement the new deal, including the encouragement of enterprise.

Currently training for work provides support for self-employment. This is part of a wide range of provision to help jobseekers return to work, including those made redundant or who have taken early retirement.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 24 June, Official Report, column 443, if he will list the elected members of local authorities who have places on the boards of TECs. [6301]

Dr. Howells [pursuant to his reply, 7 July 1997, c. 342]: In the list of elected members of local authorities, Mr. Alan Parker's name was included by error as an elected member of the board of West London TEC.

As director of education, Mr. Parker is an official of the London borough of Ealing.

Office for Standards in Education

Caroline Flint: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what changes he has agreed with the Office for Standards in Education to its inspection procedures. [12163]

Mr. Blunkett: As foreshadowed in the White Paper "Excellence in Schools", the chief inspector has agreed to implement a programme of changes arising out of Ofsted's analysis of information collected about contracting, the process of inspection and reports, with a view to securing possible further improvements in consistency, quality and value for money. Ofsted plans to introduce in the year beginning September 1997:

a quality standard for contractors which each will have to satisfy in order to gain inspection contracts. This will place considerable requirements on contractors and, where these are not met, Ofsted may cease business with them or reduce their level of activity until satisfied that they have improved. This action will be central to Ofsted's drive to improve the overall quality of inspections; contracting arrangements which further reduce bureaucratic procedures and paperwork. These arrangements will also reduce the period of notice to schools of inspection and mean that all schools know the exact date between one and one-and-a-half terms in advance;

a requirement that team inspectors may inspect subjects or aspects only where they have the relevant expertise and training. Ofsted will organise approved training and accredit inspectors. They will have a register of team members and, with new legislation, the power to remove them from this register if they prove to be incompetent;

a requirement that the names of team members and the subjects and aspects inspected in a school are included in the published reports. This will increase their accountability and enable Ofsted to identify weak ones;

a requirement that inspectors should give oral feed-back to all teachers;

a limit on the proportion of any one day that a teacher can be observed by an inspector. The upper limit will be 75 per cent. of the day with 50 per cent. as the norm. This should reduce the pressure on teachers in small primary schools particularly;

a requirement that head teachers receive a profile for each teacher of the quality of teaching observed by inspectors. Each teacher will receive the data on their own teaching. This essential management of information should aid schools in identifying very good teachers, those needing further support and those whose competence is seriously in doubt;

a requirement that the second inspection comments on progress made by the school since the previous inspection. Much of the information will come from the school and its own review systems; further guidance on judging standards by providing benchmark descriptors of what is expected of work judged "excellent" through to "very poor", for all subjects;

annual data summaries for each school, including aggregate inspection data from the previous inspection. Copies of all the summaries will be sent to LEAs along with a summary of data for all the LEA's schools; an external person to review handling of complaints about inspection where the complainant remains unhappy with the outcome of the complaint.

In addition, the chief inspector has agreed to review Ofsted's contracting procedures with the involvement of an external party.

I believe that this substantive set of actions will further improve inspection. The chief inspector has assured me that he will continue to review the evidence and make further improvements where these are called for.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Drug Abuse

Ms Southworth: To ask the President of the Council what progress the Government have made since 2 May in combating drug abuse and related problems. [11835]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: I have been working with a wide range of ministerial colleagues to ensure a collective and effective response to a major social problem. Specific initiatives under way across Government include funding 79 local anti-drugs projects under the £2 million drugs challenge fund in England, and related developments in Scotland and Wales; publication of an independent evaluation of drug action teams, which points the way forward for local action against drugs; reversing potential plans for reductions in frontline Customs staff; reinforcing, in the context of the single regeneration budget and elsewhere, the links between tackling drugs and regeneration; planning for the Government's legislative commitment to a drug testing and treatment order; and a cross-departmental review to assess the resources available for action against drugs.

In addition, the Government are honouring their manifesto commitment to appoint an anti-drugs supremo to co-ordinate our battle against drugs. The special expert adviser post of UK anti-drugs co-ordinator, also known as the "Drug Czar", is being advertised tomorrow on a three year full-time fixed-term contract. We are looking for someone who can bring visible leadership and drive to the fight against drugs, working in partnership with all relevant agencies, communities and individuals. The post-holder will urgently review the overall direction of Government action, and submit proposals for a new strategy for England, while ensuring strategic coherence to the work in the rest of the UK and internationally. She or he will work directly to me as chair of the Cabinet sub-Committee on drugs misuse, and have access to the Prime Minister. We plan to make an appointment in the autumn, following an open selection process which ensures that the best possible candidates make themselves available for a vitally important job.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Wednesday 30 July. [10316]

The Prime Minister: This morning, I had meetings with colleagues and others and later today I shall host a reception at No.10 Downing street.

Intelligence and Security Committee

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Prime Minister if a decision has been made on the composition of the Intelligence and Security Committee. [12093]

The Prime Minister: Following consultation with the Leader of the Opposition and in accordance with section 10 of the Intelligence Services Act (1994) I have appointed the Intelligence and Security Committee as follows:

The Right Hon. Tom King CH, MP (Chairman)

Lady Ramsay of Cartvale

The Right Hon. Alan Beith, MP

Mr. Kevin Barron, MP

Ms Yvette cooper, MP

Mr. Barry Jones, MP

Mr. Michael Mates, MP

Mr. Allan Rogers, MP

Mr. Dale Campbell-Savours MP

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parliamentary Groups and Committees

Mr. Forth: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if a list of the parliamentary groups and committees established in compliance with the relevant rules of the House will be placed in the Library. [11415]

Mrs. Roe: A new register of all-party and parliamentary groups is currently being compiled; it will be available shortly in the Library for inspection by hon. Members.

Mr. Forth: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what measures are being implemented to ensure compliance with the rules for the establishment, designation and operation of parliamentary groups and committees. [11414]

Mrs. Roe: The Administration Committee takes the view that the internal arrangements of all-party and parliamentary groups are matters for the groups themselves, provided they are not contrary to the regulations approved by the House on 20 March 1997.

In order to be formally registered, an all-party or parliamentary group has to give a written understanding that the group will abide by the regulations approved by the House. If any hon. Member believes that a group is in breach of these regulations, I would expect him or her to draw the matter to my attention.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Nolan Committee Records

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department for what reason files relating to the work of the Nolan committee at the Public Record Office are currently closed; and if he will release these files into the public domain. [10407]

Mr. Hoon: Two classes of records of the Committee on Standards in Public Life have been transferred to the Public Record Office.

The first class—Public Record Office reference JN 2—consists of copies of written evidence submitted to the Committee, and is open to inspection, although evidence which concerned individual cases, or which has been found to be potentially defamatory, has been excluded.

As part of a pilot project to test the feasibility of archiving and making publicly available electronic records, a second class—JN 3—has been transferred to the Public Record Office in electronic form. Those of the records already in the public domain, in particular transcripts of public hearings, have been available in the Public Record Office since 9 May 1997. The other records transferred, including the minutes and papers of the committee, are currently subject to the 30-year rule under the normal provisions of the Public Records Acts. Access to closed records is in the first instance a matter for the Department concerned, in this case the committee.

CABINET OFFICE

Millennium Experience

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what is the budget for the millennium dome project, broken down by (a) category of expenditure and (b) source of revenue. [6129]

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what sums he estimates will be required from business for the millennium experience exhibition; and what assessment he has made of the effects on other millennium exhibition activities of businesses supporting the millennium experience. [6478]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 3 July 1997]: Allowing for inflation and contingencies, the overall cash budget of the new millennium experience at Greenwich and associated national programme will be £758 million. Detailed breakdown of expenditure is subject to contractual negotiation and will be published in the accounts of the New Millennium Experience Co. Ltd. at the appropriate time. Budgeted revenue for the millennium experience will come from £175 million private sector sponsorship and commercial revenue—International Management Group's contract sets a target for sponsorship of £150 million—£168 million is expected from visitor revenue including ticketing and merchandising, and £15 million from the disposal of assets. The original grant of £200 million lottery money from the Millennium Commission will be supplemented as necessary by a further grant from the commission of up to £250 million (gross); £200 million (net).

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Identity Card

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs from what budget the funds for the development of a European citizen's identity card for public distribution at the European Parliament were allocated. [9643]

Mr. Doug Henderson: This information is not readily available. I shall write to the hon. Member once further inquiries have been made.

UK-US Space Project

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations between the United Kingdom and the United States preceded the launch by NASA of Cassini. [11050]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Cassini is a joint NASA–European Space Agency project due for launch in October 1997. Most discussion takes place between these agencies. The UK, within ESA, has been fully involved in preparations for these discussions.

Gibraltar

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to visit Gibraltar. [10810]

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he plans to visit Gibraltar. [11478]

Mr. Doug Henderson: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has no plans at present to visit Gibraltar. I am looking forward to my visit in September.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Spanish Government seeking the removal of the restrictions on military and civilian aircraft flying into Gibraltar. [10811]

Mr. Henderson: We have already made representations to the Spanish Government about the removal of restrictions on military and civil aircraft and we will continue to do so.

British Citizens Working Overseas

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the responsibilities of the British embassy and consulate towards British citizens and their families working abroad on permanent or semi-permanent assignments; what priority (a) these individuals and (b) British tourists travelling abroad receive; and if he will make a statement. [11096]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: This Department's consular services offer world-wide protection 24 hours a day seven days a week to all British nationals abroad. The level of help provided and the priority attached to it is judged on a case by case basis depending on the needs of the individual.

Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's policy on the protection and support of British citizens working overseas for foreign-based companies. [11207]

Mr. Lloyd: The protection of British nationals abroad is a front-line responsibility for this Department. Consular staff provide protection 24 hours a day, seven days a week worldwide to all British nationals who need it, irrespective of whether they are working overseas or travelling as tourists.

Korean Peninsula

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement regarding the four-party talks on peace in the Korean peninsula scheduled to begin in Geneva on 5 August. [11296]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We welcome the plans for a preparatory four-party meeting in Geneva and hope it will quickly lead to full four-party talks about peace in the peninsula.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list for the latest year for which the information is available the individuals from the Republic of Korea who have had visits to the United Kingdom sponsored by his Department stating in each case whether the airfare or costs in the United Kingdom were met from public funds. Bosnia

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 23 July, Official Report, column 604, on what day he wrote to the Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe; and what response he has received. [11146]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We wrote on 18 July. The OSCE replied on 28 July that registration applications could not be lodged during the appeals period. Polling day arrangements for the housebound remained under consideration. But the OSCE lacked the resources required to enable the housebound to vote at home under international supervision.

Regional or Minority Languages Charter

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Government plan to sign the EU charter for regional or minority languages. [11294]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Moray (Mrs. Ewing) on 28 July, Official Report, columns 30–31.

BBC World Service

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment his Department has made of the effect on services of the 1996 review of the BBC World Service. [11104]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The joint FCO-BBC World Service working group will reconvene in the autumn to determine whether the measures it agreed last year to ensure that the continued protection of World Service interests and the maintenance of its special character, style and ethos are functioning satisfactorily. Meanwhile we are monitoring the situation closely.

Indonesia

Mr. Vaz: To ask the secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations with Indonesia. [11293]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We look forward to pursuing a substantive and broad-based relationship with Indonesia, which reflects the breadth of our bilateral, regional and global interests, and addresses issues of mutual concern, including human rights.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to refuse all export licences for arms sales to Indonesia. [11312]

Mr. Lloyd: We have no plans to introduce a general arms embargo on Indonesia.

China

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to visit the People's Republic of China. [11295]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: When they met in Hong Kong, the Chinese Foreign Minister, Qian Qichen, invited my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary to visit China. My right hon. Friend accepted the invitation and hopes to visit soon.

Hong Kong

Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he plans to publish the first of the reports to Parliament on Hong Kong and the implementation of the Joint Declaration. [11979]

Mr. Fatchett: The first such report, covering the period January to June 1997, was published today and a copy has been placed in the Libraries of the House. The report includes a foreword written by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary.

I commend the report to the House.

Overseas Posts (Business Men)

Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about increasing the number of business men on short-term attachments at posts overseas. [11980]

Mr. Robin Cook: We made a commitment in our business manifesto to improve the focus of our efforts to back British business selling abroad, to enhance the co-ordination of government trade and investment promotion, and to promote business secondments with this Department.

I am pleased to announce that we have secured a commitment from a number of leading companies to loan members of their staff to this Department to work on specific promotions or projects overseas for periods of a few months. These people will provide valuable expertise to support and promote the activities of the commercial sections of our overseas posts. Each attachment will have a specific focus, such as privatisation projects, inward investment promotion, management of commercial promotions, marketing of UK financial services, or identifying market opportunities in specific sectors.

I welcome the whole-hearted support for this initiative of the Confederation of British Industry. It has encouraged a number of members to participate from the outset, including British Airways, BOC, ICL, Wimpey, British Aerospace, BT, British Steel, British Nuclear Fuels Ltd., BUPA, Hong Kong and Shanghai Banking Corporation and Glaxo Wellcome. Other companies have expressed a strong interest and I am confident that more attachments will be arranged in the coming months.

This is a commitment to a rolling programme of attachments to strengthen our partnership with business. In the longer term, we hope that companies will be able to second suitable staff to serve as part of the established commercial teams in overseas posts, and in return provide opportunities for this Department's staff to hone their business skills by hosting secondments.

Mr. Doug Henderson: I shall write to the hon. Member shortly.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Departmental Payroll

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list each of the functions relating to the payroll for which his Department is responsible, indicating the management systems purchased, all subcontractors involved in the work, co-operative arrangements with other Departments and the costs of the systems and processes in the last year for which figures are available. [10740]

Mr. Tom Clarke: The Department for Culture, Media and Sport is responsible for the following functions relating to payroll:

collating and processing payments including basic pay, overtime, National Insurance contributions, tax and other deductions; arrangements for making payments.

Chessington Computer Centre is contracted to carry out these functions on our behalf and marks all payments and deductions through the SPIRE—standard payroll input and retrieval—payroll management system. The combined costs of the pay and pay assessment contract at present is £67.96 per payee per annum.

Sport (Redbridge)

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport which elements of the national strategy for sport will be implemented in the London borough of Redbridge; and what plans he has to visit the area. [9514]

Mr. Banks: The strategy will be implemented throughout the country, including the London borough of Redbridge, and I hope to have an early opportunity to visit the area to see what is already going on and what opportunities there are for implementing the strategy.

Computer-related Expenditure

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is his estimate of total departmental expenditure on computer-related current and capital work for (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98, (d) 1998–99 and (e) 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [11388]

Mr. Tom Clarke [holding answer 29 July 1997]: The Department for Culture, Media and Sport's expenditure on computer-related work in 1995–96 was £1,126,000 current and £602,000 capital. In 1996–97, current expenditure was £1,138,000 and capital was £837,000. The budget for 1997–98 is for current expenditure of £1,261,000 and capital expenditure of £549,000. The information systems budget for future years is under review as part of the Department's current spending review process.

Sport

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much the Government spent on sport in (a) 1978–79 and (b) 1996–97 in current prices. [10824]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 28 July 1997]: In 1978–79, central Government expenditure on sport to the Great Britain Sports Council was £15.2 million. In 1996–97, total central Government expenditure on sport was £51.61 million. Of this, £46.55 million was allocated to the Great Britain Sports Council and its successors from 1 January 1997, the UK and English Sports Councils.

Also in 1996–97, £264.78 million was awarded by the English Sports Council to 1,005 sports-related projects from the lottery sports fund.

Film Industry

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) how much financial support (a) in grants, (b) as tax allowances and (c) as other benefits, at current prices, the Government gave to the United Kingdom film industry in each year since 1979; [10827]

(2) what was the level of Government-supported investment, at current prices, in the United Kingdom film industry in each year since 1979. [10828]

Mr. Tom Clarke [holding answer 28 July 1997]: The level of Government support for film in the UK for the years 1979–86 is not available except at disproportionate cost. For the years 1987 onwards, the support was as follows:

£ million

Year	Amount	National Lottery
1987–88	19.9	—
1988–89	21.1	—
1989–90	20.6	—

Arts Expenditure

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much, in current prices, the Government spent on the arts in (a) 1978–79 and (b) 1996–97. [10826]

Mr. Fisher [holding answer 28 July 1997]: Central Government funding of the arts in Great Britain in 1978–79, provided through the Arts Council of Great Britain, the Crafts Council and the British Film Institute, amounted to £55.1 million. This is equivalent to £172.6 million in current prices, based on the latest assumptions of the gross domestic product deflators.

In 1996–97, central Government funding of the arts in Great Britain, provided through the Arts Council of England, of Scotland and of Wales; the Crafts Council; the British Film Institute and the national heritage arts sponsorship scheme, amounted to £252.3 million. Full details are given in the following table.

There are also other sources of arts funding generated through Government expenditure: either directly, such as through local authorities and the BBC or indirectly, such as through European spending programmes. However, complexities of definition and insufficient data make it difficult to provide reliable funding figures.

[1] The increase in 1986–87 was mainly an injection of funding in compensation for the loss of GLC and metropolitan authority spending.

[2] The Arts Council of Great Britain (ACGB) ceased to exist on 31 March 1994. In order to give equivalent figures for 1994–95 and after, the table includes DCMS grant in aid to the Arts Council of England and the grant in aid to the Scottish and Welsh Arts Councils from their sponsoring departments.

SCOTLAND

Welfare to Work

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many young people to be covered by the welfare-to-work programme are estimated to require remedial literacy and numeracy assistance. [7929]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 21 July 1997]: This information is not available. Under the new deal initiative, all young people aged between 18 and 24 and unemployed for six months or more will be given guidance interviews and sufficient provision of remedial assistance will be made available to those identified as having literacy and numeracy needs.

Holyroodhouse Palace

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons are (a) permanently employed and (b) employed on a seasonal and a temporary basis at Holyroodhouse palace; what is (i) the annual wages bill, (ii) the range of salaries and (iii) the average salary; and if he will make a statement. [9148]

Mr. Chisholm [holding answer 23 July 1997]: There are 22 permanent staff employed by the royal household and funded by Historic Scotland at the palace of Holyroodhouse and six paid for out of the Queen's Civil List.

For these staff:

(i) the total wages bill (including national insurance and pension costs) for the year 1996–97 was £513,130;

(ii) the current range of full-time salaries—excluding national insurance and pension costs—is £8,624 to £33,686;

(iii) the current average full-time salary—excluding national insurance and pension costs—is £13,009.

In addition, Royal Collection Enterprises Ltd.—a trading subsidiary of the Royal Collection Trust—employs 13 permanent staff in connection with the opening of the palace to the public and up to 13 temporary posts are created during the busy summer months.

Historic Scotland employ a number of industrial staff who work on various properties in the Edinburgh area, including the palace of Holyroodhouse. Approximate assessments of the costs associated with their palace duties show that:

(i) the relevant proportion of the total wages bill—including national insurance and pension costs—for the year 1996–97 was £333,643;

(ii) the current range of full-time salaries—excluding national insurance and pension costs—is: £8,500 to £16,182;

(iii) the current average full-time salary—excluding national insurance and pension costs—is £11,075.

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many days in each of the past 10 years there have been persons in residence in Holyroodhouse palace; if he will say who was resident; and if he will make a statement. [9150]

Mr. Chisholm [holding answer 23 July 1997]: The palace of Holyroodhouse has been occupied by members of the royal family and by the Lord High Commissioner to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland for the following number of days in each year since 1988:

Year	Number of days occupied
1988	38
1989	28
1990	28
1991	28
1992	23
1993	32
1994	28
1995	29
1997	[1]34

[1] Includes visits by members of the royal family planned for the remainder of 1997. In addition, staff of the royal household have been in residence from time to time in connection with their duties.

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the annual cost of the maintenance at Holyroodhouse palace in each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [9149]

Mr. Chisholm [holding answer 23 July 1997]: The subject of the question relates to operational matters undertaken by Historic Scotland. I have asked the chief executive, Mr. Graeme Munro, to arrange for a reply to be sent.

Letter from Graeme Munro to Mr. Norman Godman, dated 30 July 1997:

In the absence of Graeme Munro, Historic Scotland's Chief Executive, on annual leave I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question about the maintenance costs of the Palace of Holyroodhouse.

The Secretary of State funds the cost of maintaining the fixed fabric of Holyroodhouse (as distinct from furniture, tapestries, paintings, etc.), together with security costs, the costs of utilities such as electricity, gas and telephones, and limited capital purchases such as equipment and office furniture. The Royal Household funds the costs of administering the Palace for Royal use, and the Royal Collection Trust undertakes the arrangements for public visiting.

The annual costs falling to the Secretary of State under these headings since 1990–91 are as follows:

	Programme expenditure	Historic Scotland employee costs	Total £
1990–91	860,833	288,636	1,149,469
1991–92	723,000	334,346	1,057,346
1992–93	696,600	338,530	1,035,130
1993–94	693,215	337,852	1,031,067
1994–95	897,700	345,124	1,242,824
1995–96	805,400	273,909	1,079,309
1996–97	743,700	288,126	1,031,826
1997–98 (estimate)	734,700	275,673	1,010,373

These figures include all Historic Scotland's expenditure directly related to the Palace apart from central professional and administration costs.

The provision of figures for the years preceding 1990–91 (prior to the formation of the Agency), or the separation of maintenance from other costs such as security and utility charges, could not be undertaken without disproportionate effort and cost.

I hope that this information is helpful.

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions Holyroodhouse palace has been the setting for public events in each of the past 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [9151]

Mr. Chisholm [holding answer 23 July 1997]: Each year, approximately 14,000 people are invited to some 20 functions given at the palace by the Queen and by the Lord High Commissioner to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland on Her Majesty's behalf, including garden parties, dinners, receptions and investitures. The place is also used on occasions by other members of the royal family. In addition, the palace was used in December 1992 for the meeting of the European Council under the UK's presidency; in 1994 for a sate visit by the King of Norway; and during the Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting in Edinburgh during October 1997, the Queen will receive Heads of State and other representatives of Commonwealth countries at the palace and will give a dinner and reception for those attending the conference.

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many tourists have visited Hollyroodhouse palace in each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [9164]

Mr. Chisholm [holding answer 23 July 1997]: The numbr of visitors to the palace of Holyroodhouse in each of the last 10 years was as follows:

1989	321,629
1990	297,730
1991	314,694
1992	278,346
1993	276,866
1994	299,722
1995	253,714
1996	260,294
1997	283,877

The palace was open on most days of each year, apart from during the visits of HM the Queen and the Lord High Commissioner and a few days of preparation before and after their visits.

Learning Support Teachers

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many learning support teachers expressed as a full-time equivalent have been provided by each education authority in the current year; and how many were provided over the previous four years by them or their predecessor authority. [9613]

Mr. Wilson: The information requested is not held centrally on a comparable basis for each education authority in Scotland at the present time. Information is collected annually as part of the school census about the provision of learning support. An analysis of this data shows that there has been a substantial variation recently from year to year and among education authorities. We strongly suspect that some of this variation is due to differences in the patterns of provision and interpretation of definitions of learning support, rather than differences in the total amount of learning support being provided in each authority. The methods used to collect this information are currently being improved. My Department will be considering with colleagues in education authorities, schools and HM inspectorate how to resolve this issue and collect and publish the information on a more comparable basis.

Pharmacists (Drug Offences)

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will bring forward proposals to change the law to prevent a pharmacist, who has been disbarred following a professional hearing for offences involving drugs, from continuing his business. [9620]

Mr. Galbraith: I do not propose to change the existing legislation controlling the business of a registered retail pharmacy.

Persons who have been removed from the register of pharmaceutical chemists are not entitled to use the restricted title of "pharmacist" and cannot legally own a pharmacy business in their own name. They may retain an interest in the business by transferring ownership to a partnership or body corporate, but in either case the pharmacy must operate under the personal control of a registered pharmacist.

Departmental Payroll

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list each of the functions relating to the payroll for which his Department is responsible, indicating the management systems purchased, all sub-contractors involved in the work, co-operative arrangements with other Departments and the costs of the systems and processes in the last year for which figures are available. [10735]

Mr. Dewar: My Department retains control of the majority of the functions relating to payroll for staff in the Scottish Office and related agencies. The departmental pay section is responsible for arrangements for collating and inputting of all data for staff salaries by means of the SPIRE—standard payroll input and retrieval—management system. The departmental pay section also directly manages the distribution of payslips and control prints, payover of moneys to third parties in respect of tax, national insurance and voluntary deductions and all accounting and reconciliation work. Processing, calculation and payment of salaries via the banks automatic clearing system is undertaken for the Department by Chessington Computer Services Ltd.

In 1996–97 the costs for these arrangements were £553,473 in respect of services provided by Chessington Computer Services Ltd. and £583,206 in respect of costs for staff employed in the departmental pay section.

Internet

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will ensure the Scottish Office's web site on the Internet has adequate links to and from the web site of the Central Office of Information; and if he will make a statement. [11004]

Mr. Dewar: My Department's web site on the Internet and that of the Central Office of Information are available on the CCTA Government information service site, which gives access to all Government Departments' web sites. My Department's site will remain accessible through this service. It is planned to update the web site shortly, and links will be set up to the web sites of all other Government Departments, including the Central Office of Information. Other Departments will be invited to create reciprocal links.

EU Languages Charter

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what representations he has made to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office concerning the ratification by the United Kingdom of the Council of Europe's charter for regional and minority languages; [10376]

(2) what assessment he has made of the impact of the ratification by the United Kingdom of the Council of Europe's charter for regional and minority languages on the (a) Gaelic and (b) Scots languages in Scotland. [10377]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 28 July 1997]: The Government are examining what the implications of signing and ratifying the charter would be.

Civil Servants

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) full-time and (b) part-time civil servants, on each payband, his Department currently employs. [11068]

Mr. Dewar: Pay and grading reviews are currently under way in the Scottish Office and its executive agencies other than the Scottish Prison Service, but have not been completed. Staffing figures, expressed as headcounts, are therefore shown on the basis of standard civil service grades in the table.

The Scottish Office and its Executive Agencies (excluding SPS) at 1 April 1997

Grade equivalent	Full-time	Part-time
Senior Civil Service	145	10
Grade 6	150	2
Grade 7	383	21
Senior Executive Officer	342	13
Higher Executive Officer	707	42
Executive Officer	852	42
Administrative Officer	924	124
Administrative Assistant	938	108
Industrial	305	—
Total	4,746	362

As a pay and grading review has taken place in the Scottish Prison Service, it is possible to provide a breakdown by pay band. The headcount information is set out in the table.

The Scottish Prison Service at 1 April 1997

Forestry

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many forest shops and catering outlets there were, and what their net income was, in 1996–97 in each of the current Forest Enterprise regions; [10722]

(2) what targets have been set for the number of plans for the management of scheduled ancient monuments agreed with heritage agencies in each of the current Forest Enterprise regions in relation to the objective of conserving the cultural heritage in Forestry Commission forests specified in paragraph 11.9 of the Forest Enterprise corporate plan 1997 to 2000; [10724]

(3) how many countryside agencies and user groups will be consulted in each current Forest Enterprise region in connection with the review of recreation strategies and resource allocation mentioned in paragraph 9.24 of the Forest Enterprise corporate plan 1997 to 2000; and what is the current resource allocation in each of those regions; [10721]

(4) how many plans for sites of special scientific interest will have to be (a) prepared, (b) maintained and (c) monitored for compliance in each of the current Forest Enterprise regions in order to achieve comprehensive implementation of the management plans referred to in paragraph 10.8 of the Forest Enterprise corporate plan 1997 to 2000; [10723]

(5) how many visits to Forestry Commission forests and woods were made during 1996–97 by educational institutions in each of the current Forest Enterprise regions; [10711]

(6) how many "What's On" events, as described in paragraph 12.20 of the Forest Enterprise corporate plan 1997 to 2000, were staged in 1996–97; and how many people attended those events, in each of the current Forest Enterprise regions; [10712]

(7) with which (a) local authorities, (b) statutory bodies and (c) non-governmental organisations is contact maintained for the purpose of liaison over forest design plans and other management plans, as described in chapter 12 of the Forest Enterprise corporate plan 1997 to 2000, in each of the current Forest Enterprise regions; [10713]

(8) what is the total combined mileage by the shortest practical road route from each Forest Enterprise forest district to that district's Forest Enterprise regional office under (a) the current five-region structure and (b) the proposed four-region structure; [10714]

(9) how many full-time equivalent jobs will be lost in Forest Enterprise regional offices in (a) Scotland, (b) Wales and (c) England under the Forest Enterprise proposal for reducing the number of regional offices; [10715]

(10) what assessment he has made of the effect on the Forest Enterprise standards of service of its proposal to reduce the number of its regional offices; how compliance to these standards has been measured in the past; and how it is planned to be measured in future; [10716]

(11) how many timber customers, as defined in paragraph 7.9 of the Forest Enterprise corporate plan 1997 to 2000, there were during 1996–97 in each of the current Forest Enterprise regions; [10717]

(12) in each of the current Forest Enterprise regions, how many (a) woods are leased to the Forestry Commission, (b) landlords own land leased to the commission and (c) landlords reserve powers over sporting rights on land leased to the commission. [10718]

(13) with how many sports representative bodies of the kinds referred to in paragraph 9.15 of the Forest Enterprise corporate plan 1997 to 2000 contacts are maintained; and how many permits or licences were issued for specialist sports and activities during 1996–97, in each of the current Forest Enterprise regions; [10719]

(14) how Forest Enterprise estimates the number of visits made by members of the public to Forestry Commission woods and forests for the purpose of measuring its performance in the terms described in paragraph 9.23 of the Forest Enterprise corporate plan 1997 to 2000; and how many such visits were made to Forestry Commission woods and forests in 1996–97 in each current Forest Enterprise region. [10720]

Mr. Chisholm [holding answer 29 July 1997]: The subjects of the questions relate to matters undertaken by Forest Enterprise. I have asked its chief executive, Dr. Bob McIntosh, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Bob McIntosh to Mr. Hugh Bayley, dated 30 July 1997:

The Secretary of State for Scotland has asked me to reply to the various Questions you raised about the Forestry Commission.

I will answer each one by referring to the 5 digit reference which appears against each Question on the Order paper.

PQ No. 10711

Data on visits by educational institutions for 1996/97 is not held centrally or regionally. In accordance with the 1997–2000 Corporate Plan, para 12.20, educational visits will be a measure of Forest Enterprise performance in Promoting Public Understanding and Participation. The data will therefore be collated during 1997/98.

PQ No. 10712

Data on What's On Events for 1996/97 is not held centrally or regionally. In accordance with the 1997–2000 Corporate Plan, para 12.20, attendance at What's On Forest Events will be a measure of Forest Enterprise performance in Promoting Public Understanding and Participation. Data will therefore be collected during 1997/98.

PQ No. 10713

Forest Enterprise produces a wide variety of plans covering a range of topics at forest, regional and national levels. It would not be practicable to assemble a comprehensive list of all the organisations and individuals with whom we liaise in planning the management of Forestry Commission forests.

However I can give you a list of key contacts as follows:-

Home Grown Timber Advisory Committee to the Forestry Commissioners including the sub-committees on timber supply and the environment;

Wildlife and Countryside Link forum of the national conservation and recreation NGOs;

Biodiversity Challenge Groups of NGOs (RSPB, WWF, Friends of the Earth, Butterfly Conservation and Plant Life);

Representative groups of the home grown timber processing industry;

All local planning authorities;

Countryside Agencies—SNH, EN, CCW, CC;

Heritage Agencies—HS, EH, CADW;

Enterprise Companies;

Tourist Boards.

Local community groups are involved through local Forest District Environmental Panels. Ways of upgrading local community involvement are currently being developed in line with our Action Plan to improve performance in para 12.22 of the 1997–2000 Corporate Plan.

PQ No. 10714

I set out the combined mileage for Regional offices to Forest District offices on the basis of the 31 Forest Districts planned to be in operation after amalgamation from 1.4.98.

Current 5 Region Structure

	Combined mileage	Average mileage
North Scotland (Inverness)	652	72
South Scotland (Dumfries)	363	61
Wales (Aberystwyth)	242	48
North & East England (York)	641	107
South & West England (Bristol)	423	85

(b) 4 Region Structure with Bristol as the sole office for England No change in Scotland and Wales

	Combined mileage	Average mileage
England (Bristol)	1,762	160

PQ No. 10715

The number of full time equivalent jobs that will be lost in Forest Enterprise Regional offices as a result of the reduction in Regional offices, will be:

	Proposed reduction
Scotland (no reduction in offices)	Nil
Wales (no reduction in offices)	Nil
England	[1]40.0

[1] The reduction of 40 posts in England will be partly as a result of closure but mostly as a result of delegation of work to Forest Districts and centralisation of work to Head Office.

PQ No. 10716

The proposal to reduce the number of Regional offices from 5 to 4 will have no effect upon Forest Enterprise's ability to deliver the Standards of Service set out in the 1997–2000 Corporate Plan. Our services are delivered primarily through front-line staff in Forest Districts dealing directly with visitors, customers and suppliers.

Compliance with the Forest Enterprise standards of service is assessed through the Agency performance measure "Percentage Compliance with the Citizen's Charter Standards Statement". In 1996/97 systems were introduced and staff trained in order to operate this measure from 1997/98.

The measure comprises three parts:

> Percentage of day visitors using forest recreation facilities who consider the service to be good or very good.
> Percentage of customers using Forest Holidays cabins who consider the service to be good or very good.
> Percentage of payments to suppliers paid in accordance with the relevant terms of trading.

The 1997/98 Agency target is 90% comprising:

> 87.5% satisfaction for forest recreation day visitors
> 87.5% satisfaction for Forest Holiday users.
> 95% payments to suppliers on time in accordance with the relevant terms of trading

PQ No. 10717

The number of timber customers for each of our Regions, as defined in paragraph 7.9 of the Forest Enterprise Corporate Plan 1997–2000, during 1996/97 was as indicated below:

	1996/97
North Scotland	36
South Scotland	44
Wales	80
North & East England	75
South & West England	99
Total GB	275

1. The UK figure is 59 less than the total for the Regions. This reflects the fact that many merchants trade in more than one Region.

2. The figures do not include individuals who purchased small amounts of firewood.

PQ No. 10718

In answer to parts a. and b. of your question, I set out below the total area of land in each Forest Enterprise Region which is held on lease:

	Hectares
North Scotland	4,471.5
South Scotland	1,103.5
Wales	24,022.8
North & East England	40,770.0
Total Great Britain	101,540.6

We do not hold the information centrally by individual wood. In respect of part c. there are general sporting reservations in our titles over the following areas of Forestry Commission land, by Region, to a third party as follows:

	Hectares
North Scotland	nil
South Scotland	nil
Wales	48,100
North & East England	23,600
South & West England	22,100
Total GB	93,800

PQ No. 10719

We maintain links with a wide range of sports representative bodies at national, regional and forest district level. There are no unique contacts at regional level.

The main national fora and contacts are:

> Wildlife and Countryside Link forum of countryside and recreation NGOs
> Countryside Recreation Network of statutory agencies
> Outdoor Pursuits Committee of the CCPR (Countryside Council For Physical Recreation)
> Sports Council
> RAC on motor car rallying
> Auto-Cycle Union on motorcycle enduro races
> British Orienteering Federation
> British Horse Society
> Ramblers Association
> Mountaineering Council for Scotland
> British Cycle Federation
> British Cyclecross Federation
> Scottish Cyclists Union
> Welsh Cyclists Union

There are also many contacts with local sports clubs at the Forest District level.

I regret we do not hold central records of permits issued for specialised sports.

PQ No. 10720

The performance measure referred to in para 9.23 of the 1997–2000 Corporate Plan is one of our Agency performance measures set out on Page 52. This records annual changes to the number of visitors to sample Forestry Commission forests.

For this measure, counters have been installed at visitor centres, car parks and forest drives in 86 forest locations covering a statistically representative sample of the most heavily visited areas across all Forest Districts. The objective is to measure trends in visitor numbers. 1997–98 will be the first year for measuring these trends.

In view of the size of the Forestry Commission estate, the number of accessible woods and public access points it is not practicable to physically count all visitors. No definitive records are therefore available for each Forest Enterprise region.

The Forestry Commission does however participate in the biennial household day visits survey carried out by Social and Planning Research (S & PR) for a consortium of Departments and Agencies. The most recent survey was conducted in 1996. As part of the survey several thousand adults were interviewed at home and asked about the destinations of leisure day trips. They were also asked if a wood or forest formed part of a trip and if so who was the perceived forest owner or manager. The responses were weighted to provide estimates of visits to Forestry Commission forests and woods. On this basis the 1996 S & PR survey estimated that 42 million day visits were made to Forestry Commission forests made up as follows:

England: 33 million

Scotland: 6 million

Wales: 3 million.

There is no S & PR data for individual Forest Enterprise Regions.

The 42 million figure is lower than the 50 million visits quoted for the whole Forestry Commission estate in para 9.4 of the 1997–2000 Corporate Plan since the latter also includes holiday visits not undertaken from the family home.

PQ No. 10721

Forest Enterprise has no specific list of stakeholders to be consulted on any review we may undertake over the next 3 years. The Corporate Plan sets out current policies, strategies and resouce allocations. This is circulated to over 1,000 people amongst public agencies, local authorities, NGOs, local communities and user groups. We are actively seeking comment from recipients on the broad thrust of strategies in the Corporate Plan. Focus groups will also be contacted to look at particular topics.

The planned net expenditure on Forest Recreation in 1997–98, by Region, is as follows:

	£ million
North Scotland	0.8
South Scotland	0.8
Wales	0.6
North & East England	1.0
South & West England	1.8

Actual net expenditure will depend upon visitor usage, trading conditions in income generating activities and the settling down of the new register of accounts in its first year of operation.

PQ No. 10722

Forest shops and catering facilities are provided at most Forest Enterprise Visitor Centres. These are operated in two ways; either by direct district management or by concessions. The 1996–97 data and results relate solely to FE managed forest shops and catering facilities which are usually run on an integrated set of accounts for each centre with shared buildings, services and management costs. The diversity in unit net income reflects the variety of visitor numbers to different forests and the range of facilities provided by Forest Enterprise

Region	Number of forest shops/catering Complexes	Net income (£000)
North Scotland	2	22
South Scotland	5	25
Wales	1	3
North & East England	6	64

PQ No.10723

The percentage of SSSIs managed in accordance with plans endorsed by statutory conservation agencies is a Forest Enterprise Agency performance measure. A target of 100 per cent. has been set by the Forestry Commissioners as the proportion of SSSIs with endorsed plans by 31.3.98. This includes preparation, maintenance and monitoring.

The 1997–98 Agency target allocated by Region is as follows:

	Numbers
North Scotland	80
South Scotland	54
Wales	61
North & East England	90
South & West England	90

PQ No. 10724

The percentage of Scheduled Ancient Monuments managed in accordance with plans endorsed by statutory heritage agencies is a Forest Enterprise Agency Performance measure.

A target of 40 per cent., of 400 has been set by Forestry Commissioners as the number of Scheduled Ancient Monuments to have endorsed plans by 31.3.98. The aim is to ensure that all Scheduled Ancient Monuments on Forestry Commission land have endorsed plans by 31.3.2000. This 1997–98 Agency target has been allocated to Regions as follows:

	Percentage	Number
North Scotland	40	70
South Scotland	43	52
Wales	90	122
North & East England	30	58
South & West England	30	104

The varying rates in planned progress between Regions reflects the range of monuments, the variety of plan requirements and the need to pace work in harmony with heritage agency partners.

I should mention that all monuments with or without beneficial management plans will continue to be safeguarded from potentially damaging operations through check systems in Forest Districts before work commences in any forest area.

I hope this letter provides the answers you require.

I am sorry I cannot provide full answers for questions numbers 10711, 10712 and 10719 but you will understand we are putting in place mechanisms to collate this information during 1997/98 which will be available at the time of the annual report for that year.

Disabled People (Housing)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans his Department has (a) to extend part T planning regulations to residential dwellings and (b) to take other measures to increase the stock of accessible housing for disabled people. [10858]

Mr. Chisholm: The Scottish Office is considering proposals to extend the access requirements of part T of the technical standards for compliance with the Building Standards (Scotland) Regulations 1990 to cover new, converted or adapted dwellings, taking account of cost implications, and comments made during consultations on draft amendments in 1995.

Community care, including provision of new or converted buildings accessible to disabled people, and adaptations to existing dwellings, is a national housing priority.

A1

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the maximum and average yearly traffic flows on the A1 road at Pencraig Hill; and what proportion of that traffic consists of heavy goods vehicles. [11060]

Mr. Chisholm: The average annual daily flow for 1996 was 11,500 vehicles with 20 per cent., 2,300, comprising heavy goods vehicles. This equates in 1996 to a total of 4,197,500 vehicles of which 839,500 were heavy goods vehicles. The peak traffic flow in August was approximately 14,720 vehicles per day. This equates to a total of 456,320 vehicles in August.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his amendment to the Lothian region structure plan stating that dualling of the road to Dunbar is now in hand. [11063]

Mr. Chisholm: The modification to the Lothian region structure plan reflects the very considerable progress already made and the work under way in dualling the A1. As my hon. Friend is aware, preparatory work to dual the stage between Haddington and Dunbar will continue within the Scottish Office during the review of the trunk road programme.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost of the new bridge at the end of the A1 dual carriageway at Haddington. [11064]

Mr. Chisholm: A total of £340,000.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what costs have been incurred on (a) preparing plans, (b) acquiring land and (c) other preliminary work for dualling the A1 road between Haddington and Dunbar. [11065]

Mr. Chisholm: As at 30 June 1997, the Scottish Office had incurred expenditure of £1.24 million on preparation work on dualling the section of the A1 between Haddington and Dunbar. No expenditure has been incurred to date by the Scottish Office on the acquisition of land or preliminary work.

Drug Addiction

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements are in place for monitoring the use and effectiveness of methadone as a heroin substitute. [11271]

Mr. Galbraith: Arrangements for the delivery of substitute prescribing programmes, including monitoring the use and effectiveness of services, are a matter for local consideration in the first instance. The use and effectiveness of substitute prescribing programmes are issues addressed in new national guidance on drug misuse services which has been prepared by my department, discussed with the Scottish Advisory Committee on Drug Misuse, and is now the subject of wide consultation.

An additional £1 million is being made available to health boards in this financial year to fund shared care arrangements for drug misusers, which will include monitoring and evaluation of projects.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on the use of methadone as a heroin substitute for heroin addicts in Scotland. [11270]

Mr. Galbraith: Substitute prescribing, including the use of methadone as a heroin substitute, is a method of harm reduction which has an important part to play in tackling drug misuse in Scotland. It needs to form part of a comprehensive package of care tailored to the individual needs of the drug misuser, which includes counselling and support and supervision of the taking of the drug, to prevent leakage onto the illicit market.

My Department is issuing detailed guidance on good practice in substitute prescribing to all GPs and relevant health professionals in Scotland.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the expenditure on the provision of methadone to heroin addicts (a) by health board and (b) in total for each of the last 10 years in Scotland. [11272]

Mr. Galbraith: The information by health board and Scotland for the financial years 1994–95 to 1996–97 is set out in the table.

The costs shown include the value of ingredients and the cost of fees paid to community pharmacists for dispensing the drug.

The information is not available in the form requested before 1994–95.

Needle Exchange Services

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the qualification requirements for employees involved in needle exchange services. [11273]

Mr. Galbraith: No formal qualification for needle exchange workers exists, but, under the framework of guidance issued by the Scottish Office, such needle and syringe exchange schemes must be supervised by a registered medical practitioner.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will ask a Scottish Lord of Appeal in Ordinary to discuss the Lockerbie case with (a) Lord Fraser of Carmyllie, (b) the Lord President, (c) Lord Mackay of Drumadom and (d) the Lord Advocate and report to him. [11129]

Mr. McLeish: No.

Crime and Punishment Act

Mrs. McKenna: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which further provisions of the Crime and Punishment (Scotland) Act 1997 he intends to implement; and if he will make a statement. [12072]

Mr. McLeish: The key objective of our criminal justice policy is to protect the public effectively. It is against this background that we have reviewed the provisions of the Crime and Punishment (Scotland) Act 1997.

We have already made a commencement order bringing certain provisions of the 1997 Act into force on 1 August—SI 1997/1712 (C.72) (S.128). We intend to bring a further tranche of provisions into force in October, including mandatory minimum sentences for persistent drug traffickers—section 2 of the 1997 Act—and new arrangements for criminal legal aid—part V of the 1997 Act).

We remain committed to consistency and honesty in sentencing, and will be bringing forward proposals to further these aims. However, we have concluded that the new arrangements for early release contained in part III of the 1997 Act are unsatisfactory and impractical, and we do not therefore propose to implement them in their present form.

We are not satisfied that section 1 of the Act, which provides for the sentences to be imposed in certain circumstances on repeat violent and sex offenders, as enacted, provides proper protection for the public against these offenders. However, given the seriousness with which we view the issue of repeat offending, we shall be consulting on how best to provide for the appropriate sentencing and improved supervision of such offenders.

In addition, we shall be taking a range of other steps to deal effectively with offenders and improve public protection. We shall be commencing section 5 of the Crime and Punishment (Scotland) Act 1997 to enable the Secretary of State to set up pilot schemes for the electronic tagging of offenders.

Community-based sentences have an important part to play in punishing and rehabilitating offenders. I am therefore looking closely at the full range of disposals, both custodial and non-custodial, against our objectives of improving public safety, dealing effectively and rigorously with offending behaviour and increasing public confidence in the criminal justice system.

We will be consulting further on other options in developing a new strategy on criminal justice for Scotland which is tough, effective, workable and coherent.

Fisheries Research Services

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the key performance targets he has set for Fisheries Research Services for 1997–98. [12073]

Mr. Chisholm: For this, the first year as an agency, I have set the following targets.

Delivery of service

To carry out a customer satisfaction survey.

To achieve 70 per cent. of the milestones agreed for R and D projects.

To maintain, pro rata, FRS's publication output.

Quality of service

To submit, as required for accreditation of chemical measurements, the quality manual and documentation to the United Kingdom accreditation service.

To review the work of the Freshwater Fisheries Laboratory through a visiting group and to report by December 1997.

Financial targets

To carry out the agreed Scottish Office programme within the agreed costs.

To recover full economic costs from external customers.

To establish the proportional administrative costs of FRS and to compare them with those of other agencies.

To establish the cost per day of the FRS research vessels and to compare them with those of similar research vessels.

To establish the unit cost of fish disease inspections and to compare with other similar programmes.

These various measures or tasks should provide a solid basis for evaluating performance over the medium term, by establishing a time series for certain indicators and by the requirement for regular external scrutiny, whether by customers or scientific peers.

Scottish Tourist Board

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the forthcoming policy and financial management review of the Scottish tourist board. [12161]

Mr. Dewar: As part of the Government's rolling programme of five-yearly policy and financial management reviews of non-departmental public bodies, my Department will conduct a thorough review of the Scottish tourist board during 1997. The first stage of the review will take the form of a prior options study which will include an examination of the scope for discontinuing, privatising, contracting out or transferring to another body some or all of the functions carried out by the board. This study is now under way and I would welcome comments from interested parties. Comments should be sent by 6 October 1997 to:

Referendum Publicity Costs

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what will be the final allocation in 1997–98 for expenditure on publicity in respect of the referendum on a Scottish Parliament. [12162]

Mr. Dewar: In 1997–98, £700,000 will made available through voted provision to meet the cost of publicity and other miscellaneous expenditure associated with the referendum on a Scottish Parliament. The provision will be made available through the miscellaneous category in the Scottish Office Home Department vote.

Parliamentary approval of this new expenditure will be sought in a 1997–98 winter supplementary estimate for the law, order and protective services, police grant and social work services, Scotland vote—class XIII, vote 5. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure will be met by a repayable advance from the contingencies fund.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Charter Unit

8. Mr. John Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the role of the charter unit in his Department. [9714]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The charter unit is responsible for taking forward the charter programme under our direction. In particular, it administers the charter mark award scheme, provides guidance to public service organisations, and disseminates best practice in public service provision.

Freedom of Information

13. Helen Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received regarding freedom of information. [9719]

15. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what recent representations he has received regarding freedom of information legislation. [9721]

Dr. David Clark: My Department has received representations from more than 70 organisations and individuals, all welcoming the Government's plans for greater openness and a freedom of information Act.

17. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the progress of the White Paper on freedom of information. [9723]

28. Ann Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the proposed White Paper on freedom of information. [9735]

Dr. Clark: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Falkirk, West (Mr. Canavan).

18. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the obstacles to the early introduction of a White Paper on freedom of information legislation. [9724]

Dr. Clark: The time necessary to prepare fully considered proposals on this integral part of our radical programme of constitutional reform.

20. Mr. Stringer: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he will take to study the experience of other countries in developing freedom of information legislation. [9726]

Dr. Clark: In developing our proposals for freedom of information legislation we are studying the experience of a number of other countries. I am planning to visit Canada, Australia and New Zealand later this year to look at the implementation and operation of their freedom of information regimes. I also took the opportunity to look at the American experience of freedom of information during my recent trip to the United States of America.

24. Mr. Rooney: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what consultations he has had with ministerial colleagues on proposed freedom of information legislation. [9731]

Dr. Clark: I have had a number of useful discussions with ministerial colleagues.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if his proposals for freedom of information legislation will apply to (a) British Nuclear Fuels plc and (b) other publicly owned companies. [11227]

Dr. Clark: Our intention is that the freedom of information Act will apply [illegible] only to central Government Departments and agencies but to the public sector more widely. Details will be set out in the forthcoming White Paper.

Charters

14. Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he is taking to reform the programme of charters. [9720]

Mr. Kilfoyle: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Delyn (Mr. Hanson) earlier today.

Public Services (Elderly People)

16. Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what initiatives he is taking to consult elderly people on the use of public services. [9722]

Mr. Kilfoyle: I attended a forum of older people on 8 July. The participants discussed their use of public services, identifying key issues of concern, and ways in which new technology could be used to deliver services to older people. They also commented on an early draft chapter of a booklet we are producing with the Citizenship Foundation, Age Concern and Saga, which will cover rights as they relate to older people.

Public Services

19. Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he plans to conclude his discussions on the citizens charter; and what are his plans for promoting and developing the quality of public services. [9725]

Mr. Kilfoyle: As we have already announced, we will be consulting widely on the future direction of the charter programme. We will take into account the results of this consultation and, of course, the report of the previous Public Service Committee on which the hon. Member sat. I hope that, around the end of this year, we will be in a position to relaunch the programme as an initiative that will make a real difference to the lives of ordinary people.

21. Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment he has made of the areas in which the electronic delivery of public services will have the greatest impact. [9728]

Dr. David Clark: Information technology will underscore our better government programme, informing all we do as a Government. We intend that electronic delivery systems will have a wide impact on all Government services in every part of the country and will benefit everybody.

Better Government Programme

22. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on his better government programme. [9729]

Dr. David Clark: The White Paper on Better Government will set out how we intend to meet our commitment to rebuild the bond of trust between Government and the people, by opening Government out and by providing accessible services which better match the way that people need live their lives.

The White Paper will address four challenges for Government as we enter the new millennium:

Cleaning up politics;

Getting good results and rooting out waste;

Listening to the people;

Working together across institutional boundaries.

Public Appointments

23. Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what guidance he has given the Commissioner for Public Appointments regarding his role in relation to reappointments of existing chairpersons of public bodies whose terms of office are or shortly will be due for renewal. [9730]

Dr. David Clark: None. The Commissioner for Public Appointments is independent of Government. His code of practice for public appointments procedures, which came into effect on 1 July 1996, states

> "Reappointments to the same post should not be automatic. The performance of the post-holder should be reviewed. A second reappointment should be exceptional and normally subject to a scrutiny process, including considering other candidates."

The code is supplemented by detailed guidance for Departments. Copies of the code and guidance are available in the Library.

Deregulation

25. Mr. Spring: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the Government's future plans for deregulation. [9732]

Dr. David Clark: We are committed to ensuring that regulations are simple, helpful and fair. We aim to deliver responsible and responsive regulation for business, particularly small firms, and the citizen. I have appointed Chris Haskins to chair a new better regulation task force and the deregulation unit has similarly been renamed the better regulation unit to reflect the fact that our priority is to get regulation right.

Food Safety

26. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what additional steps he is taking to ensure that food is safe to eat. [9733]

Dr. David Clark: At the request of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, I chair the ministerial group on food safety. As part of its work on the establishment of a Food Standards Agency, the group has looked at ways in which we can improve food safety arrangements in the interim. This work has involved a number of Government Departments, principally the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Department of Health. Later today, my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food will make a statement setting out these measures in full.

Quangos

27. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on his plans to (a) abolish quangos and (b) introduce a significant element of democratic accountability to quangos. [9734]

Dr. David Clark: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister stated in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for West Lancashire (Mr. Pickthall) on 18 June, Official Report, column 174, the Government believe that the previous Administration created too many unelected, undemocratic quangos. We have therefore instituted a review of quangos with the aim of reducing overall numbers.

Last Thursday, Official Report, column 693, in response to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for The Wrekin (Mr. Bradley), I announced proposals to issue a discussion paper in the autumn, considering how democratic oversight of public bodies might best be enhanced. In the light of consultation, we have brought forward proposals in the White Paper on Better Government to be published later this year.

Next Steps Agencies

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to improve the accountability of next steps agencies to Parliament. [9712]

Mr. Kilfoyle: We are considering whether there are any issues that need to be addressed in this area as part of our wider commitment to modernise Government services and make them more responsive.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the number and proportion of (a) Asians and (b) Afro-Caribbeans in each grade in the civil service. [11103]

Dr. David Clark: Information on the ethnic origin of civil servants is collected using a voluntary, self-classification, confidential questionnaire. The number and proportion of Asian and Afro-Caribbean civil servants, by grade equivalents, who have submitted a questionnaire, as at 1 April 1996 is set out in the table.

Central Office of Information

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what targets have been set for the Central Office of Information for 1997–98. [12164]

Mr. Kilfoyle: I have set Central Office of Information the following key performance targets for 1997–98:

- to achieve a surplus of £1 million in modified historical cost terms after recovering all costs including interest on borrowings;
- to achieve a further 2 per cent. increase in efficiency as measured by limit cost reduction;
- to achieve an average score of 8.25 out of 10 for the COI customer satisfaction index.

Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what performance targets he has set for the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency for 1997–98. [12166]

Mr. Kilfoyle: I have set the following key performance targets for the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency for 1997–98:

- to break even on an accruals basis;
- to deliver CCTA services within voted provisions;
- to establish a baseline for operation within the CCTA customer charter;
- to secure savings which will result in a 5 per cent. reduction in the cost of supporting services in 1998–99;
- to achieve 85 per cent. of customers assessing satisfaction with CCTA services at levels one and two of a five-point scale.

Civil Service College

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what key performance targets he has set for the Civil Service College for the current year. [12165]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The key performance targets for the Civil Service College for 1997–98 are:

- to break even in accrual accounting terms;
- to earn £1,500,000 from consultancy;
- to attract 1,515 students from the private sector;
- to attract 900 students from the private sector;
- to earn 88 per cent. of students' course evaluation in the highest two of six categories.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Parades and Marches

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which organisations applied to march in Northern Ireland in 1996 more than five times. [9978]

Mr. Ingram: The information is not available in the format requested and would incur disproportionate cost to provide.

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals she has to extend the remit of the Parades Commission to (a) grant special protection for traditional parades and (b) monitor other aspects of local culture in Northern Ireland. [10123]

Mr. Ingram: The Government have received representations about the remit of the Parades Commission, and is considering extending this remit beyond that recommended by the North report.

The forthcoming parades legislation will, as proposed by North, provide for the commission to take into account a range of factors including whether a parade is of long-standing. The commission will, in any particular case, weight up all the factors before reaching a conclusion.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many parades were applied for in 1996; how many were perceived as (a) unionist, (b) nationalist and (c) other; and which organisations filed for more than 10 parades in that year. [10125]

Mr. Ingram: The information is not available in the format requested and would incur disproportionate cost to provide. I refer the hon. and learned Gentleman to the reply given to the right hon. Member for Strangford (Mr. Taylor) on 29 July 1997, Official Report, column 158.

Internet

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will ensure that the Northern Ireland Office's web site on the Internet has adequate links to and from the web site of the Central Office of Information; and if she will make a statement. [11005]

Mr. Murphy: My Department is fully committed to using the potential of the Internet as an international communications medium and as an aid to open government. The NIO web site has more than 400 pages of information, regularly updated, on all political developments, security, crime, policing and community relations in Northern Ireland and including all press releases issued. In the period January to July 1997, visits to the site have increased from 1,187 to 25,353 per month.

A re-design now nearing completion will enhance content, visual appeal, user friendliness and links to and from other sites both within and outside Government, including the CCTA open government site and through it the Central Office of Information.

Expenditure

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list each increase in spending in excess of £50,000 by sub-heading in the Northern Ireland estimates, which she has approved. [11468]

Mr. Murphy: The table lists the specific areas where an increase in spending in excess of £50,000 has been approved in the 1997–98 Northern Ireland main estimates:

Plastic Baton Rounds

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many plastic baton rounds were fired between 1 and 14 July in (a) 1996 and (b) 1997; and if she will make a statement [11067]

Mr. Ingram: In response to the widespread and serious public disorder during these periods, the number of plastic baton rounds fired between 1 and 14 July 1996 was 8,098 and in the same period in 1997 was 2,510, although the figures for 1997 may be subject to adjustment.

Public Appointments

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what were the reasons for the non-reappointment of Geraldine Donaghy to the Southern health and social services board; and if she will review the decision. [11494]

Mr. Ingram: Ms Donaghy's four-year period of appointment as non-executive director of the Southern health and social services board expired on 31 March 1997. In reviewing the vacancies in the Southern health and social services board, the Department of Health and Social Services decided to consider the merits of other candidates before making its recommendation to the then health Minister, the hon. Member for Cambridgeshire, North-East (Mr. Moss). This procedure is consistent with the Commissioner for Public Appointments code of practice.

On becoming Minister with responsibility for the Department of Health and Social Services, my hon. Friend the Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) was presented with a number of candidates rated as suitable for appointment by a panel which included an independent member, constituted under guidelines issued by the Commissioner for Public Appointments. The decision was based on the merits of these individual candidates and there was no reason to review this decision.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment she has made of the public appointments procedure in Northern Ireland in respect of nominations from the voluntary and community sector to health and social services boards. [11495]

Mr. Ingram: There is no statutory requirement that the Department of Health and Social Services seek nominations from the voluntary and community sector for appointments to health and social services boards. Appointment opportunities within DHSS bodies are advertised openly and anyone is free to self-nominate and be considered for such appointments. This is in line with the DHSS procedures for public appointments, which follow the Commissioner for Public Appointments' code of practice.

Industrial Research and Technology Unit

Ms McCafferty: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what performance targets have been set for the industrial research and technology unit for the financial year 1997–98. [12070]

Mr. Ingram: The following key targets have been set for the agency for 1997–98:

1. To maintain new user participation in the near market compete programme at 10 per cent.
2. To increase the average industry contribution to the compete and start—pre-competitive—programme by 1 per cent.
3. To achieve full cost recovery for scientific services.
4. To maintain NAMAS and BSI Accreditations.
5. To achieve efficiency savings of 3 per cent.

Prison Service

Ms McCafferty: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Northern Ireland Prison Service intends to publish its 1997 corporate and business plan; and what performance targets have been set for 1997–98. [12071]

Mr. Ingram: The Northern Ireland Prison Service's 1997 corporate and business plan was published today. For 1997–98 the following key performance targets have been set:

1. To ensure 100 per cent. security for prisoners in high and top risk categories. To ensure at least 99.5 per cent. security for prisoners in medium and low risk categories.
2. To ensure that the number of significant security breaches during 1997–98 does not exceed 7.3 per 100 prisoners.
3. To achieve an average five per cent. improvement in constructive activity hours during 1997–98.

4. To conduct a further customer satisfaction survey of visitors in each establishment.
5. To offer sentence planning to all prisoners and young offenders who wish to participate in the scheme and to achieve a 50 per cent. uptake from eligible prisoners.
6. To ensure that the average cost per prisoner place does not exceed £76,252.
7. To achieve an average of five days training per member of staff.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Food Standards Agency

Ms Shipley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what responses he has received to the consultation on Professor James's report on proposals for a food standards agency; and if he will make a statement. [11854]

Mr. John Cunningham: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health and I, with the Secretaries of State for Scotland, for Wales, and for Northern Ireland, welcome the excellent response to the consultation on Professor James's report. The Government have received replies from more than 630 organisations and individuals. The responses show that there is widespread support for the proposal to establish a food standards agency which would be a non-departmental public body accountable to Parliament through health Ministers and operating on a basis of openness and transparency; create a clear separation between the responsibilities for regulating food safety and for promoting the interests of food-related industries; promote food safety from "plough to plate".

Many detailed points were raised in the consultation, which we are now studying further. Our aim is to publish a White Paper in the autumn setting out the Government's response to Professor James's recommendations in the light of the first round of public consultation. The White Paper will itself be the subject of a second consultation and a draft Bill will then be drafted and published. We shall bring the Bill before Parliament as soon as parliamentary time permits.

It is the Government's intention to establish a shadow food standards commission once the necessary legislation has made sufficient progress through its parliamentary stages. We are also taking a range of measures to improve food safety arrangements in the transitional period before establishment of a food standards agency. The Minister for Food Safety and the Minister for Public Health will take on a joint role in preparing the way for the food standards agency and ensuring maximum protection for the public. They will carry out this day-to-day role in close consultation with their ministerial counterparts in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. Overall policy co-ordination will rest with the ministerial committee on food safety, chaired by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

A key feature of the transitional arrangements will be developing further the independent advisory committees that advise the Government as a whole on food safety and related matters. The Food Advisory Committee will be given a special role in the handling of food safety issues that go beyond the remit of any one expert committee.

In addition to these UK-wide measures, the Secretary of State for Health and I are taking specific steps to improve the management of food safety issues in England. A joint food safety and standards group will be formed from the relevant staff in MAFF and the Department of Health from 1 September 1997. The group will be headed by Mr. Geoffrey Podger, a Department of Health official currently seconded to MAFF. The new joint group will report to Ministers in both Departments. In Scotland, all food safety issues are handled by a single team which comes under the responsibility of the Scottish health Minister; in Wales all food safety issues come under the responsibility of the Welsh health Minister; and in Northern Ireland the Department of Health and Social Services has lead responsibility for food safety issues.

The chief medical officer, Sir Kenneth Calman, will be given a new high level co-ordinating role in the handling of issues of potential public concern about food. Sir Kenneth will have particular responsibility for a new joint MAFF-Department of Health risk communication unit which is to be established and further reinforced by the appointment of an external adviser. This role will be undertaken in consultation with territorial Departments.

We are also continuing to strengthen our approach to food safety issues taking account of the high priority we give to the protection of public health, the rigorous enforcement of measures designed to protect the public and our commitment to openness, transparency and responsiveness to consumer concerns.

I am placing copies of all the responses to the consultation on Professor James's report in the Library of the House.

Veterinary Field Service

Mr. Savidge: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the veterinary field service will become a next steps executive agency; and if he will make a statement. [12068]

Dr. John Cunningham: I have decided that the veterinary field service should not at present become an executive agency.

Following an internal review of MAFF veterinary services under the last Government, the VFS structure was streamlined. One recommendation in that review was that the VFS should become a next steps agency. It would be inappropriate to proceed with a move to agency status given the move towards establishing the food standards agency and devolution, which have implications for the state veterinary service.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Godman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the dumping of radioactive waste at sea. [12069]

Mr. Rooker: My Department and others concerned with the disposal of radioactive waste have undertaken detailed searches of archive records relating to dumping at sea at Beaufort's dyke and elsewhere. Details of the searches carried out so far and the findings of each Department have been placed in the Library of the House.

Information was found of two further instances of radioactive waste being dumped, or possibly being dumped, in Beaufort's dyke in addition to that reported to the House on 1 July, Official Report, columns 158–60. The first instance was identified by the Scottish Office from a reference on one paper and relates to a disposal being arranged in 1957 at Cairn Ryan, a port used for the disposal of munitions to Beaufort's dyke, of a damaged closed caesium 137 source. There is no indication of the disposal site or any other information on the form of disposal. The level of radioactivity is described as about one quarter curie.

The second instance was identified by my Department concerning the dumping in 1976 of about 10,000 tonnes of building rubble and soil from the demolition of the premises of Thorium Ltd., a company that extracted thorium from minerals and left a waste product containing enhanced levels of naturally radioactive material. The authorisation required that the average radioactivity of this demolition material should be less than 10^{-4} microcuries/gm and was not to exceed 5×10^{-3} microcuries/gm in any part.

In respect of other locations not previously recognised as dump sites for radioactive waste, the Scottish Office has identified the following information:

scrap from a Ferranti radioactive valve manufacturing unit was dumped by Ferranti between 1954 and 1957 in the Firth of Forth off North Queensferry. An estimate at the time put this at 7.5 mg of radium bromide at six-monthly intervals; advice to UK Time Ltd. in 1949 to dispose of 35,000 luminised dials likely to have contained in total between 25 and 50mg radium either on land or in sealed drums at least 5 miles off shore. A subsequent paper suggests that such dumping continued in the North sea during the 1950s;

the dumping by ICI Ltd. of two anti-static devices—strontium 90—at the explosives disposal site off the Isle of Arran prior to 1958;

the dumping in 1963 at Garroch head, on the Clyde, of material from the clear-up of a former radium factory at Balloch.

In checking these historic records, Departments have in addition identified instances when liquid wastes or sludge containing small amounts of radioactivity were dumped at sea through dispersion into the water column from ships. These disposals were from the naval dockyards at Chatham and Rosyth into the North sea beyond the Thames estuary and the Firth of Forth respectively during the mid to late 1960s and early 1970s; sludges from industrial sources containing enhanced natural radioactivity into the Liverpool bay area, and possibly Morecambe bay and the Humber estuary, during the early to mid 1970s; and mildly radioactive solutions from early experiments at MAFF's Lowestoft laboratory in the North sea in the late 1940s.

Where possible, these reports are being following up to see whether further information can be obtained.

On the evidence of the papers that have been examined, I am advised that, even using cautious assumptions, it is estimated that radiation exposures to the public following any dispersal of radioactivity in the sea would give rise to radiation dose levels well within the International Commission on Radiological Protection recommended dose limit and a small fraction of those arising from natural background radioactivity. Nevertheless, I am arranging for the National Radiological Protection Board to make an independent assessment of this information and anything further that can be found. In particular, I shall ask it to advise me of the radiological significance of the disposals and on whether there is any need for monitoring over and above that which is already undertaken. I shall report further to the House when I have received the board's advice.

Cattle Cull

Mr. Borrow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made on the selective cull; and if he will make a statement. [12074]

Mr. Rooker: Since 1 May, progress with the selective cull has substantially improved. In Northern Ireland, the cull is complete except for six animals and any which have been imported from Great Britain. In Great Britain, we have completed nearly half of the natal herd visits. In Scotland, we have completed all of them. In England and Wales, all but a few of the visits have been made to farms with animals in the compulsory years. We have now slaughtered 15,000 animals in the UK—10 times the number that had been slaughtered when we came to office. This is good progress, but we need to do better still.

We have looked at all our procedures to see what more can be done to speed up. We have recently reached agreement with the Commission that farmers can choose a valuer from a list of valuers drawn up by the Ministry where the valuation is for 10 or fewer animals. Up to now, many owners have opted to have two valuers, which has created problems in arranging valuations and thus slowed down progress with the cull. This new procedure is already being put into practice.

Now that owners can choose the valuer, I do not consider it necessary to have two valuers for 10 or fewer animals. I therefore propose to amend the BSE Compensation Order 1996 so that the option of having two valuers for 10 animals or fewer is no longer available. We regard this as necessary, particularly to ensure that we make maximum progress with animals that have moved away from their herd of birth and will mainly be dealt with as single animals. Farming and valuers organisations will be consulted on the draft amendments to the order, which in the interests of making speedy progress on the cull I propose to lay and bring into force during the recess.

It is in everyone's interests for the cull to be completed as soon as possible. That is the Government's aim and we will continue to look for ways to make faster progress. I hope that farmers will work with the state veterinary service to get through this difficult task as quickly as we can.

Intervention Board

Mr. Borrow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how the Intervention Board performed against its targets for 1996–97; and what key performance targets he has set the agency for 1997–98. [12075]

Dr. John Cunningham: The Intervention Board's performance against its key targets in 1996–97 was as follows:

	Target (per cent.)	Performance
Percentage of claims processed within deadlines	99.0	85.0
Percentage of claims processed correctly	98.5	[1]99.5
Cumulative running cost efficiency gains	2.5	5.3
Improvement in index of productivity	6.0	3.0
Ratio of disallowance to European Agricultural Guidance and Guarantee Fund funds handled	0.40	Not yet known
To maintain expenditure within vote provision, cash and running cost limits	—	Met
New value for money savings in procurement of goods and services	6.0	6.8
Yield:cost ratio of anti-fraud activities	3.0:1.0	1.2:1.0

[1] Results for BSE-related schemes were based on a smaller sample of processed claims because monitoring on the same basis began later in the year.

In agreement with my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, for Wales and for Northern Ireland, I have set the following targets for 1997–98:

	Target (per cent.)
Percentage of claims processed within deadlines	99.0
Percentage of claims processed correctly	98.5
Cumulative running cost efficiency gains	2.5
Improvement in index of productivity	6.0
Ration of disallowance to EAGGF funds handled	0.40
To maintain expenditure within vote provision, cash and running cost limits	—
New value for money savings in procurement of goods and services	6.5

Vitamin B6

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he took to consult interested parties prior to his announcement of a ban on higher dose vitamin B6 supplements. [10881]

Mr. Rooker: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for South-East Cambridgeshire (Mr. Paice) on 29 July 1997, Official Report, columns 20-21.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he proposes to take to impose a ban on higher dose vitamin B6 supplements. [10882]

Mr. Rooker: The Government have no intention of imposing a ban on higher dose vitamin B6 products. It has accepted advice from the independent Food Advisory Committee that the level of vitamin B6 in dietary supplements sold under food law should be limited to a maximum of 10 mg per daily dose. This limit will be introduced by regulations under the Food Safety Act 1990. However, higher dose products licensed as medicines for the treatment of specific clinical conditions will continue to be available from pharmacies and on prescription.

Departmental Payroll

Mr. Todd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list each of the functions relating to the payroll for which his Department is responsible, indicating the management systems purchased, all subcontractors involved in the work, co-operative arrangements with other Departments and the costs of the systems and processes in the last year for which figures are available. [10742]

Mr. Morley: The Department and its agencies are responsible for collating and processing payments to staff including basic pay, sick pay and payments for excess hours worked, and so on. The Department performs this function for staff in the core Department, the Pesticides Safety Directorate, the Veterinary Medicines Directorate and the Centre for Environment, Fisheries and Aquaculture Science. The Department's other agencies—the Veterinary Laboratories Agency, the Meat Hygiene Service, the Central Science Laboratory and the Farming and Rural Conservation Agency—are responsible for their own payroll functions.

The Department and its agencies use the payroll services contractor, Chessington Computer Services Ltd., which is responsible for making the actual payments and issuing payment advice to staff.

The Department and its agencies use the Chessington Computer Services management system known as SPIRE—standard payroll input and retrieval. In addition, the Centre for Environment, Fisheries and Aquaculture Science operates a small payroll system for about 30 locally paid industrial staff. There were no extra costs associated with this system in 1996–97.

The estimated total cost of the Department's, including agencies, payroll systems and processes in 1996–97 was £930,400. This figure does not include costs for the Farming and Rural Conservation Agency, which was established on 1 April 1997.

Gyrodactylus Salaris Parasite

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he proposes to take to prevent the spread of the parasite gyrodactylus salaris into United Kingdom rivers. [11474]

Mr. Morley: At the request of the United Kingdom, a safeguard measure was adopted last year by the European Commission prohibiting the import into the UK and Ireland of all live salmonids and requiring all imported salmonid eggs to be disinfected. Although the risk of introducing gyrodactylus salaris on angling equipment or clothing is very low, we also advise all those fishing abroad to ensure that any such equipment or clothing is either thoroughly dried or disinfected before, or on return to the UK.

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has held with angling organisations regarding the possible spread of the parasite gyrodactylus salaris into United Kingdom rivers; and if he will make a statement. [11475]

Mr. Morley: Officials are in regular contact with a range of fishery organisations, including those with angling interests, and both they or I would be willing to discuss the action that we are taking to prevent the introduction of gyrodactylus salaris into the UK.

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice he has issued (a) generally, (b) to airports, port authorities and other points of entry to the United Kingdom and (c) to fishermen concerning the need to disinfect clothing and equipment when returning from abroad to prevent the spread of the parasite gyrodactylus salaris into United Kingdom rivers. [11476]

Mr. Morley: Advice is already contained in the Fisheries Department's booklet "Combating Fish Disease" which recommends all those fishing abroad to take precautions such as drying or disinfecting equipment to avoid the accidental spread of disease. Following the UK's success in achieving further EU safeguard measures to prevent the introduction of gyrodactylus salaris into the UK and Ireland, this advice is being reinforced by the issuing of specific leaflets.

Intervention Beef

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many tonnes of stewed beef are currently in intervention storage; what plans he has for their distribution to (a) recipients of benefits and (b) asylum seekers not in receipt of benefits; and if he will make a statement. [10725]

Mr. Rooker: The EU surplus food scheme, as laid down by EU regulation 3149/92, as amended, allows member states to remove certain intervention stocks of produce from store and supply it to the poor and needy via charitable organisations. This year, the UK is withdrawing 5,000 tonnes of UK intervention beef from stock and arranging for it to be processed into canned stewed steak and distributed to more than 850 charities, local authorities and other non-profit-making organisations. Individuals eligible to receive the beef will each receive up to eight cans free or for a nominal charge.

Asylum seekers do not qualify in their own right to receive the food made available under the scheme. This is because eligibility for produce under the scheme had to be limited. In the UK, we have decided, in consultation with the Department of Social Security, to limit the eligibility criteria to those in receipt of income support, family credit, jobseeker's allowance—income-based only—disability working allowance, to the homeless and destitute and to those living in welfare hostels. Asylum seekers falling into any of these eligible groups may receive food under the scheme.

Arable Area Payments

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list for each county (a) the total cost and (b) the (i) minimum, (ii) average and (iii) maximum payment made under the arable area payments scheme in 1996. [11319]

Mr. Rooker: The following table sets out figures for the total payments received by each claimant on a county basis. Payments are attributed to the county in which the claimant's main holding is situated.

Brewing Industry

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from the brewing industry in respect of bootleg imports from EU member states; and what response he plans to make. [11491]

Mr. Morley: My ministerial colleagues and I have been fully briefed by industry representatives about the impact on brewing and pubs of cross-border shopping. The issues here are primarily for the Chancellor, who announced a review of these matters in the Budget speech.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Export Licences

Ann Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer of 21 July, Official Report, column 448, if she will list the other equipment, including weapons systems, covered by the six other export licences granted in respect of Hawk aircraft to Indonesia on (a) 19 December 1995 and (b) 22 November 1996. [10447]

Mrs. Roche: I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible and place a copy of that letter in the Library. Inquiries are being made as regards the release of the information under the non-statutory code of practice on access to Government information and, since confidential information is involved, the consent of the company is being sought for the disclosure of that information.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on her current policy for licensing defence exports. [10641]

Mrs. Roche: I refer the hon. Member to the announcement made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on 28 July 1997, Official Report, columns 26–29, of the outcome of the review of the criteria used in considering applications for licences to export conventional arms.

Mr. Key: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many defence export licence applications were awaiting final Government approval on (a) 1 April, (b) 1 May, (c) 1 June and (d) 1 July. [10759]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 28 July 1997]: The management data on the processing of licence applications by the Export Control Organisation are compiled on the basis of four-week periods rather than monthly, and by management unit rather than by the type of goods.

Accordingly, I am not able to give the position on precisely these dates as regards applications for licences to export goods entered under part III of schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994—commonly known as the military list. However, I can give the following information on applications for individual licences to export controlled strategic goods, including goods on the military list.

Number of applications for individual export licence awaiting a decision

	Number
5 April 1997	1,702
3 May 1997	1,822
31 May 1997	1,844
27 June 1997	2,007

Ann Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many export licences have been issued to Alvis since 1990 in respect of Indonesia, stating in each case the date of the licence and the type of equipment covered by it, including the numbers of each type. [10342]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 24 July 1997]: I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible and place a copy of that letter in the Library. Inquiries are being made as regards the release of the information under the non-statutory code of practice on access to government information and, since confidential information is involved, the consent of the company is being sought for the disclosure of that information.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many licence applications for arms and equipment exports to Indonesia are awaiting approval; if she will list the types of equipment and categories involved in the licence applications; and when she expects the decisions on the applications to be taken. [10575]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 25 July 1997]: At 24 July, a decision had not yet been reached on 59 applications for licences for the export of a wide range of goods controlled under part III of schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order. The time taken to reach a decision will vary from case to case, and will depend on the time required for consultation with other Departments.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the Government's policies regarding the use of solar photovoltaic technology; and if it is included in her Department's review of renewable energy policies. [11459]

Mr. Battle: Government support for solar photovoltaic technology will certainly form part of the review of policy on new and renewable energy. In the meantime, we will continue with the research, design and development work under the Department's new and renewable energy programme, which is assessing PV technology, for example by monitoring a number of large-scale installations, such as the Ford factory roof at Bridgend and the Doxford offices at Sunderland. We are also supporting the deployment of PV in 100 schools and colleges across the country through the £2.5 million foresight "SCOLAR" initiative.

Business Links

Mr. Cotter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate she has made of the (a) time scale and (b) cost of developing and Internet site for business links. [10586]

Mrs. Roche: The business link national Internet site was launched on 25 October 1996. The cost of the development of the site to the DTI will total £180,000 over a period of three years up until 13 October 1999.

The Government are developing an Internet-based enterprise zone, which will provide small and medium firms with a one-stop access point to Internet sites which provide the most appropriate and authoritative business-related information and sources of further support to meet firms' needs, including the business link network. The Government will be providing up to £200,000 for initial development of the site funded from existing resources. On-going management and enhancement will be undertaken on a fully commercial basis and we expect to be able to launch the site in the autumn.

Mr. Cotter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total amount of funding provided by the Government for the business links network in 1996–97. [10633]

Mrs. Roche: The total amount of funding provided to the business link network in 1996–97 was £114.6 million. This comprised £41.1 million for business link development and £73.5 million for the delivery of business link services.

British Citizens Working Abroad

Mr. David Heath: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what regulations exist to ensure good practice by international recruitment agencies placing British citizens in jobs overseas; and what remedies are available to British citizens recruited in this way in the event of breach of contract or wrongful dismissal by the employers. [11209]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Agencies operating within England, Scotland and Wales are governed by the Employment Agencies Act 1973. The Conduct of Employment Agencies and Employment Businesses Regulations 1976 in particular impose responsibilities on agencies that place workers aborad. Similar legislation applies in Northern Ireland.

In the event of breach of contract by an overseas employer, including wrongful dismissal, remedies may be provided by local law. Contractual rights may also be enforceable in the UK courts, particularly if the contract was made under English law.

Mr. David Heath: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what safeguards exist to ensure fair treatment of British citizens recruited in the United Kingdom to work abroad by foreign-owned companies. [11208]

Mr. McCartney: Employment protection legislation generally applies to employees who ordinarily work in the UK, although some provisions have wider application. Employees covered by this legislation are therefore able to pursue their statutory rights in British courts or industrial tribunals. Employees who ordinarily work outside the UK must generally look to the law and legal system of the country in which they work for protection.

Trade Associations

Mr. Page: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentage of trade associations participating in the latest benchmarking exercise had established national vocational qualifications for their sector; and of those which had not, what percentage were in the process of establishing national vocational qualifications. [11399]

Mr. Battle: I regret that this precise information is not available. However, the benchmarking exercise showed that nearly half, 48 per cent., of the participants determined the skills requirements of their sector, and over three quarters, 77 per cent., worked with the relevant organisations to ensure training needs are met.

Mr. Page: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentages of all trade associations are classified as (a) small, (b) medium and (c) large by the breakdown of subscription income used in the recent trade associations benchmarking exercise. [11398]

Mr. Battle: The information is as follows:

Size of association	Subscription income	Percentage of sample
Small	£1–£200,000	24
Medium	£200,000–£1 million	46
Large	£1 million+	30

Mr. Page: To ask the President of the Board of Trade for what reasons a copy of "The Trade Associations' Performance", a report of a benchmarking exercise of trade associations published in May, has not been placed in the Library. [11397]

Mr. Battle: I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library today.

Mr. Page: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many trade associations refused to take part in the recent benchmarking exercise of trade associations' performance. [11396]

Mr. Battle: The Association of British Insurers, which managed the exercise on behalf of DTI, wrote to all UK trade associations on its database inviting them to take part. In the event, 135 elected to do so. The total number approached is not immediately available.

International Airport, Gaza

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what facilities and advice are available to United Kingdom companies wishing to participate in the development of the Palestinian international airport at Gaza. [11290]

Mrs. Roche: The development phase, including the provision of equipment, of the airport is now complete, but the commercial section of the British consulate-general at Jerusalem and the country desk in the DTI are available to offer detailed advice as further opportunities arise.

Computer-related Expenditure

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what funding is presently committed from his departmental budget for (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000 to resolve the year 2000 computer problem; and whether he will make a statement. [11376]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 29 July 1997]: A programme of projects and other activities are running within the core DTI which aims to resolve the problems facing its IT systems as a result of the year 2000 date change. The following sums from departmental budgets have been approved to meet the cost of this programme:

1999–2000: £254,000.

The sum approved for 1999–2000 relates to monitoring activities necessary after the completion of remedial work in April 1999.

The Department's next step agencies have programmes of their own which they are funding.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is her estimate of total departmental expenditure on computer-related current and capital work for (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98, (d) 1998–99 and (e) 1999–2000; and if she will make a statement. [11379]

Mr. Griffiths [holding answer 29 July 1997]: Total estimated expenditure on computer-related work for the years in question by the core DTI, excluding next steps agencies, is as follows:

	Capital	Current	Total
1995–96	16,269	11,222	27,491
1996–97	15,789	13,032	28,821
1997–98	12,268	13,562	25,830
1998–99	11,777	11,687	23,464
1999–2000	11,703	11,687	23,390

Figures for 1998–99 and 1999–2000 are forecasts, as allocations for these years have not yet been agreed.

Employers' Liability Insurance

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make it her policy to require the inclusion of the insurer responsible for employers' liability insurance in each company's annual report; and if she will make a statement. [10523]

Angela Eagle: I have been asked to reply.

I am aware of concern about employees unable to trace the insurer responsible for employer's liability insurance where a company has gone into liquidation. We are taking forward work on possible options for dealing with this problem as part of our current review of employers' liability legislation. The solution suggested is one of those under consideration. The Law Commission is also considering third party rights against insurers where the insured has become insolvent and will be issuing a consultation document in the autumn.

Energy Taxation

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which Minister will handle European negotiations over common energy taxation. [10459]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 25 July 1997]: I have been asked to reply.

The lead rests with my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

WALES

Waste Minimisation

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to introduce a waste minimisation strategy for his Department. [11556]

Mr. Ron Davies: Waste reduction is already an established and important aspect of my Department's strategy to enhance its environmental performance.

Annual Welsh Office green housekeeping action plans feature various schemes and initiatives which are improving efficiency and reducing adverse environmental effects. In particular, substantial quantities of waste paper, aluminium cans, toner cartridges, plastics, old wooden pallets and polythene packaging are being recycled.

The Welsh Office is committed to making its waste work and looking to do even better in future. Welsh Office staff are regularly encouraged to improve performance in this area, including the minimisation of waste at source.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the amount, and proportion, of paper recycled by his Department in each of the last five years. [11558]

Mr. Davies: Waste paper recycling was introduced in the Welsh Office at the end of 1992. The quantities of paper recycled by my Department in each of the four years since are:

1993–94: 37,900 kg

1996–97: 104,800 kg

Expectations for the current financial year are higher and a target of 140,000 kg has been set.

Information relating to the proportion of waste paper recycled is not held centrally.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on existing targets set to minimise waste within his Department. [11557]

Mr. Davies: My Department has a range of targets in place aimed at reducing the amount of waste it sends to landfill. This year, the Welsh Office aims to recycle 140,000 kg of waste paper, 7,500 aluminium cans and 600 printer toner cartridges. Old wooden pallets and polythene packaging, which have previously gone to landfill are now sent for recycling. More recently, the Welsh Office has introduced a new scheme for the collection of plastic cups, which is directing around 25,000 of these items away from landfill each months.

Arable Area Payments

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many payments were made under the arable area payment scheme in 1996 (a) £0 to £1,000, (b) £1,000 to £2,000, (c) £2,000 to £3,000, (d) £3,000 to £4,000, (e) £4,000 to £5,000, (f) £5,000 to £10,000, (g) £10,000 to £20,000, (h) £20,000 to £50,000, (i) £50,000 to £100,000 and (j) over £100,000. [11316]

Mr. Win Griffiths: During 1996–97, the Welsh Office made arable area payments to 2,359 farmers, with the payments breaking down as follows:

(a) £0 to £1,000 = 453

(b) £1,000 to £2,000 = 504

(c) £2,000 to £3,000 = 334

(d) £3,000 to £4,000 = 299

(e) £4,000 to £5,000 = 387

(f) £5,000 to £10,000 = 95

(g) £10,000 to £20,000 = 171

(h) £20,000 to £50,000 = 101

(i) £50,000 to £100,000 = 11

(j) over £100,000 = 4.

Public Health Initiative

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the public health initiatives planned by his Department in (a) Clwyd, South and (b) Wales. [10955]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Initiatives specific to the Clwyd, South area will be a matter for North Wales health authority.

At the all-Wales level, there are many public health initiatives under way, and proposed, to prevent ill health. Primary prevention initiatives including the Welsh child health surveillance programmes, for example, play a vital role in monitoring the health and development of children. The childhood vaccination and immunisation programme represents one of the most effective public health interventions currently available. At very little cost, lifelong protection can be provided against infectious diseases—the health burdens of which can be enormous.

Public education campaigns are under way, including national campaigns dealing with a full range of public health issues such as smoking, diet, physical activity, substance misuse and healthy sexual behaviour. In particular, the "Back to sleep" campaign aimed at reducing the number of cot deaths has been very successful.

A wide range of legislation is in place to control the incidence of food-borne diseases and the Government are committed to protecting the public health through additional measures to ensure the safety of food, including the establishment of a food standards agency. Specific research initiatives under way including all-Wales projects aimed at reducing the number of cases of food poisoning and levels of infections acquired during hospital stays, are progressing well.

Secondary prevention measures including the early detection of breast and cervical cancers, for example, through screening programmes available in Wales, have significantly improved chances of survival from these diseases.

In my statement on 7 July, I made reference to the progress made with the 1989 strategic intent and direction for the NHS in Wales and the Welsh health survey in 1995. Subsequently, a streamlined set of health targets were announced by the Secretary of State for Wales on 10 June. These include prevention initiatives to reduce deaths from cancer of the lung, breast and cervix. Other target areas include coronary heart disease and stroke. We have also asked health authorities to draw up plans to reduce accident and suicide rates and to work to improve the quality of life of patients with a number of painful conditions.

All these initiatives, both existing and proposed, will continue to be afforded a high priority to provide the greatest possible health benefits for the people of Wales and ensure that health strategies address the adverse effects on health of social, economic and environmental factors.

Education Revenue Accounts

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will rank Welsh education authorities in order of percentage share of budget devoted to education revenue accounts for each of the last five years. [10750]

Contaminated Land

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to lay new regulations under the Environment Act 1995 concerning contaminated land in Wales. [10446]

Mr. Win Griffiths: We hope to make an announcement shortly of how we propose to proceed with the implementation of the contaminated land provisions in part IIA of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, inserted by section 57 of the Environment Act 1995.

Gwent Tertiary College

Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales by whom Mr. Cyril Lewis was appointed to carry out the investigation of Gwent tertiary college; what the terms of reference were for his investigation; how long Mr. Cyril Lewis's appointment is for; how much he is being paid; and what companies or individuals are being used as consultants in the investigation. [10328]

Mr. Hain: Mr. Cyril Lewis was appointed by the governors of Gwent tertiary college further education corporation to carry out the investigation of the college. The investigation's terms of reference, and Mr. Lewis's employment conditions are matters for the governors, who have also appointed Ernst and Young as financial consultants.

EAGGF

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total sum allocated to Wales under the European Agricultural Guidance and Guarantee Fund for the last complete year for which figures are available, indicating how the fund was distributed; and what amount was given to each applicant. [10493]

Mr. Hain [holding answer 28 July 1997]: Details on EAGGF approvals to date under the rural Wales objective 5(b) programme, 1994 to 1999, and the Leader II programme, 1995 to 1999, by sponsor and measure is provided as follows. It is not practicable to provide information for a particular year.

TREASURY

Long-term Care Insurance

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he plans to regulate the marketing of long-term care insurance. [12080]

Mrs. Liddell: In December 1996, my predecessor issued a consultation document on proposals to regulate the marketing of long-term care insurance under the Financial Services Act 1986. These proposals were designed to complement proposals by the then Secretary of State for Health set out in his document "A new partnership for care in old age".

The Government do not intend to implement the previous Government's draft Bill on a partnership scheme. We feel that this was only a partial solution designed to help a relatively small number of people and that what is needed is a more fundamental and wide-ranging review of all the options.

In view of this, the Government intend, as set out in their manifesto, to examine provisions for long-term care for the elderly. The Government will make a further announcement on this once the form and content of that examination have been settled.

These policy developments have important implications for the balance of argument for and against early action to regulate the marketing of long-term care insurance. The broader policy debate is likely to have fundamental implications for the future of this market and for its regulation. It is my decision, therefore, that it would be premature to proceed now to amend the scope of the Financial Services Act 1986. Once the broader policy debate has been taken forward, I shall consider carefully the implications for the regulation of marketing of long-term care insurance.

In the interim, I shall of course monitor the market closely for evidence of significant risks to consumers and will take appropriate action if that is warranted.

Office for National Statistics

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how the Office for National Statistics performed against its key targets in 1996–97. [10385]

Mrs. Liddell: The Office for National Statistics' performance for 1996–97 is described in the agency's annual report and accounts, which is being laid before the House and published today. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

The ONS achieved eight out of its nine key targets, with the ninth, relating to release of publications in accordance with its publications plan, being partially achieved. Targets for 1997–98 and ONS's business strategy are set out in the "ONS Business Plan 1997–2000", which was published in March. Together, these will ensure continuing improvements in its performance in 1997–98.

Ministry of Defence Budget

Mr. Key: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the purchasing power of the Ministry of Defence budget for the next three years resulting from his revised estimates of inflation. [7567]

Mr. Darling: The comprehensive spending review, which was announced on 11 June, is addressing priorities across all Government expenditure both in the medium term and long term. The strategic defence review, which was announced on 28 May, will be integrated with the wider comprehensive spending review.

EMU Information Campaign

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will request EU funding to finance his information campaign on economic and monetary union. [10952]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government are considering whether to request European Community funding to help finance the task of informing UK businesses about the practical implications of economic and monetary union which would arise whether or not the UK joins the single currency.

Oil Seed Rape Fuel

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the advantages of reducing the excise duty on fuel made from oil seed rape; and what representations he has received on this subject. [10491]

Dawn Primarolo: I have made no such assessment.

I have received one representation on this subject.

Personal Equity Plans

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will change the rules governing PEPs to allow PEP holders who have investments in unlisted securities market companies which migrated to the alternative investment market—AIM—following the closure of the unlisted securities market to continue to hold these investments in their PEP. [10367]

Dawn Primarolo: No. AIM shares may qualify for the tax reliefs available for investment in unlisted companies.

Income Tax

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many registered voters in Scotland presently pay income tax at the standard rate or above; [10127]

(2) how many registered voters in Scotland do not pay income tax at the standard rate or above. [10126]

Dawn Primarolo: It is not possible to identify which taxpayers are registered to vote.

General Government Expenditure

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the reduction in real general Government expenditure in 1997–98 and 1998–99 consequential on the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" projected increase in the gross domestic product deflator. [8140]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 11 July 1997]: In the last Budget, general Government expenditure increased in cash terms by £0.4 billion in 1997–98 and by £4.1 billion in 1998–99 compared with the projections in the 1996 Budget. In 1995–96 prices, using the latest GDP deflator forecasts, there was a real reduction of £2.6 billion in 1997–98 and £1.5 billion in 1998–99.

Economic and Monetary Union

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the legal base for use of qualified majority voting in the creation of an action programme for the enhancement of administrative co-operation between the indirect tax authorities in the European Community, as detailed in COM (97) 175; and what representation he has made in respect of its use in this respect. [10200]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 22 July 1997]: The European Commission has proposed that the legal base for this action programme—the FISCALIS programme—should be article 100a of the treaty establishing the European Community, so making it a matter for co-decision with the European Parliament and qualified majority voting in the Council.

The UK remains firmly committed to unanimity as the basis for Community-level decision making on all substantive tax matters.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Government would be prepared to join the economic and monetary union at the presently prevailing value of the pound; and if he will make a statement. [11336]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 29 July 1997]: It would be premature to speculate on an appropriate rate for joining EMU. The Chancellor does not propose to make a statement.

Minister for Trade and Competitiveness in Europe

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in what circumstances the Minister for Trade and Competitiveness in Europe is able to handle matters relating to tax. [10426]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 24 July 1997]: The Minister for Trade and Competitiveness in Europe has a project-based portfolio in the Treasury which may include some tax issues. However, arrangements are in place to ensure that the Minister is not involved in issues that could give rise to conflicts of interest.

Private Medical Insurance

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number of people receiving tax relief for private medical insurance who will not renew their current policies as a result of the Budget measure to terminate such tax relief. [10305]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 24 July 1997]: No firm estimates are available of the number of people receiving tax relief who will not renew their current policies as a result of the Budget measure.

Value Added Tax (Businesses)

Mr. Grieve: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many VAT-registrable businesses there were in the United Kingdom in each year since 1979. [10838]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 28 July 1997]: Customs does not hold information on the number of VAT-registrable businesses in the United Kingdom in each year since 1979. However, the number of businesses actually registered for VAT in the UK in each financial year since 1983 was as follows:

Financial year	Registered businesses
1983–84	1,433,100
1984–85	1,458,900
1985–86	1,477,400
1986–87	1,505,500
1987–88	1,554,000
1988–89	1,623,866
1989–90	1,710,106
1990–91	1,745,097
1991–92	1,677,829
1992–93	1,632,013
1993–94	1,593,770
1994–95	1,579,869
1995–96	1,573,620
1996–97	1,595,271

Nationalised Industries

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total net external financing limit at current prices of Britain's nationalised industries in each year since 1974. [10919]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 28 July 1997]: External financing limits were introduced in 1976. Outturn performance against an EFL is recorded as the external financing requirement. The total EFR for the nationalised industries in each year since 1976–77 in current prices is provided in the table.

Total external financing requirements of nationalised industries in 1996–97 prices

1976–77	8.71
1977–78	4.84
1978–79	7.07
1977–80	6.89
1980–81	6.48
1981–82	4.61
1982–83	4.06
1983–84	4.12
1984–85	6.73
1985–86	2.78
1986–87	0.55
1987–88	0.29
1988–89	–0.64
1989–90	1.23
1990–91	4.22
1991–92	4.33
1992–93	4.83
1993–94	3.86
1994–95	1.05

Total external financing requirements of nationalised industries in 1996–97 prices

	£ billion
1995–96	–0.36

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what subsidy was paid to each of the nationalised industries between 1974 and their year of privatisation. [11344]

Mr. Robinson [holding answer 29 July 1997]: The external financing requirement of a nationalised industry has been used since its introduction in 1976 as the consistent measure of financial support an industry requires to supplement income from its trading activities. The EFR is a measure of the cash needed by the industry to fund investment and meet costs not covered by revenue. As such, it is only an indirect measure of subsidy. Information presented on this basis has been available since 1976–77. Table 3.11 of the "Public Expenditure Statistical Analyses 1997–98", Cm 3601, lists EFRs from 1978–79 and 1982–83 onwards. The EFRs for key nationalised industries from 1976–77, unless otherwise indicated, to privatisation are as follows:

	£ billion
British Coal	16.2
British Gas	[1]–3.6
BNOC	0
British Steel	6.0
British Airways	0
British Rail	11.1
British Shipbuilders	1.3
British Telecommunications from 1981–82	[1]–1.0
Electricity, England, Wales and Scotland	[1]–3.8
Water, from 1978–79	2.2

[1] A negative EFR represents a net benefit to the public finances.

Public Sector Debt

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average level of public sector debt as a percentage of gross domestic product in (a) 1974–75 to 1978–79 and (b) 1979–80 to 1996–97. [10883]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 28 July 1997]: The average level of net public sector debt from 1974–75 to 1978–79 was 55 per cent. of gross domestic product. The average from 1979–80 to 1996–97 was 40 per cent. of GDP.

Business Taxes

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the percentage of gross domestic product constituted by business taxes for (a) the United Kingdom, (b) Germany, (c) France and (d) Italy in each year since 1974–75. [10894]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 28 July 1997]: The information requested is shown in the table.

Taxes on business as a percentage of GDP

	1975	1980	1985	1990	1991	1992	1993	1994
United Kingdom	8.5	9.9	10.3	9.7	9.3	8.6	8.0	8.0
Germany	9.2	9.9	10.1	9.4	9.8	9.7	9.6	9.5
France	14.8	16.4	17.3	17.0	16.9	16.8	16.8	16.8
Italy	11.3	11.1	11.9	13.3	13.1	13.8	13.6	12.8

Notes:

(1) Taxes on business include corporate taxes, employers social security contributions, taxes on payroll, taxes on property and other taxes.

(2) Prior to 1990 data available on a five-year basis.

Computers (Century Data Change)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 23 July, Official Report, column 590, on the year 2000 problem, what estimate he has made of the cost in respect of computer systems in non-governmental public bodies and other government bodies for which Government Departments have responsibility; and if he will make a statement. [11369]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 29 July]: The fully costed plans that Government Departments are producing by October 1997 will include any areas of the wider public service, including non-departmental public bodies and other Government bodies for which Ministers have sponsorship responsibilities.

Building Societies

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what policy action he is considering to avoid demutualisation of building societies adding to consumer demand in 1997–98 and 1998–99; and if he will make a statement. [11337]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 29 July 1997]: We have received a number of representations suggesting steps that the Government might take to deter further demutualisations of building societies. The Government are committed to the benefits of the mutual building society and the opportunities for choice for the consumer. However, a number of UK representatives raise difficult issues of principle because they could frustrate the will of the members, or significantly reduce the board's accountability to them. Nevertheless, we are keeping the situation under review.

Contingency Reserve

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when (a) initial and (b) final decisions will be taken on the allocation of the contingency reserve for (i) 1997–98 and (ii) 1998–99; and if he will make a statement. [11342]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 29 July 1997]: Decisions on the allocation of the reserve for any particular year are taken in the course of that year as the circumstances requiring use of such funds arise.

Mr. Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the value of the contingency reserve set in each Budget since 1980 for the succeeding financial year (a) in nominal terms and (b) as a percentage of total general Government expenditure; and if he will make a statement. [11371]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 29 July 1997]: The figures are given in nominal terms in the table. The coverage of the reserve has varied with the definition of the control aggregate. For example, in 1990–91, the planning total was redefined to exclude self-financed expenditure by local authorities. In 1993–94, this was in turn replaced by the control total, which included all local authority expenditure but excluded cyclical social security spending and privatisation proceeds.

1981–82	1.6	1.3
1982–83	1.7	1.3
1983–84	1.5	1.1
1984–85	3.0	2.0
1985–86	3.0	1.9
1986–87	4.5	2.7
1987–88	3.5	2.0
1988–89	3.5	2.0
1989–90	3.5	1.7
1990–91	3.0	1.4
1991–92	3.5	1.5
1992–93	4.0	1.5
1993–94	4.0	1.5
1994–95	3.5	1.2
1996–97	2.5	0.8
1997–98	2.5	0.8

Mr. Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the present size of the contingency reserve for (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–00, what allocations out of these reserves have so far been approved, and if he will make a statement. [11341]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 29 July 1997]: The reserve announced in November 1996 for 1997–98 was £2.5 billion. The main estimates included allocations of £200 million from the reserve to Departments and the summer supplementary estimates included allocations of a further £52 million. The reserve for 1998–99 will be £2.8 billion, reflecting the Chancellor's decision to allocate an extra £1 billion to schools and £1.2 billion for the NHS from the £5 billion reserve set in the November 1996 Budget. The reserve for 1999–00 was set at £7.5 billion in the November 1996 Budget, but the size of the control total and the reserve will be decided as part of the comprehensive spending revenue now underway.

Computer-related Expenditure

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of departmental expenditure on computer-related current and capital work for (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98, (d) 1998–99 and (e) 1999–00; and if he will make a statement. [11368]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 29 July 1997]: The estimated expenditure, for the years required, on computer-related current and capital work, including the salaries of specialist staff, is as follows:

	Current	Capital	Total
1995–96	3,130	4,995	8,125
1996–97	2,812	3,833	6,645
1997–98	4,538	2,200	6,738
1998–99	2,528	1,901	4,429
1999–00	2,484	2,088	4,572

Inflation

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will assess the merits of targeting inflation on the RPIY basis instead of on the RPIX basis; and if he will make a statement. [11373]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 29 July 1997]: RPIX inflation is now a well-understood and accepted measure, RPIY has the property of excluding indirect taxes, which is useful for some purposes, but it does not measure prices actually paid in the shops and it does not measure what inflation would be in the absence of indirect tax changes. It is also less widely used and less well understood. On balance therefore, the Government decided that RPIX was the better target, but the Bank of England will continue to monitor RPIY in its "Inflation Report".

Road Haulage Industry

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will list the tax concession and subsidies from public funds available to the road haulage industry; [11115]

(2) if he will estimate the net subsidy from public funds to the road haulage industry in the last year for which figures are available. [11116]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 29 July 1997]: None. Neither subsidies not tax concessions are available to the road haulage industry.

Air Passenger Duty

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will assess the advantage of waiving air passenger duty on domestic flights to Northern Ireland and offshore islands. [10803]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 29 July 1997]: It would be illegal, under EU law, to waive air passenger duty on domestic flights to Northern Ireland and offshore islands.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the total amount collected in the last financial year from air passenger duty; and how much was collected from (a) domestic scheduled services, (b) international scheduled services and (c) charter services. [10802]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 29 July 1997]: The total revenue collected for air passenger duty in the last financial year—1996–97—was £356 million. We do not have information on revenue from scheduled, international and charter services separately.

Earnings

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the take-home pay at current prices of a married couple with two children with the husband on national average male earnings in (a) 1978–79, (b) 1996–97 and (c) estimated for 1997–98. [10893]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 28 July 1997]: Estimates are given in the table.

Take-home pay for a one earner married couple with two children under 11[1]

	£ per week
1978–79	73.45
1997–98	328.80

[1] Assuming full-time male average earnings, on adult rates for all occupations. Take-home pay is net of child benefit.

Shareholders

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate his Department has made of the number of individuals owning shares in each year since 1979. [10885]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 28 July 1997]: I refer the hon. Member to the then Central Statistical Office, now the Office for National Statistics, report on share ownership at 31 December 1994 published by HMSO and available from the Library of the House.

VAT (Auctions)

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer under what powers the European Commission intends to take the United Kingdom to court over VAT on auctioneers' fees; [11308]

(2) on what date he was notified of the intention of the EU Commission to initiative proceedings against the United Kingdom on VAT on auctions of art, antiques and other items sold at auctions. [11307]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 29 July 1997]: The EC Commission announced its decision to initiate the first formal stage of proceedings in a press release issued on 24 July.

If the EC Commission eventually decides to take the matter to the European Court of Justice, it would do no so under article 169 of the EC treaty.

Excise Duty (Beer)

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the excise duty on beer as a proportion of the price of beer in each year from 1974–75 to 1997–98. [11259]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 29 July 1997]: The table following shows excise duty as a percentage of the price of a pint of bitter in licensed premises, for years up to 1997.

A forecast for 1998 is not available.

Years	Duty as percentage of price
1974–75	28.1
1975–76	26.2
1976–77	25.0
1977–78	23.1
1978–79	20.8
1979–80	20.7
1980–81	24.7
1981–82	25.1
1982–83	24.8
1983–84	23.3
1984–85	23.2
1985–86	22.1
1986–87	21.3
1987–88	20.8
1988–89	19.5
1989–90	18.9
1990–91	18.1
1991–92	17.7
1992–93	17.6
1993–94	16.2
1994–95	16.1
1996–97	15.1

The figures relate to April/May for years up to and including 1993 other than 1979, where the July price has been used. From 1994, the percentage relate to January each year.

Carbon Tax (Aviation Fuel)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has to introduce a carbon tax on aviation fuel. [10801]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 29 July 1997]: I have no such proposals to make at present.

GDP Growth

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the average rate of annual gross domestic product growth in each member of the G7 group of nations over (a) 1974 to 1979, (b) 1979 to 1996, (c) 1975 to 1981, (d) 1981 to 1992 and (e) 1992 to 1996. [10886]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 28 July 1997]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Philip Hammond, dated 30 July 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question on average rates of annual growth in gross domestic product (GDP) in each member of the G7 group of nations.

The Office for National Statistics only collects information on UK GDP.

As regards each member of the G7 group of nations such information as is available is published in the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development publication National Accounts, detailed tables, volume 1, 1997 edition, which is available in the House of Commons Library. Part five of this publication contains GDP volume growth tables, by country, for a run of years.

Abortions

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many abortions were performed and what was the abortion rate by age group for each year since 1990. [11328]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Geoffrey Clifton-Brown, dated 30 July 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply, as Director of the Office for National Statistics, to your recent parliamentary question on the number of abortions since 1990.

The information for England and Wales residents is available in the OPCS/ONS Abortion Statistics publication, Series AB Nos. 17–22, 1990–95. Similar information for 1996 is published in the ONS Monitor Series AB 97/4, Legal abortions in England and Wales 1996. These publications are available in the House of Commons Library.

DEFENCE

Hunting

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will announce which officials will conduct the review of hunting on Ministry of Defence land; [7917]

(2) when he will announce who will give evidence to those conducting the reviews (a) of hunting on MOD land and (b) of hunting on Forestry Commission land. [7865]

Mr. Spellar: The investigation into hunting with hounds on Ministry of Defence land, and the consequences of stopping such hunting, is being carried out by officials in the Defence Estate Organisation. This is an internal review which will take into account those representations received from all interested parties.

The review of hunting on Forestry Commission land is a matter for the Forestry Commission.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) which officials will be involved in the review of hunting on his Department's land; [8847]

(2) who will be invited to give evidence to his review of hunting on his Department's land. [8846]

(3) when he expects to publish the conclusions and evidence of the review of hunting on Ministry of Defence land. [8840]

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the review of hunting on his Department's land will be completed; what is the composition of the body undertaking it; and what are its terms of reference. [8728]

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) who will give evidence to the review of hunting on his Department's land; [10286]

(2) which officials will carry out the review of hunting on his Department's land; [10283]

(3) what factors led him to conduct a review of hunting on his Department's land. [10285]

Mr. Spellar: I refer the hon. Members to the reply that I gave today to the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock).

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many representations he has received from (a) supporters and (b) opponents of hunting on the subject of hunting on Ministry of Defence land; and if he will list them. [8839]

Mr. Spellar: A substantial number of representations has been received both from supporters and from opponents of hunting on Ministry of Defence land. In the absence of their permission to do so, I do not propose to list the names of those individuals who have made such representations.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much he estimates the review of hunting on Ministry of Defence land will cost his Department. [8845]

Mr. Spellar: The review of hunting on Ministry of Defence land and the consequences of stopping such hunting is being conducted by MOD officials as a part of their continuing duties.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what representations he has received from farmers with land adjoining Ministry of Defence land concerning co-operation agreements if hunting is banned; [8841]

(2) what assessment he has made of the potential impact on the armed services if co-operation agreements with farmers of land adjoining Ministry of Defence land were withdrawn following the banning of hunting. [8842]

Mr. Spellar: We have received a number of representations from those with land adjoining or near Ministry of Defence land, concerning continued co-operation with the Military if a decision were taken not to renew licences for fox hunting with hounds on Ministry of Defence land.

We greatly value the excellent relations the armed forces have with landowners throughout the country, and are assessing these responses as part of the review currently being conducted.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons a review of hunting on his Department's land has been commenced; and when it will be conducted. [8844]

Mr. Spellar: The Government came into power with a commitment to allow a free parliamentary vote on hunting with hounds. Against this background, we wish to ascertain the extent to which Ministry of Defence land is used for hunting and what the consequences would be of ending such use. This investigation is not yet complete, but taking full and proper account of the legal issues involved and the fact that it would be wrong to anticipate the outcome of the parliamentary process, the current situation will be allowed to continue. Licences for fox hunting on Ministry of Defence land for the 1997–98 hunting season will be renewed on application. These will be limited to hunts which have traditionally held such licences and the scope and area covered by the licences will not be extended. These licences will contain a termination clause on one month's notice.

Defence Companies

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures are taken to safeguard matters of national security in United Kingdom subsidiaries of foreign-owned defence companies. [11205]

Mr. Spellar: Every defence contractor needing access to information or material marked "confidential" or above requires the appropriate security clearance. A subsidiary of a foreign-owned company must ensure that no foreign national will have access to such information without the approval of my Department. At least 50 per cent. of its UK-resident directors must be UK nationals and the number of foreign nationals transferred from the parent company to work in the UK subsidiary must not be excessive, having regard to all the circumstances. My Department must be satisfied that the arrangements that are made meet UK national security requirements and is assisted in coming to a determination by the Security Service.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what account is taken in procurement decisions of the ultimate ownership of the bidders. [11204]

Mr. Spellar: This is one of the many factors which are taken into consideration when procurement decisions are made.

Strategic Defence Review

Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the conclusions of phase 1 of the strategic defence review under the code of practice on access to official information. [11086]

Mr. George Robertson: I refer the right hon. Member to my reply of 28 July, Official Report, column 75.

Equipment Exhibition

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will cancel the invitation to the three Indonesian generals to attend the Royal Navy and British Army equipment exhibition at Farnborough in September 1997. [8907]

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will refuse permission for representatives of the Indonesian Government to attend the Farnborough arms fair. [11137]

Mr. Spellar: No. It is well understood by all those who attend RNBAEE that the Government consider licence applications for defence exports on a case-by-case basis. Attendance at the exhibition does not imply that we will license the export of any equipment to any particular country.

Duke of York's Royal Military School

Mr. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Duke of York's Royal Military School for 1997–98. [12206]

Mr. Spellar: The chief executive has been set the following key targets for 1997–1998:

1. To achieve 100 per cent. of GCSE passes at grade A* to G.
2. To achieve five or more GCSE passes at grades A* to C for 78 per cent of candidates.
3. To achieve 88 per cent. of A-level passes at grades A to E.
4. To achieve three or more A-level passes at grades A and E for 80 per cent. of candidates.
5. To achieve 34 per cent. of A-level passes at grades A and B.
6. To achieve 100 per cent. award rate for GNVQ advanced and BTEC national diploma courses.
7. To achieve places in higher education for 70 per cent. of sixth form leavers.
8. To achieve a pupil per capita cost of £12,633[1].
9. To generate income of £427,000.
10. To achieve 250 applications for September 1998 intake.

[1] Based on MoD Land and Property valuations as at 1 January 1996.

Service Children's Education

Ms Dari Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for Service Children's Education for 1997–98. [12217]

Mr. Spellar: The chief executive has been set the following key targets for 1997–98:

1. Exceed UK LEA average of pupils gaining A* to C grades in five or more subjects at GCSE by 2 per cent.
2. Exceed UK average percentage pass rate at grades A* to C by 1 per cent.
3. Maintain an overall percentage pass rate for GNVQ intermediate level at 91 per cent.
4. Exceed UK average pass rate at standard attainment tasks and tests—SATS—at each of ages seven, 11, and 14 in English, Maths and Science by 2 per cent.
5. Implement the SCE elements of the MOD scheme(s) for the provision of nursery education overseas from September 1997 for a trial/pilot scheme.
6. To achieve a percentage reduction in real terms in pupil per capita costs—measured against total agency resource costs—of 2.5 per cent.
7. Achieve an index of satisfaction with service children's education within the Army wives continuous attitude survey above 352.
8. Ensure percentage of inquiries and/or requests answered within 10 days of receipt is at least 85 per cent.

Naval Manning Agency

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Naval Manning Agency for 1997–98. [12210]

Dr. Reid: The chief executive of the Naval Manning Agency has been set the following key targets for 1997–98:

1. Greater than 93.7 per cent. of officer billets to be filled.
2. Greater than 94.1 per cent. of Naval rating/Royal Marine other ranks billets to be filled.
3. Total strength of naval personnel measured as three year average to be within 1 per cent. of the set requirement.
4. Greater than 60 per cent. of officers to receive more than 4 months notice for change of employment.
5. Greater than 98 per cent of ratings/other ranks to receive more than the specified notice for change of employment.
6. The number of occurrences where minimum time ashore criteria are not met to be fewer than 150 per year.

7. To achieve a progressive annual 10 per cent. reduction in the number of manpower gaps within the scope of the agency's control.
8. To conduct two bench-marking exercises per year.
9. To produce trial accruals-based accounts for the period 2 July 1996 to 31 March 1997.
10. To produce full accruals-based accounts from 1 April 1997.

Queen Victoria School

Ms Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Queen Victoria School for 1997–98. [12218]

Mr. Spellar: The chief executive has been set the following key targets for 1997–1998:

1. To maintain the staying on rate at school for S4 to S5 at a minimum of 68 per cent. based on a three-year trend.
2. To maintain the percentage of pupils obtaining at least five credit awards at standard grade at 2 per cent. above the average for all Scottish presentations, based on a three-year trend.
3. To maintain a percentage of the presentations at higher grades achieving A to C at least equal to the Scottish average based on three-year trend.
4. To complete the review in all 5–14 subjects by March 1998 in the second phase of planning and development of the 5–14 national programme.
5. To complete the audit requirement for learning support throughout the whole school and modify the school development plan accordingly.
6. To implement measures resulting from the audit of teaching and learning in S4 and S5/S6.
7. To continue with the dynamic programme of measures to ensure a satisfactory report from the welfare inspector required by the Children(Scotland) Act 1995.
8. To prepare appropriate senior staff in the process of conducting individual teacher staff appraisal coupled with subject reviews for introduction by March 1999.
9. To have successfully completed the second phase of admission of girls by March 1998.
10. To implement recommendations of the prep working group by March 1998.
11. To achieve pupil per capita cost of £17,420 by March 1998.
12. To generate commercial income to the school of £20,000 per annum.

Naval Recruiting and Training Agency

Mr. Bruce George: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Naval Recruiting and Training Agency for 1997–98. [12208]

Dr. Reid: The chief executive of the Naval Recruiting and Training Agency has been set the following key targets for 1997–98:

1. Recruiting and initial training: To deliver personnel to the trained strength—or to other training organisations—within 10 per cent. variance from the tasked requirement;
2. Customer satisfaction: To obtain a customer satisfaction rating of at least 83 per cent.
3. Career and pre-joining training: To maintain success rates of 95 per cent. in career training, and 97 per cent. in examined pre-joining training.
4. Royal naval reserve: To increase the strength of the RNR to at least 2,950 by 31 March 1998.
5. Resources: To retain tasked capacity while operating NRTA within its cash provision.
6. Competing for quality: To achieve net benefits of £4.5 million from the partnering arrangement with Flagship Training Ltd.
7. Management information and reporting: To implement the training pipeline management information system by July 1997, to complete the information systems infrastructure project by December 1997, and to implement project capital initial capability by March 1998.
8. HM Treasury Accounts Direction: To include satisfactory dummy auditable accounts in the agency annual report for financial year 1996–97, in preparation for meeting the Treasury accounts direction for financial year 1997–98.

Disposal Sales Agency

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Disposal Sales Agency for 1997–98. [12205]

Mr. Spellar: Since its launch in October 1994, the Disposal Sales Agency has achieved over £340 million in gross sales receipts and has made significant efficiency savings. The following key targets set for the chief executive for this financial year have a continuing focus on receipts, for improvement in the services provided by the agency.

1. To achieve disposal sales income of £48 million from Government-to-Government sales of surplus capital equipment and stores.
2. To achieve disposal sales income of £30 million from commercial sales of MOD's surplus items.
3. To offer the agency's disposal service to the wider public sector market to secure £2 million in sales income on behalf of new non-MOD customers.
4. To expand the agency's disposal services to cover waste disposal for MOD and the wider public sector market—to undertake market research, selection of approved contractors and the placement of appropriate contracts by 31 March 1998.
5. To introduce new agency information technology systems and trial link to IT storage and marketing contractor by 30 September 1997.
6. To secure investors in people accreditation by 31 March 1998.
7. To achieve key targets and other management actions within cash budgetary allocation of £3.5 million.

Regimental Museums

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to review the public funding of regimental museums. [7114]

Mr. Spellar: The funding of regimental and corps museums was reviewed in 1995. This led to a decision to reduce the funds allocated to museum operation by 12.7 per cent. from April 1998. Since then, an Army museums panel has been constituted whose responsibilities include reviewing the allocation of public funds that are applied to the operation of regimental and corps museums.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he or his Department have had with the Department of National Heritage concerning attracting a wider range of sources of funding for regimental museums. [7115]

Mr. Spellar: An Army museums panel has been established with responsibility for guiding policy for regimental and corps museums. The panel includes representation from the Museums and Galleries Commission, and the Department of National Heritage. The panel as a whole considers opportunities for alternative sources of funding including bids to the heritage lottery fund. Three regimental museums have so far obtained HLF funding.

Army Personnel

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what figure for personnel in the Army will be used as the benchmark under the current defence review. [11088]

Dr. Reid: The strategic defence review will decide upon the size and structure of the Army in accordance with what is needed to meet our nation's interests and commitments. There is no benchmark figure for the strength of the Army in relation to the review.

Mr. Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures he has taken to retain, recruit and re-enlist service personnel to fill vacancies in the Army. [11087]

Dr. Reid: The Army has a number of initiatives in place to ensure that personnel of the right quality are retained in the service in sufficient numbers. This includes retention bonuses to target specific groups of soldiers where retention problems have been identified, for example in the Household Cavalry, the Royal Armoured Corps, the Royal Artillery and the infantry. In addition, re-enlistment bounties are available to ex-regular soldiers in the above regiments and corps who agree to rejoin the active list. A recruiting bounty is also payable to serving soldiers in the arms with particular recruiting difficulties, who sponsor a recruit to join their regiment or corps.

Recruiting for the Army is a continuous process, but from time to time, campaigns are undertaken to target specific population groups. At the present moment, there is an enhanced summer advertising campaign in progress, which is aimed at 16 and 17-year-olds who have just left school. Other measures planned and approved are the Army Foundation college, due to open in September 1998, and the Scotland school leavers scheme, due to begin its first course in January 1998. This scheme is a short-term measure to address the acute manpower shortages in the Scottish infantry. Both these schemes are aimed at 16-year-old school leavers and will provide a good grounding in core skills in the NVQ/SCOTVEC schemes, as well as basic military training. In addition, I have approved the retention of 41 high street Army careers information offices until at least 2000. Further measures are being considered.

Mark 2 Chinook

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what problems have been reported to his Department with the mark 2 Chinook helicopter since 1993. [11203]

Mr. Spellar: We regularly receive service bulletins from the manufacturers of the aircraft and its engines which identify potential, or actual, technical problems. Appropriate action is taken to respond to this advice. No major problems have been reported since the aircraft entered service with the RAF in November 1993.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what trials his Department is conducting to investigate the operational safety of the mark 2 Chinook. [11201]

Mr. Spellar: All trials are aimed at ensuring that an aircraft is safe for operational use. For the Chinook HC Mk2, flight trials are currently taking place, or are planned, to extend the operational capability of the aircraft within the manufacturer's cleared flight envelope and to evaluate new equipments.

Injured Service Personnel

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel in the (a) Army, (b) Navy and (c) RAF have invalided out due to injuries received during non-combatant duties in the last 10 years. [10433]

Dr. Reid: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Royal Navy	Army	Royal Air Force
1987	64	121	12
1988	57	160	29
1989	70	182	18
1990	36	132	16
1991	21	55	17
1992	24	122	18
1993	26	139	12
1994	64	213	23
1995	98	390	46
1996	106	482	59

1. Figures are for calendar years and are as at 25 July 1997.
2. Army figures include Gurkhas.

Service Colleges

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the cost is (a) in cash terms and (b) as a percentage of the annual defence budget of (i) amalgamating the Royal naval college Greenwich and the Army staff college Camberley, and (ii) establishing and running the Joint Service Command and Staff College at Bracknell until its move to a permanent site at Watchfield, Wiltshire. [8192]

Dr. Reid: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of the letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Press Releases

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much her Department spends on biking press releases to (a) hon. Members and (b) other individuals or groups, each time her Department issues a press release; how many such press releases were issued by her Department (i) in the period 1 May to 1 July and

(ii) in the period 1 January to 1 March; and if she will review her Department's use of couriers to deliver press releases and investigate the possibility of using fax or e-mail. [8815]

Mr. Field [holding answer 17 July 1997]: The Department of Social Security's press releases are made available to hon. Members and to the media via the Central Office of Information's news distribution service. NDS's delivery mechanisms include a newswire service which, among others, supplies press releases to the parliamentary online information service, which can be accessed by all Members of Parliament and peers, hand deliveries, fax and postal services, online databases and a widely accessed world wide web site.

These methods are used either singly or in combination to ensure the most cost-effective methods are used to reach the relevant target audiences and to suit the nature of the documents—for example, whether press releases are dispatched on their own, or accompanied by reports, consultation documents and so on. No separate costing is available for the hand delivery service alone.

The Department also runs its own mailing list for press releases for organisations such as welfare rights and charities. This is a postal service.

The number of press releases issued from 1 May to 1 July was 52 and from 1 January to 1 March was 66.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in what circumstances (a) carers can claim invalid care allowance about the age of 65 years and (b) eligible carers below the age of 65 years can postpone their receipt of invalid care allowance until they reach the age of 65 years or above. [10857]

Mr. Denham: The Government recognise the valuable contribution made by carers to providing community care. Benefit provision is aimed at helping to maintain the income of someone who gives up the opportunity of full-time work to provide care on a regular and substantial basis to a severely disabled person.

One of the qualifying conditions for invalid care allowance is, therefore, that a person has not attained pensionable age. Payments of ICA may continue beyond age 65, if entitlement was established before that age. There is no provision for people to postpone receipt of the benefit.

We are committed to a review with the objective of reducing poverty and welfare dependency and promoting work incentives. Provision for disabled people and their carers will form part of that review.

Employee Relocation Allowances

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to extend the scope of national insurance contributions to employee relocation allowances. [12159]

Mr. Denham: As part of looking for areas in which tax and national insurance could be brought closer together, it has become necessary to examine the national insurance liability of some relocation expenses. Subject to Parliament's approval of regulations, from 6 April 1998, national insurance contributions will be collected on those relocation allowances that do not qualify for tax relief.

In the large majority of cases, national insurance contributions are currently not collected on the relocation allowances paid by employers. By comparison, some allowances do not qualify for any tax exemption whatsoever, while some do. For example, the allowances on which tax is payable include those for additional housing costs incurred if the employee moves to a higher cost area. Other allowances such as legal and estate agents' fees, stamp duty and removal expenses are exempt from tax up to a maximum of £8,000 for each relocation.

This change will bring the two systems closer together over these payments while recognising the important differences between them. The new rules will exclude from national insurance contributions only those allowances that could qualify for tax relief as listed in tax legislation.

This is a fairer way of dealing with the national insurance position on these allowances which are paid to the approximately 120,000 employees who receive help from their employers in work-related moves every year.

The extra revenue to the national insurance fund will amount to about £50 million a year once the charge is fully in place. The fund pays for all contributory benefits. These benefits are extremely important to the people who receive them, including some of the nation's poorest pensioners, and we must ensure that employers and employees pay their fair share.

To assist employers with relocations already planned, these changes will not affect employees who start a job in a new location before 6 April 1998 or their employers. The current treatment will continue to apply for all their relocation payments.

Office Refurbishment

Mr. Terry Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has for the refurbishment of ministerial offices in her Department; and what is the estimated cost of the works and date of completion. [11876]

Mr. Field: There are currently no plans for refurbishing ministerial offices in this Department.

Pensions Review

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the Government's review of pension provision will include (a) occupational and (b) personal pensions. [11821]

Mr. Denham: The Government are committed to support and strengthen the existing framework for occupational pensions, and to create a new framework of secure, flexible and value-for-money stakeholder pensions for those who do not have the opportunity of contributing to a second pension, either because they lack the resources or because they do not have access to a decent second scheme. We also recognise that personal pensions, appropriately regulated, will remain a good option for many.

The review of the central areas of insecurity for elderly people announced on 17 July by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will include all aspects of the basic state pension and its value and second pensions, including occupational pensions, personal pensions and state earnings-related pension scheme.

Benefits Agency (Leeds Offices)

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) for how many hours each Benefits Agency office within the Leeds metropolitan district was open for advice to members of the public during a full working week in May 1997; and what were the comparable figures for May 1996; [10671]

(2) what was the average number of visits by members of the public at each Benefits Agency office in the Leeds metropolitan district during the period April to June 1997; and what were the comparable figures for April to June 1996. [10672]

Mr. Keith Bradley: We will streamline services to provide better, simpler more efficient services to claimants and other customers. Queries on operational matters are for the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, Peter Mathison. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. John Gunnell, dated 29 July 1997:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions about the Benefits Agency offices within the Leeds Metropolitan District.

The information available is shown in the attached tables. The BA district in Leeds has offices at Leeds East, North, North-West, South and West. There has been a BA presence, offering advice and information to unemployed customers, in Employment Service Jobcentres since the introduction of Job Seekers Allowance in October 1996.

The caller offices in Otley, Rothwell and Morley were closed on 31 Janaury 1997 and the opening hours in Leeds East, South and West were extended on 24 February 1997.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Benefits Fraud Hotline

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to her answer on the benefits fraud hotline of 10 July, Official Report, column 591, if the weekly figure for benefit savings of £35 million relates to savings over a 12-month period; and if she will make it her policy in future answers to use the term "weekly benefit" only in circumstances where it is defined in the text. [11111]

Mr. Denham: One of our key aims is to restore confidence in the benefits system by tackling fraud and ensuring value for taxpayers' money. Questions on Benefits Agency operational matters are the responsibility of the chief executive, Peter Mathison. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Paul Burstow, dated 29 July 1997:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking if the weekly figure for benefit savings of £35 million, referred to in my reply dated 9 July 1997, relates to savings over a 12 month period, if she will make it her policy in future answers to use the term weekly benefit only in circumstances where it is defined in the text.

The £35 million weekly benefit savings have been generated since the launch of the Hotline on 5 August 1996 up to the end of May 1997, and relates to a ten month period. For the eleven month period up to the end of June 1997 the cumulative savings figure was £41.91 million. Weekly benefit savings are calculated by taking the difference between the amount incorrectly paid to an individual and the correct amount of benefit due, following intervention of the fraud officer. This amount is multiplied by 32. Based on research which mainly covered Income Support, 32 weeks is the average length of time a claim would have continued if the fraud had not been detected. This multiplier is currently applied to all benefits.

I apologise this was not made clear in my previous reply.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Pensions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate she has made of the increase required in class 1 contribution rates in each year up to 2000–01 if the basic pension were uprated in line with average earnings, relative to the contributions required for price-uprating, assuming that other contribution rates are increased by the same percentage. [10568]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 25 July 1997]: The information is in the table.

Percentage increase in national insurance contribution rates[1]

	1998–99	1999–00	2000–01
Employee Class 1[2]	0.1	0.2	0.4
Employer Class 1 and Class 1A[2]	0.1	0.1	0.2

Source:

Government Actuary's Department.

Notes:

[1] Calculations are based on the 1997 Budget economic assumptions.

[2] Figures have been rounded to the nearest 0.1 per cent.

1. It has been assumed that the cost for all benefits whose rate is the same as the basic state pension, i.e. widow's benefit and the long-term rate of incapacity benefit would rise accordingly.

2. The split of rates between employee and employer contributions was achieved by considering that for an employee on average earnings for a full-time adult, the increase in contributions paid by an employee would be the same as the increase paid by the employer.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost of allowing pensioners to draw their state pensions from the age of 60 years. [7547]

Mr. Denham: It is estimated that the cost of allowing all pensioners to draw their full retirement pension from age 60 would be around £9 billion a year. When changes in incapacity benefit and income-related benefits are taken into account, the net cost would be around £7 billion.

The review of pensions announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will consider all aspects of the basic state retirement pension. However, the Government have no plans to put forward proposals for lowering state pension age.

Notes:

1. Estimates are in respect of 2000–01, and are in 1997–98 prices. They assume the change takes effect from April 2000, with no phasing.

2. The expenditure effects on the national insurance fund have been estimated by the Government Actuary's Department. The income-related benefit offsets have been calculated using the 1997–98 policy simulation model based on the 1994–95 family resources survey and the 1997–98 prices, benefits and earnings levels, and calibrated to the forecasts underlying the 1997 departmental report.

3. Underlying assumptions are that everyone will claim their pension entitlement at 60, and that there will be no behavioural effects—for example, the economic activity and income other than retirement pensions of individuals in benefit units who gain remains constant.

4. Effects on national insurance contributions, rebates and tax have not been taken into account.

Lone Parents

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment she has made of the effects of the reduction in income support levels for lone parents to be introduced in April 1998 on the diet and living standards of the children of lone parents remaining on income support. [10768]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Existing recipients of the lone parent rate of the family premium in income support will not be affected as the benefit changes will affect only lone parents making new claims. It is not possible to assess accurately the effect of the reduction in income support levels on the diet and living standards of the children of those lone parents who will make a new claim for income support: individual lone parents will chose to spend their income support in different ways. The best way we can help lone parents to improve significantly their living standards is to help them move into work. That is why we have set up the new deal to help them to do this. Lone parents in work are, on average, £50 a week better off than they are out of work.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations she has received from organisations representing lone parents about (a) the level of income support for lone parents and (b) the level of child benefit for lone parents; and if she will place copies of such representations in the Library. [10770]

Mr. Bradley: Representations about the proposed changes to lone parent benefits were made by a wide variety of organisations, including those representing lone parents, to the Social Security Advisory Committee; the same points have been raised in regular discussions between my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and lone parent organisations. These representations were reflected in the Social Security Advisory Committee's report, which was published on 30 July together with the Government's response as Command Paper 3713. However, lone parent organisations recognise that work offers lone parents the best way to improve their standard of living, and have welcomed the new deal for lone parents.

Departmental Payroll

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list each of the functions relating to the payroll for which her Department is responsible, indicating the management systems purchased, all sub-contractors involved in the work, co-operative arrangements with other Departments and the costs of the systems and processes in the last year for which figures are available. [10744]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The Department of Social Security's payroll function is carried out in-house using an integrated pay and personnel computer system. The networked system is available across the Department for the operation of payroll and personnel management through local personnel units. A database, holding details of employee accounts, shares a mainframe computer with the Department's main benefit processing systems. All DSS staff salaries are paid by the system either monthly or weekly directly into bank accounts via automated credit transfer.

Management of personnel unit operations rests separately with each individual executive agency and department headquarters. An external supplier, Harvest Ltd. has responsibility for Contributions Agency personnel operations. It was the successful bidder in a market test exercise. All other personnel operations are in-house.

Payroll support services, for all agencies, are operated by the Benefits Agency under a joint venture agreement. The central administration, technical support units and IT operations are run from the Department's Newcastle offices. The BA contracts the Information Technology Services Agency for system running, maintenance and support. ITSA in turn manages a series of contracts with external providers of IT services that cover the whole range of administration and benefits systems which the DSS operates. Payroll IT operations form a small part of these total contracts. The external service providers for the Department's IT services, including payroll, are EDS, Sema Group and Bull Systems.

The pay and personnel system is part of the Department's financial and management information system—FAMIS—which also includes its administrative accounting systems. The payroll and personnel element of FAMIS was developed entirely in house, by the BA and ITSA, over a three-year period and has been operating successfully for four years. It now supports six separate pay, grading and reward structures, one for each agency and department headquarters. The system is also responsible for tax and national insurance administration for all DSS staff.

There are no direct, on-going, co-operation arrangements in place for payroll with other Departments apart from standing arrangements for employee transfers between Departments.

Because FAMIS has been designed to support both pay and personnel functions within the Department by the use of a common data base and IT processes, it is not possible to provide costs that solely relate to payroll processing. The information in the following table relates to central business and IT process costs to support both payroll and personnel activity in the Department.

Mortgage Interest Claimants

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many housing benefit and income support for mortgage interest claimants have had their benefit reduced because of non-dependent charges for those with gross weekly incomes of (a) less than £78, (b) between £78 and £115.99, (c) between £116 and £151.99, (d) between £152 and £199.99 (£152 plus for income support—jobseeker's allowance only claimants), (e) between £200 and £249.99 and (f) £250 or more. [10595]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Our objective is to reduce poverty and welfare dependency and to promote work incentives. We will develop a system that supports work, savings and honesty.

Information is not yet available in relation to the income bands requested, which relate to April 1997 benefit rates. The latest information available for housing benefit is that for May 1995 and for income support mortgage interest is that for August 1996. This information is set out in the table and relates to the gross income bands in force at the relevant times.

	Number
All housing benefit cases with non-dependant deductions May 1995	136,000
Number of non-dependant deductions	140,000
Gross income < £74.00	19,000
Gross income £74.00–£110.99	26,000
Gross income £111.00–£144.99	32,000
Gross income £145.00 and over	62,000

The data refer to the number of housing benefit recipients who have non-dependants in work and the number of actual non-dependants with gross income within each band.

	Number
All income support mortgage interest cases with non-dependant deductions (August 1996)	32,000
Number of non-dependant deductions	4,000
Gross income < £76.00	29,000
Gross income £76.00–£113.99	4,000
Gross income £114.00–£149.99	4,000
Gross income £150.00 and over	8,000

Notes:

The lowest income band shown in the income support tables includes deductions made at the lowest fixed rate where the non-dependant is on income support or their gross weekly earnings have not been specified.

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will provide a breakdown of the (a) age, (b) gender, (c) race and (d) household type of claimants who have their housing benefit or income support for mortgage interest reduced because of non-dependent charges. [10594]

Mr. Bradley: Our objective is to reduce poverty and welfare dependency and to promote work incentives. We will develop a system that supports work, savings and honesty.

The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table. The latest date information is available for housing benefit is May 1995; for income support it is August 1996. Information on gender and race for housing benefit claimants and on race for income support mortgage interest claimants is not available.

Social Security Benefits

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment she has made of the numbers and proportion of unemployed persons who are not in receipt of any social security benefit. [10434]

Mr. Keith Bradley: In 1995–96, there were on average about 600,000 persons who were unemployed and not receiving any social security benefit excluding child benefit. This represents about one in four of the total number of persons unemployed. Approximately 70 per cent. of these had working partners or shared a household containing at least one working person.

The Government believe that work is the best form of welfare for people of working age. Our welfare-to-work objectives are to provide work incentives, reduce poverty and welfare dependency and strike a new balance between responsibilities and rights.

Note:

An approximation to the International Llabour Organisation definition of unemployed was used.

Cervical Spondylosis

Mr. Alan Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations she has received in respect of making cervical spondylosis an industrial disease in respect of train drivers and if she will make a statement. [10652]

Mr. Denham: No such representations have been received.

I am advised on matters relating to the industrial injuries scheme, and in particular on the prescription of diseases, by the independent Industrial Injuries Advisory Council, which continually monitor all publications and research on occupational health matters. I understand that the council found no scientific evidence of a strong occupational link between this disease, which is common in the general population, and any particular occupation.

Widow's Benefits

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims for widow's benefits have been refused in the last year because the claimant's marriage was polygamous. [10290]

Mr. Denham: The Benefits Agency does not keep records of the number of claims for widow's benefits which have been rejected because the claimant's marriage was polygamous.

Sponsored Immigrants

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will introduce proposals to allow sponsored immigrants to claim benefits in the event of their sponsorship agreement breaking down. [10289]

Mr. Keith Bradley: We have no plans to do so.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims for income support have been refused since 5 February 1996 on the ground that the claimant is a sponsored immigrant. [10287]

Mr. Bradley: From May 1996 to April 1997, 129 claims for income support from sponsored immigrants were refused.

Employment Advertisements

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how often since 1992 her Department has been responsible for employment advertisements which contained age restrictions upon those who could apply. [9510]

Mr. Denham: Records of recruitment exercises are available only as far back as 1994. The Department has not used aged restrictions in employment advertisements at any time sine 1994 but in practice does not recruit staff over age 60. This is because the normal retirement age for most grades in DSS is age 60.

Disability Living Allowance

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to enable the disabled to enter part-time employment without loss of the mobility component of disability living allowance. [10398]

Mr. Denham: Work is the best form of welfare for people of working age. Disabled people in receipt of disability living allowance can work either full or part-time with no loss of benefit.

Local Exchange Trading Systems

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer on 26 June, Official Report, column 640, regarding the role of local exchange trading systems in areas of high employment, what are the benefit rules relating to the treatment of LETS; and if she will make a statement. [9906]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Participation in a local exchange trading system scheme is regarded as work for the purposes of jobseeker's allowance and income support. The credits received are taken into account as actual earnings. Family credit, housing benefit and council tax benefit treat LETS credits in same way.

Neither jobseeker's allowance nor income support are payable to people who work for, on average, 16 hours or more a week—24 hours for partners of people receiving income-based jobseeker's allowance or income support.

Where a person spends less than 16 hours a week on LETS activities, the credits are taken into account as earnings subject to the appropriate disregard—normally £5 a week. Any expenses wholly and exclusively defrayed for the purposes of the LETS activity, together with an amount in respect of tax and national insurance contributions, can also be deducted from the earnings.

People claiming unemployment-related benefits must also continue to satisfy the labour market requirements of being available for and actively seeking work. Under jobseeker's allowance, people must normally be available for a minimum of 40 hours a week, but can stipulate their own pattern of availability with the employment officer—within reasonable limits. For jobseekers participating in LETS, this means that they must either be prepared to give up the LETS work to take up a full-time job, or be able to move the LETS activities to avoid any conflict; or be available in accordance with a pattern of work which gives them reasonable prospects of securing employment, while avoiding conflict with their LETS activities.

Civil Servants

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many civil servants there are in total on each payband in her Department. [9585]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is in the tables.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many and what percentage of employees, in each payband, in the quangos for which her Department is responsible, are of (a) Asian origin and (b) Afro-Caribbean origin. [9584]

Mr. Bradley: The information is in the tables.

Income Support

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what evidence she has obtained of work disincentives for people on income support seeking (a) part-time work and (b) full-time work topped-up by family credit; and if she will make a statement. [8198]

Mr. Keith Bradley: A number of studies have been carried out, both by the Department of Social Security and by research organisations, which have looked at possible disincentives to work, for example, studies into the effects of the unemployment and poverty traps. We have studied the findings carefully. The circumstances of lone parents seeking work, for example, were explored in the Department's research "Moving off Income Support:Barriers and Bridges", published last year and this helped develop our proposals for a new deal for lone parents. The report established that a significant obstacle for lone parents moving in to work was the cost of child care and we are addressing this with our national child care strategy and with the recently announced enhancements to the child care disregard, which are the first steps in our programme of helping parents to have access to affordable, good-quality child care if they are to balance work and family life successfully. The new deal for lone parents will be important in our continuing evaluation of barriers to work. We want to make it worth while for people to make the transition into work and ensure a fair return on extra earnings once they are in work. We believe work is the best form of welfare for people of working age.

Modernising the social security system is a key priority of the Government and Martin Taylor, chief executive of Barclays plc, has been appointed to spearhead a Whitehall task force on tax and benefits. The task force will deliver the Government's pledge to streamline and modernise the system to fulfil the objectives of promoting work incentives, reducing poverty and welfare dependency, and strengthening community and family life.

Child Support Agency

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many parents with care of children currently have benefit reductions made under the Child Support Act regulations concerning penalties for failure to co-operate with the CSA; and what has been the total amount of the benefit not paid for this reason in 1997 to date. [10664]

Mr. Keith Bradley: We think it right that lone mothers should co-operate wherever possible in requesting maintenance for their children from the father.

The latest available information is from August 1996, which shows that around 16,000 parents with care in receipt of income support were subject to a benefit reduction for failure to co-operate with the Child Support Agency without good reason. It is not yet possible to assess the total amount of benefit withheld since April this year but, over 1997–98 as a whole, it is estimated that the value of reduced benefit directions in income support will be around £15 million

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much extra the Child Support Agency is budgeting to spend on its telephone operations in 1997–98. [7559]

Mr. Bradley: We expect the Child Support Agency to provide an efficient and effective service to all its clients throughout the child support assessment process. We are looking for substantial and sustained operational improvements from the agency, in particular on getting more maintenance paid, reducing the backlog and improving customer service.

The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Faith Boardman to Mr. Nick Gibb, dated 29 July 1997

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the Child Support Agency budget for telephone operations during 1997–98.

At the present time access to the Agency can be made by means of the National Enquiry Line, Client Helplines, or by direct dial to Child Support Officers in the Child Support Agency Centres and associated Field Offices.

The National Enquiry Line occupies a central location and is available to anyone who has a general enquiry about the Agency. The Agency has a target for answering general enquiries under its Charter Standards: we aim to answer enquiries within 20 seconds during normal working hours. Performance against this standard was 64 per cent. during 1996–97.

A Client Helpline is available in each of the six Centres to deal with clients' case specific enquiries. The Agency has had no target which covers this area, but it is clear that this is an area where the service offered by the Agency has not fully met its customers needs and we are currently looking at the definition of the targets.

I am committed to improving this and plans are in place to improve the service. In 1996–97 the Agency spent £2.2 million on running costs for its telephone system; it is anticipated that £2.7 million will be spent in 1997–98. Overall, the Agency focus is on providing a more efficient and accessible telephone service for clients making best use of its existing resources.

The Agency plans to employ staff to work a wider more flexible range of working patterns over six days a week. This will provide more opportunities for customers to contact the Agency and vice versa, and will enable the Agency to deliver a better standard of customer service through greater use of the telephone. The Agency has also recently initiated an Early Positive Customer Contact project which will increase the use of the telephone by Agency staff at an early stage in our dealings with customers. The aim is that much more of our business will be conducted over the telephone rather than by correspondence, giving customers more opportunity to raise any issues or concerns earlier than at present.

I am very conscious that there are still far too many justified complaints about the standards of basic customer contact and the service we provide. Over the next few years, I am committed to bringing high quality levels of performance to every part of our operation as a matter of routine, thereby reducing the number of complaints received and enhancing the public perception of the Agency.

I hope this is helpful.

Benefit Claimant Inquiries

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which companies have been contracted by the Benefits Agency to handle queries from claimants in the London region in respect of delays in responding to claimants' inquiries. [9173]

Mr. Keith Bradley: One of our key aims is to improve the service provided to claimants and other customers and, where appropriate, by awarding contracts. The current policy on the criterion against which contracts are awarded to companies following tender exercises is value for money. Both quality and whole-life cost are taken into account.

No companies have been contracted by the Benefits Agency to handle queries from claimants in the London region in respect of delays to customers' inquiries. Queries on operational issues are for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. John McDonnell, dated 29 July 1997:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking which companies have been contracted by the Benefits Agency (BA) to handle queries from claimants in the London region in respect of delays in responding to claimants' enquiries.

No companies have been contracted by the BA to handle queries from customers in the London region in respect of delays in responding to customers' enquiries.

Contracts in the London region have been awarded for post opening, switchboard operations, security and general facilities management. Where switchboard operations have been contracted out, the company is responsible for directing the telephone calls to the appropriate section. Only BA staff respond to customers' enquiries.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Pensions and Overseas Benefits Directorate

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how long it takes the pensions and overseas branch to process claims for (a) retirement pensions from those claiming in (i) India, (ii) Pakistan, (iii) Bangladesh, (iv) Australia, (v) South Africa and (vi) Jamaica. [10293]

Mr. Denham: One of our key aims is to improve the service provided to claimants and other customers. Queries on Benefits Agency operational matters are the responsibility of Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Keith Vaz, dated 29 July 1997:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how long it takes the Pensions and Overseas Benefits Directorate to process claims for Retirement Pension and Widow's Benefit for those claiming in (i) India, (ii) Pakistan, (iii) Bangladesh, (iv) Australia, (v) South Africa and (vi) Jamaica.

The information is not available in the format requested as statistics are not available by individual country. Such information as is available is shown in the table below:

Year ending 31 March 1997	Target	Achievement
Retirement pension	65 per cent. in 95 days	76 per cent.
	95 per cent. in 300 days	97 per cent.
Widows benefit	65 per cent. in 185 days	83 per cent.
	95 per cent. in 640 days	98 per cent.

The Pensions and Overseas Benefits Directorate handles claims from customers living in over 230 countries around the world. These claims can take longer to clear than their Great Britain counterparts because confirming life event details, such as births, marriages and deaths, is often not straightforward and documentation which is readily available in the UK can take longer to obtain from other countries.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what recent representations she has received regarding the all-work test; [9776]

(2) what response the Government have made to the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux report published in March entitled, "An Unfit Test". [9775]

Mr. Denham: A number of representations have been received regarding the incapacity benefit all-work test from groups representing disabled people, other interested organisations and individuals affected. I have also seen the recent report by the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux. Some important issues have been raised which will be considered in the context of the general review of social security. Our aim is to provide a system that helps those who can to become financially independent, and focus support on those who cannot.

It is important that the test for incapacity benefit commands confidence as a fair system that appropriately assesses whether an individual is capable of work for benefit purposes.

HEALTH

Private Sector NHS Expenditure

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will publish a breakdown of the £500 million spent by health authorities and trusts with the private sector; [6833]

(2) if he will give a breakdown of expenditure by health authorities and trusts in the private sector in the last year for which figures are available. [11028]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Insulin Pen Needles

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's current policy concerning charges for the provision of diabetic needles by (a) general practitioners and (b) health authorities and trusts; what guidance it provides about such charges; and if that policy and guidance are under review. [9559]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 22 July 1997]: If a general practitioner prescribes, as part of general medical services, a diabetic needle that is listed for the purposes of section 41 of the National Health Service Act 1977, it will be dispensed as part of pharmaceutical services and will attract a prescription charge. The same is true for needles issued to hospital out-patients on prescription by hospital doctors. Under the National Health Services (Charges for Drugs and Appliances) Regulations 1989, as amended, people with diabetes mellitus—except where treatment is by diet alone—are exempt from all prescription charges, including any which would relate to the prescribing of needles.

If a general practitioner himself provides diabetic needles to a patient as part of general medical services, he can make no charge. Likewise, under section 1 of the 1977 Act, health authorities and trusts must not charge for services and equipment, except where the legislation expressly indicates that a charge should be made. In all other cases, including diabetic needles, where a health authority or trust—taking account of resources, needs and clinical priorities locally—decides that a piece of equipment should be provided as part of national health service treatment, it should be provided free of charge. The Department of Health reminded health authorities and trusts of this in executive letter EL(92)20, issued in March 1992. The policy on provision of equipment by the national health service has not changed since then and is still under consideration.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 21 July, Official Report, column 414, on GP prescribing of insulin pen needles, what matters (a) have so far been considered and (b) remain to be considered in his review of insulin pen prescription; and if he will make a statement. [10473]

Mr. Milburn: All relevant aspects of this issue are being considered.

Bad Debt

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the amounts of bad debt and claims abandoned for each health authority in each region broken down by category for the last five years. [10423]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Medical Negligence

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a list of trusts in each region which (a) have and (b) have not subscribed to the clinical negligence scheme for trusts, indicating the cost of each annual premium. [10410]

Mr. Milburn: The latest information will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the incidence of NHS trusts and health authorities rearranging their provisions for medical negligence in seeking to meet the costs of closing deficits by the end of the current financial year; and what restrictions he intends to introduce. [11136]

Mr. Milburn: No such estimate has been made.

National health service trusts and health authorities are expected to make provision in their annual accounts for clinical negligence claims in accordance with directions issued by the Secretary of State. NHS trusts and health authorities in managing their finances should plan for future settlement of claims and ensure that funds are in place for this purpose.

Surplus Property

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS surplus properties are currently occupied and utilised by NHS trusts; and what is their value. [10419]

Mr. Milburn: About 240 properties which are expected to become surplus over the next 10 years, and which have been retained by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, are currently occupied by national health service trusts. These properties, managed by the NHS executive's regional offices, form part of the future land sales programme, and have an approximate open market value of £450 million.

Health Visitors and District Nurses

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representation he has received about the extension of direct employment by GPs of health visitors and district nurses; and what plans he has to consult the relevant professional organisations in respect of this trend. [10484]

Mr. Milburn: The personal medical services pilot scheme enables different models of contracting to be developed and tested by nurses, health visitors and general practitioners. At present, those members of the national health service family who wish to enter into a personal medical services pilot from 1 April 1998 are invited to submit an application to their health authority by 1 November. We have discussed the implementation of the personal medical services pilots with all the relevant professional organisations and have asked officials to continue working closely with them.

Loughborough General Hospital

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects the successful completion of a private finance initiative project to replace Loughborough's general hospital; and if he will make a statement. [10555]

Mr. Milburn: The National Health Service Executive is expecting to receive a revised full business case from Fosse Health NHS trust for the scheme to replace Loughborough's general hospital under the private finance initiative in autumn 1997. The FBC will then be considered for approval.

As a "small-scale" scheme—within NHS executive regional office delegated limits of £10 million—this scheme will not be affected by the prioritisation exercises for the major acute schemes announced on 3 July.

Heart Bypass Surgery

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have been referred for heart bypass surgery in each health authority in the last three years. [10662]

Mr. Boateng: The latest available figures show the number of heart bypass operations carried out in each health authority which has a cardiac surgical unit, during the years 1992–93, 1993–94 and 1994–95. The tables show this information. Information on patients referred for treatment is not collected and data for actual treatment received are collected retrospectively.

Heart Disease

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each health authority, the numbers of those suffering from heart disease who are (a) male and (b) female in the most recent 12–month period. [10661]

Ms Jowell: The only accurate information on heart disease relates to death rates rather than to numbers of those affected. Tables and graphs showing the latest mortality rates from coronary heart disease by health authority are contained in the Public Health Common Data Set for England 1996, volume 1, copies of which are available in the Library.

However, in the 1994 health survey for England, one quarter of the people interviewed considered themselves to have some form of cardiovascular disorder, and 6 per cent. of men and 4 per cent. of women reported having had a heart attack or angina.

Oral Contraceptives

Mr. Singh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many teenage girls have suffered adverse medical consequences as a result of being prescribed oral contraceptives in each of the last five years. [10486]

Mr. Milburn: The information available from the yellow card scheme for adverse reaction reporting is shown in the table. The scheme is voluntary for doctors, dentists, coroners and hospital pharmacists and not all adverse drug reactions are reported. A report of a suspected adverse drug reaction does not necessarily mean that it was caused by the drug, other factors may be contributory.

Numbers of suspected adverse reactions reported to the Committee on Safety of Medicines from 1 Janaury 1992 to 31 December 1996 in teenage girls prescribed oral contraceptives in the United Kingdom

Year	Number of adverse drug reaction reports[1] in teenage girls where an oral contraceptive was a suspect drug
1993	31
1994	20
1995	34
1996	22

[1] Each report relates to one patient.

Mr. Singh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is his Department's policy on the prescription of oral contraceptives to girls aged under 16 years without their parents' knowledge or consent; [10602]

(2) what guidelines his Department has issued on prescription of oral contraceptives to teenage girls under the age of 16 years; [10601]

(3) what monitoring is undertaken to ensure adherence to his Department's guidelines on the prescription of oral contraceptives to teenage girls. [10487]

Ms Jowell: In March 1986, health circular HC(86)1 was issued to health authorities giving guidance on the provision of contraceptive advice and treatment to young people under 16, and to the circumstances in which such advice and treatment can be given without parental knowledge or consent. The circular sets out the criteria upon which a doctor or health professional must be satisfied before prescribing contraception. Copies of the guidance are available in the Library.

The Department of Health's guidance, and professional advice produced by organisations such as the BMA, make it clear that doctors must try to persuade a young person who is unwilling to allow parents or general practitioners to be informed of the importance of doing so. The General Medical Council has also issued guidelines for GPs on this issue. We will be discussing with the health professions and voluntary sector the development of standards to build upon good practice in contraceptive advice and treatment for young people.

Care Definitions

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 8 July, Official Report, column 430, for what reasons he is unable to define (a) top quality primary care (b) continuing care and (c) mental health in (i) quantitative and (ii) qualitative terms. [11054]

Mr. Milburn: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply that I gave on 8 July at column 429, in which we defined the characteristics of top quality care.

Cervical Smear Tests

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) cervical smear tests were performed, (b) abnormalities were discovered and (c) colposcopies were performed at the end of the last three years; and what estimate he has made of the number of lives saved as a result. [10806]

Mr. Boateng: The available information for the years 1993–94 to 1995–96—the latest available—is given in the tables. The Department of Health does not collect figures on the number of colposcopies performed.

(a) Number of cervical smears examined by pathology laboratories in England

Departmental Payroll

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list each of the functions relating to the payroll for which his Department is responsible, indicating the management systems purchased, all sub-contractors involved in the work, co-operative arrangements with other Departments and the costs of the systems and processes in the last year for which figures are available. [10731]

Ms Jowell: The Department has a contract with Chessington Computer Services Ltd. to provide a full on line payroll service using the standard payment input and retrieval system. This service costs £500,000 per year. The Department's pay unit inputs all data to the system and provides an inquiry service to staff. The cost of this service in 1997–98 is £321.365.

Health Authorities (Local Accountability)

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to make health authorities more accountable to local communities. [10757]

Mr. Milburn: Those appointed to serve on health authority boards, in the future, will be more representative of the community they serve. They will have to live in the area, show a commitment to the national health service and will include more users of the NHS, carers and people from the voluntary sector who can speak with a community voice.

Nominations for these posts will be sought from local authorities and local Members of Parliament as well as through advertisements to be placed in the autumn.

Essential Small Pharmacy Scheme

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment he has made of the impact of the essential small pharmacies scheme on the numbers of rural pharmacies; [11151]

(2) how many pharmacies in England received payment under the essential small pharmacy scheme in (a) 1994 and (b) 1997 broken down into (i) metropolitan boroughs, (ii) shire counties and (iii) London; [11149]

(3) what proposals he has to support rural pharmacies. [11150]

Mr. Milburn: The essential small pharmacy scheme exists to provide financial support to pharmacies located more than 1 km from the next nearest pharmacy and which dispense fewer than 18,636 national health service prescriptions in a year. Rural pharmacies can take advantage of the scheme.

The pharmacies in the scheme are split into metropolitan boroughs and shire counties as set out in the table.

Community Nurses (Transport Allowance)

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the uprating of transport allowances to community nurses. [11467]

Mr. Milburn: Allowances for national health service staff on national terms and conditions of service are set by the General Whitley Council for the NHS which consists of management and staff side representatives,The council has no plans at present to increase these allowances, which are reviewed annually.

Health Service Expenditure

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the level of health expenditure at current prices in each of the regions in the United Kingdom in each year since 1979. [11165]

Note:

1. The latest available figures are for 1995–96.
2. The figures have been adjusted to 1997–98 prices.
3. The figures are not directly comparable across all years due to changes in the organisational structure and different accounting policies.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will circulate to each hon. Member a copy of his letter on NHS break-even duties and trust deficit three-year bridging arrangements as set out in his letter of 15 July to trust directors of finance and health authorities. [11858]

Mr. Milburn: Copies of the letter have been placed in the Library.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement of the level of health service inflation for the financial years (a) 1994–95, (b) 1995–96 and (c) 1996–97. [11045]

Mr. Milburn: The Department of Health does not calculate health service inflation.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the impact on baseline expenditure planned for the NHS in 1998–99 of the increase in its gross domestic product deflation from 2.5 per cent. to 2.75 per cent.; and what percentage this figure constitutes of the planned increase in NHS spending in 1998–99; [11043]

(2) what is the cost effect on his planned increase in NHS spending for 1998–99 of the change in the GDP deflator to 2.75 per cent. [11035]

Mr. Milburn: At the time of the November 1996 Budget, the gross domestic product deflator was forecast at 2 per cent. for 1998–99, and the previous Government planned a 0.25 per cent. real terms increase in expenditure on the national health service in England for that year. At the time of the July 1997 Budget, the Chancellor revised the gross domestic product deflator forecast to 2.75 per cent. for 1998–99.

To maintain the previous Government's planned real terms increase in national health service expenditure in 1998–99 to take account of the change in deflator would have cost £258 million. This is just 14.5 per cent. of the Chancellor's planned increase of £1,775 million in expenditure on the national health service in 1998–99 following the July Budget, which allocated an extra £1 billion to the national health service in England, giving 2.35 per cent. real terms growth.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to paragraph 5.57 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1997–98", what are the assumptions for efficiency savings for the financial year 1998–99. [11855]

Mr. Milburn: Decisions on the allocation between programmes of the additional resources for the national health service as announced in the Budget, and the related efficiency savings, have not yet been taken.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much he expects to save by reducing the administration and management costs of running the NHS in England for the financial years (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99, (c) 1999–2000, (d) 2000–01 and (e) 2001–02. [11037]

Mr. Milburn: We have set targets to reduce the costs of managing the national health service by £100 million in 1997–98. This represents a significant investment into direct patient services and away from bureaucracy, in line with our commitment to ensure that more of every pound spent in the NHS goes on frontline patient services.

The NHS Executive is working with the NHS to assess the scope for further reductions in the costs of managing the NHS in 1998–99 and beyond.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will express management and administrative staff costs for the financial years (a) 1992–93 and (b) 1997–98 as a percentage of total NHS expenditure. [11041]

Mr. Milburn: Information for 1997–98 is not available. The most recent information is set out in the table.

Expenditure on the salaries and wages of general and senior managers and administration and clerical staff costs as a percentage of total revenue (HCHS) expenditure

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimates he has made of the effect on NHS expenditure in 1998–99 from the ending of payable tax credit to exempt institutions. [11360]

Mr. Milburn: The withdrawal of advance corporation tax credits has no effect on national health service expenditure. I refer the right hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer on 14 July 1997, column 1.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the additional cost to the NHS in 1998–99 of an overall pay settlement under which wages and salaries rose by 1 per cent. above the gross domestic product deflator. [11274]

Mr. Milburn: None.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the administrative cost of the internal market of the NHS in 1996–97. [11276]

Mr. Milburn: There are no official estimates of the additional costs associated with the internal market, but independent commentators have in the past suggested a figure of £1.5 billion.

The Government's job now is to ensure that effective action is taken to root out unnecessary bureaucracy to ensure that more of every pound spent in the national health service goes on front-line patient services.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what amount of his recently announced increase in NHS spending for 1998–99 will be available for capital expenditure. [11277]

Mr. Milburn: Decisions on the allocation between programmes of the additional resources for the national health service announced in the Budget have yet to be decided.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimate he has made of the incidence of the use of moneys from the emergency contingency funds of NHS organisations in closing the deficits by the end of the current financial year; and what restrictions he intends to introduce; [11130]

(2) what estimate he has made of the incidence of inter-trust health authority brokerage arrangements for the transfer of cash to meet the cost of closing deficits by the end of the current financial year; and what restrictions he intends to introduce; [11131]

(3) what estimate he has made of the incidence of the rescheduling of debt payments by local NHS organisations to regional NHS executive organisations in seeking to meet the cost of closing deficits by the end of the current financial year; and what restrictions he intends to introduce. [11135]

Mr. Milburn: Whatever contingency funds are kept by national health service organisations are a matter for the management of the organisations concerned.

The inter-year flexibility arrangements—otherwise known as brokerage—which apply to trusts and health authorities do not address the issue of income and expenditure deficits. Their purpose is to ensure maximum use of the cash resources made available to the NHS as a whole in the financial year. Where appropriate, the external financing limits of trusts and the cash limits of health authorities forecasting cash underspends are reduced and those of other trusts and health authorities requiring temporary in-year assistance with their cash flow are increased. These transactions are normally reversed the following year. These arrangements work well and there are no plans to restrict them.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the scale of the use of GP fundholder savings in helping health authorities and trusts meet closing of deficit requirements by the end of the current financial year; and what restrictions he intends to introduce. [11132]

Mr. Milburn: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him today.

Fundholders may voluntarily return to their health authority savings which they do not wish to spend. There is no system in place to enable fundholders to give their savings to trusts to meet deficits.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the scale of the exercise and what restrictions he intends to introduce in the case of the downward revaluation of NHS assets so as to reduce the 6 per cent. return on assets requirements in seeking to meet the costs of closing deficits by the end of the current financial year by NHS trusts. [11133]

Mr. Milburn: There is no exercise under way or planned to restrict or systematically reduce the valuation of national health service assets or the requirements to make a 6 per cent. return on them. Health authority allocations and trust prices have already been set on the basis of estimated capital charges for 1997–98 and there are no plans to change them.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the incidence of, and what restrictions he intends to introduce in the case of, the use of recovery strategy by health authorities and NHS trusts that carry forward deficits for (a) two and (b) three years that would otherwise have to be terminated by the end of the current financial year. [11134]

Mr. Milburn: In the normal course of events, health authorities and trusts can be expected to run small surpluses and deficits which even out over a run of years. Health authorities and trusts which have significant financial problems are required to draw up robust recovery plans for approval and monitoring by the National Health Service Executive. These recovery plans are kept under regular review.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what expenditure is planned by each health authority on (a) non-NHS purchases, (b) extra-contractual referrals and (c) medical negligence claims. [10422]

Mr. Milburn: I shall write to the hon. Member in due course with such information as is available.

Melatonin

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps he is taking to stop the sale of naturally occurring melatonin in health food shops; what representations he has received calling for chemical equivalents to be available on prescription; and what assessment he has made of the differences between the two products; [11629]

(2) what proposals he has for making melatonin available as a dietary supplement without prescription. [11582]

Mr. Milburn: Melatonin, whatever its source, is an unlicensed medicinal product and available in the United Kingdom only on prescription. It is not a dietary supplement and the Medicines Control Agency has taken action to prevent its unlawful sale or supply in health food shops. If an application for a marketing authorisation for melatonin as a medicinal product is received, the MCA will assess the product in accordance with the law.

Nurses, Midwives and Health Visitors Act 1997

Ann Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to review the Nurses, Midwives and Health Visitors Act 1997. [11826]

Mr. Milburn: The Government have commissioned an independent and fundamental review of the current operations of the five statutory bodies created by the Nurses, Midwives and Health Visitors Act 1997—the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting and the National Boards for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting in the four countries of the United Kingdom.

Independent Advisory Panel

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the independent advisory panel has determined the methods it will use to assess services within its terms of reference; and if he will make a statement. [11046]

Mr. Milburn: The independent advisory panel has been asked to report by the end of October. We expect it to inform us at that stage of the methods that it has used to assess services. The panel is independent. We do not expect to make any statement on its work until we have had an opportunity to consider its findings.

NHS Efficiency Task Force

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when the NHS efficiency task force will report; and if he will make a statement; [11059]

(2) how many meetings the NHS efficiency task force will be holding in 1997–98; [11026]

(3) how many times the national health service efficiency task force has met; [11030]

(4) if he will make a statement on the measures of efficiency which the NHS efficiency task force will use to determine whether its recommendations lead to improve patient care. [11029]

Mr. Milburn: The task force will not produce a formal report, but its initial findings are expected to be available in the autumn. The task force met on 12 June. Individual task force members will work with Ministers and officials to take forward specific areas of work. The effectiveness of the task force will be measured by the short-term savings it is able to make in the national health service without detriment to patient care.

Ministerial Absences

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for himself and each of his Ministers the dates when they plan to be absent from his Department's London office during the months of August and September. [11032]

Ms Jowell: Ministers are required to be available for Government business at all times. Subject to this overall requirement, they may take leave as and when Government business permits, and during this time a duty Minister is always available.

NHS Planning

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which of the targets and standards listed on pages 17 to 21 of "Priorities and Planning Guidance for the NHS 1997–98" he plans to amend. [11024]

Mr. Milburn: A new priorities and planning guidance for the NHS will be published in due course. The Government will be publishing a Green Paper in the autumn outlining proposals for the new public health strategy.

NHS Land and Buildings

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give a breakdown of the land and buildings currently owned by the NHS. [11027]

Mr. Milburn: The buildings owned by the national health service occupy around 315,750,000 sq m on around 16,500 hectares of land owned by the NHS.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the timetable of project targets for each of the major hospital PFI schemes selected to continue towards financial close under the first prioritisation exercise announced on 3 July. [11039]

Mr. Milburn: The selected private finance initiative schemes will have the objective of reaching an early and acceptable financial close over the next 18 months. Officials are now preparing programmes and milestones for these schemes.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which companies or consortiums are involved in each of the major hospital PFI schemes selected under his Department's first prioritisation exercise announced on 3 July. [11038]

Mr. Milburn: The consortiums and the constituent companies for the 14 major acute sector hospital PFI schemes selected to continue towards financial close under the first prioritisation exercise are as follows:

Trust	Consortia	Constituent companies
Dartford and Gravesham NHS Trust	Pentland	Tarmac PFU Ltd. United Medical Enterprise Ltd. Tarmac Service Master Tarmac Construction Ltd.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the time table for construction for the Dartford and Gravesham and the Norfolk and Norwich PFI hospital projects. [11040]

Mr. Milburn: The Norfolk and Norwich Healthcare national health service trust and Dartford and Gravesham NHS trust are working with their private sector partners to the following timetables for the construction of new hospitals under the private finance initiative:

	Start on site	Completion
Norfolk and Norwich Healthcare NHS Trust	Spring 1998	Spring 2001
Dartford and Gravesham NHS Trust	August 1997	Autumn 2000

Clinical Services

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which clinical procedures currently do not meet his Department's clinical effectiveness criteria published in 1996. [11025]

Ms Jowell: The Department of Health does not maintain lists of clinical procedure which have been judged to be "effective" or "ineffective".

Health professionals must use research knowledge about potential effectiveness, their knowledge of the patient, and own professional judgment in order to decide what treatment to provide for any particular patient within their own particular circumstances. Some interventions will be appropriate for certain conditions, but inappropriate for others. The Department, in partnership with the health professions, sponsors a wide range of programmes which aim to bring forward the best possible research-based professional advice and make it available to the NHS.

The Government intend that the NHS should concentrate on the quality and success of treatment, so that effectiveness of services, and outcomes for patients, will become the standards by which we measure the performance of health services.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement listing for each health authority (a) the clinical services which they purchase, (b) the amount spent on each service and (c) the amount spent per patient for each clinical service purchased in the last year for which figures are available. [11031]

Mr. Milburn: Information on the national health services purchased under these headings is not held centrally.

Road Traffic Accident Costs

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what additional revenues he estimates will accrue to the NHS in 1997–98 from the recovery of moneys made by trusts under the terms of the Road Traffic Reduction Act 1997. [11042]

Ms Jowell: None. The Road Traffic Reduction Act does not give revenue-raising powers to national health service trusts.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if income received by an NHS trust from the recoupment of road traffic accident costs is repayable to purchasing authorities. [11279]

Ms Jowell: No, but trusts must take income from this source into account when setting the prices they charge to health authorities and general practitioner fundholders.

Community Mental Health Nurses

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many community mental health nurses were employed in the NHS in each year since 1979. [10904]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 28 July 1997]: The number of community mental health nurses employed by the NHS in each year since 1981—the earliest year for which figures are available—is shown in the table.

NHS hospital and community health services nursing staff in the community psychiatric area of work[1] England, at 30 September each year

NHS Cleaning, Catering and Laundry Services

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much the NHS spent on cleaning, catering and laundry services in (a) 1993–94, (b) 1994–95 and (c) 1996–97. [11275]

Mr. Milburn: For England, the information requested is available only for 1993–94, as shown in table 1, as a result of decisions by Conservative Ministers. In subsequent years, expenditure on cleaning cannot be separately identified and information on catering and laundry is confined to expenditure on external contracts as contained in table 2. Data for 1996–97 are not yet available.

Table 1: Expenditure by health authorities and NHS trusts on cleaning, catering and laundry services 1993–94—England

	Total £000
Cleaning	426,745
Catering	446,219
Laundry	164,693

Prescription Fraud

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he plans to publish his estimates of the savings which will result from his efficiency scrutiny report into prescription fraud. [11278]

Mr. Milburn: We shall publish estimates of savings later this summer, once a full assessment of the recommendations has been completed.

Dental Services

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the spending on (a) NHS dentistry and (b) directly employed NHS community dentists for each of the last five years. [11091]

Mr. Milburn: Expenditure on general dental services, the main element of national health service dentistry, and the community dental services in England between 1992–93 and 1996–97 is given in the tables. For the CDS in 1994–95 and 1995–96, we have only information provided by NHS trusts on their expenditure on paediatric dental community services. Information for 1996–97 will not be available until the end of the year.

Table 1: General dental service: Expenditure[1] on NHS dentistry from the year ending 1992–93 to 1996–97

Expenditure on general dental services, England

£ million

Year	Gross expenditure	Net expenditure
1992–93	1,306	911
1993–94	1,222	855
1994–95	1,279	896
1995–96	1,290	908
1996–97[2]	1,323	940

[2] Data for 1996—97 is provisional.

Table 2: Expenditure on the community dental service from year ending 1992–93 to 1993–94

Expenditure on community dental services, England £ million

Year	Expenditure
1993–94[1]	78.5

[1] The figures include all expenditure on clinical dentists and medical anaesthetic staff together with technical dental and secretarial support staff. It also includes staff expenses, drugs, other medical supplies, and all furniture and equipment. Based on annual financial returns of regional and district health authorities, and NHS trusts.

Table 3: Expenditure on the paediatric dental community service from year ending 1994–95 to 1995–96

Expenditure on paediatric dental community service, England

£ million

Year	Expenditure
1995–96[1]	88.4

[1] The figures include all expenditure on surveillance, investigation and treatment of dental disease in the community. It also includes overheads. The figure excludes dental health education and costs of fluoridation.

Ministerial Engagements

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list for himself and each of his Ministers (a) the official engagements, meetings and functions to which they are currently committed until the end of the year, (b) the dates of these engagements, (c) the activity the Ministers will be carrying out and (d) if a speech is being made; [11034]

(2) if he will publish a list of the organisations he and each of his Ministers are committed to meeting between now and the end of the year; and when these meetings will take place. [11033]

Mr. Dobson: Ministers attend a variety of meetings, throughout the year which are all subject to confirmation. It would be open to misunderstanding and therefore potentially misleading to provide provisional details of meetings which may or may not take place.

Tobacco Duty

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the health implications of the introduction of a banding of tobacco products duty related to their nicotine content; and if he will promote the introduction of such banding. [11269]

Ms Jowell: Given the recognised dangers of cigarettes, the best advice for smokers must always be to give up.

We recognise that for many this is a difficult option, and how best to limit the addictive properties of cigarettes will be considered, together with all other aspects of harm reduction, in the preparation of the Government's tobacco control strategy.

Hove General Hospital

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he was informed of the closure of Hove general hospital by Brighton Health Care NHS trust; and if he will discuss this matter with the chief executive of the trust. [10789]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 28 July 1997]: The closure of Hove general hospital is part of the plan to redevelop the Royal Sussex county hospital agreed following public consultation in 1991, and approved by Ministers in March 1994. We understand that the services currently provided at the hospital will be provided from the new polyclinic in Hove and Brighton general hospital.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients waited over a year for hospital treatment in each year since 1979. [10907]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 28 July 1997]: Information on patients waiting over a year for treatment on either an ordinary or day care basis at national health service hospitals in England is given in the table. The first information available for day cases was for 31 September 1987.

	Number of patients waiting more than 12 months as at 31 March:

Consultant Geriatricians

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many consultant geriatricians were employed in the NHS in each year since 1979. [10903]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 28 July 1997]: The latest available information is shown in the table.

Whole-time equivalent of hospital medical consultant geriatricians in England at 30 September each year from 1979 to 1995

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Shadow Tolling

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 22 July, Official Report, column 494, when he expects to be able to make an announcement on the outcome of the development work on shadow toll payment mechanisms. [10681]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 22 July, Official Report, column 494.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 22 July, Official Report, column 494, if he will announce whether the development work on payment mechanisms for possible application to the A40 west London approach and A13 Thames gateway design, build, finance and operate projects has been successful at the same time as he announces the results of the accelerated review. [10678]

Ms Jackson: My right hon. Friend the Minister of Transport announced on 28 July the decisions reached on the accelerated review. As part of that statement, he announced that the A40 west London approach scheme had been cancelled and that the A13 Thames gateway DBFO would go ahead. The development work on the payment mechanisms for the A13 is not yet complete and will be announced in due course.

Rail Cancellations

Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proportion of scheduled rail services were cancelled in each year since 1979. [11359]

Ms Glenda Jackson: [holding answer 29 July 1997]: My Department holds information relating to the last five years. Trains booked to run, and trains actually run, for the five years ending 31 March 1997 were as follows:

Year ending	Trains booked	Trains run	Cancelled
31 March 1993	2,827,200	2,790,400	36,800 (1.30 per cent.)
31 March 1994	3,178,600	3,141,600	37,000 (1.17 per cent.)
31 March 1995	3,183,800	3,144,800	39,000 (1.22 per cent.)
31 March 1996	3,413,900	3,374,000	39,900 (1.17 per cent.)

Source:

DETR. Figures are rounded to the nearest 100 trains. Figures relate to scheduled domestic passenger services only. "Cancelled" trains are those which did not run at all, and do not include trains which terminated early, omitted certain station calls, or suffered extensive delay.

Rail Network (Assaults)

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what was the total number of assaults on (a) staff and (b) passengers on trains in each train operating company area in each of the last five years; [11464]

(2) what was the total number of assaults on (a) staff and (b) passengers at stations in each train operating company area in each of the last five year. [11465]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This information is not available in the format requested. However, the tables detail the number of notifiable assaults on staff and passengers on trains and at rail stations for 1994–95, 1995–96, and 1996–97, broken down by British Transport police area. Figures for previous years are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

London Underground (Accidents)

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many (a) fatal, (b) serious and (c) minor injuries were suffered by (i) passengers and (ii) employees of London Underground in each of the last 10 years. [11463]

Ms. Glenda Jackson: Information for the period 1987–95 was provided in a written answer to the hon. Member on 22 Janaury 1996, Official Report, column 23, based on statistics from London Underground. The reporting arrangements were changed in 1995 and statistics are no longer collected in the same manner. Information for financial year 1995–96—from "Railway Safety—HM Chief Inspector of Railways' report on the safety record of railways in Great Britain for 1995–96" copies of which are available in the House of Commons Library—is provided in the table.

Figures for 1996–97 are currently being prepared and will be published by the Health and Safety Executive in the next few weeks.

Bus Services

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will introduce measures to regulate bus services to prevent bus companies from reducing services in order to increase profits. [10583]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Such matters will be considered as part of our review of bus policy announced by the Minister of Transport on 25 June.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the proposed withdrawal of the 726 bus route. [11332]

Ms Jackson: I understand that the proposal to withdraw the service is currently the subject of consultation, but this is an operational matter for London Transport Buses.

Stagecoach plc

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received on the (a) services and (b) staff conditions provided by Stagecoach plc from (i) the Stroud parliamentary constituency and (ii) elsewhere. [10584]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Since 1 May, my Department has received 28 letters about Stagecoach bus services—of which four came from members of the public in my hon. Friend's constituency—and four letters, of which two came from my hon. Friend's constituency, about the staff conditions of Stagecoach group bus operators.

Stagecoach does not operate any railway services to Stroud but, since 1 May, the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising has received 59 letters about rail services provided by South West Trains Ltd. and Island Line Ltd., which are part of the Stagecoach group, and four letters about staff conditions. In addition, a further 38 letters have been received regarding restrictions on the carriage of bicycles on new rolling stock which is to be introduced.

Marchioness Incident

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to hold a public inquiry into the sinking of the Marchioness. [11320]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government are considering the case for a public inquiry into the disaster. I will be meeting representatives of the Marchioness Action Group next month to discuss their request for a full and open inquiry. An announcement will be made as soon as a decision is reached.

Bus Fuel Duty

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what assessment he has made of the impact of the bus fuel duty rebate on the provision of an extensive bus transport network; [11265]

(2) what plans he has to restore the full rate of rebate in respect of bus fuel duty; [11266]

(3) if he will make a statement on the future of the bus fuel duty rebate. [11267]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I shall be considering all aspects of support for the bus industry with Treasury colleagues as part of the development of an integrated transport policy.

Public Transport Use

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions by what means he intends to increase the number of journeys made on public transport. [11331]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Promoting the use of public transport needs to take place within the context of the integrated transport policy that the Government are developing. This is why an important part of the fundamental review of transport which my Department is currently taking forward is to examine ways of increasing the use of public transport, and or providing genuine choice to meet people's transport needs.

A42/M42 (Subsidence)

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions to what extent mining subsidence caused the damage being repaired currently on the A42/M42; and what is the total cost of this work. [11318]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Paddy Tipping, dated 30 July 1997:

The Minister for Transport in London has asked me to reply to your recent parliamentary question about the A42/M42.

The A42 runs through a mining area and some settlement was expected. The cost of levelling the road is about £500,000. Further settlement is possible.

Heathrow Airport

Mr. Pound: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent representations he has received relating to opportunity slots at Heathrow. [11138]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Since May, my Department has received two letters about opportunity slots, both from operators of business aircraft.

Mr. Pound: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, transport and the Regions what is his Department's policy towards opportunity slots at Heathrow. [11139]

Ms Jackson: The allocation of all slots at Heathrow is the responsibility of the slot co-ordinator, Airport Co-ordination Ltd., which is currently reviewing procedures for opportunity slots in conjunction with the airport operator Heathrow Airport Ltd. I will write to the my hon. Friend in due course on the Department's role.

Railway Stations

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many stations were open for passengers in (a) each of the last five years, (b) 1987, (c) 1982 and (d) 1977. [11574]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information requested is shown in the table.

Number of stations open for passengers in Great Britain

	Number
1977	2,358
1982	2,369
1987–88	2,426
1992–93	2,482
1993–94	2,493
1994–95	2,506
1995–96	2,514
1996–97	2,515

From 1985 onwards, station numbers were recorded at the end of the financial year.

Rail Electrification

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was (a) the number of route miles open to passenger traffic on rail and (b) the total number of route miles on rail in (i) each of the last five years, (ii) 1987, (iii) 1982 and (iv) 1977; what percentage was electrified; what was the number of route miles electrified since the previous year; and what are the estimated figures for the next two years. [11575]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information requested is shown in the table. No estimates are available for the next two years.

Combined Heat and Power

Mr. Leslie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement about the potential for combined heat and power after 2000. [12242]

Mr. Meacher: The Government are committed to increasing the UK's combined heat and power capacity beyond the previous Administration's target of 5,000 MW by 2000. A detailed review of the potential for CHP, carried out for my Department by the environment technology support unit, has now been published, and I will be placing a copy in the Library. The ETSU review indicates the cost-effective potential for CHP in industry, commerce and the public sector as being between 10,000 and 17,000 MW, depending on the assumptions made on future energy prices, users' required rate of return on investment, and other factors. The review does not cover additional CHP in the housing and community heating sectors, or the growth in renewable fuelled CHP, both of which are being separately reviewed.

The Government are now reviewing their detailed CHP target for 2010, and will be consulting the Combined Heat and Power Association and others with an interest. They will make further detailed announcement as part of the new UK climate change programme, to be developed after the Kyoto conference.

Environmental Impact Assessment

Mr. Alan Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he intends to implement directive 97/11/EC on the assessment of the effects of certain public and private projects on the environment; and if he will make a statement. [11981]

Mr. Caborn: The amended environmental impact assessment directive must be implemented by 14 March 1999. The new directive clarifies and amplifies the existing provisions for environmental assessment. It provides a useful tool for the proper assessment of any significant environmental effects of development. It also gives the public greater access to environmental information about such significant projects, enhancing local democracy and ensuring that the decision-making process is open and understood.

I am pleased to announce today the start of the consultation exercise on the principles of implementing the new directive into the town and country planning and other consent systems in England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. Our aim in implementing the directive is to ensure that the process is beneficial in both environmental and economic terms. We are making a number of specific proposals for implementation which will further this aim while still maintaining the flexibility of the current system.

Copies of the consultation paper have been sent to other Government Departments and to a wide range of business, government and environmental organisations. I have also placed copies in the Libraries of both Houses.

Comments on the Government's proposals should be made to the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions by 1 October 1997.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which Government projects have been subjected to an environmental impact assessment since 1 May. [10943]

Mr. Raynsford: Environmental impact assessment is a term used for various types of assessment under a wide range of regulatory regimes. For projects subject to environmental assessment under directive 85/337/EEC on the assessment of the effects of certain public and private projects on the environment—the EIA directive—since 1 May, no Government projects have come forward which require EA under three of the implementing regimes for which my Department is responsible: Highways (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations; Harbour Works (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations; and the Transport and Works (Applications and Objections Procedure) Rules. Information is not yet available for this period for planning applications under the Town and Country Planning (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations.

Opencast Coal Extraction

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he intends to publish a consultation paper on planning policy for opencast coal extraction; and if he will make a statement. [11978]

Mr. Caborn: We have published a consultation document on the review of planning policy for opencast coal today. This consultation paper, which deals with England only, seeks views on the issues raised by the 10-point plan for opencast coal, which we prepared when in opposition, and the options for change. In the light of responses to this consultation, the Government will decide what changes to policy guidance could and should be implemented in interim planning guidance, which would better be accommodated in a full review, planned for 1998, of minerals planning guidance note No. 3—coal mining and colliery spoil disposal—and whether any legislative changes are necessary. I intend that this should be a short but thorough inquiry to remove any uncertainty. Copies of the consultation document will be placed in the Libraries of the House.

The Under-Secretary of State for Scotland, my hon. Friend the Member for Edinburgh, North and Leith (Mr. Chisholm), expects to publish shortly an equivalent paper for Scotland.

Oslo and Paris Convention

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the (a) scope and (b) time scale of the review on the Government's environmental policies on issues relevant to the Ospar Commission. [11865]

Angela Eagle: The review of the UK positions on the issues to be discussed within the Ospar Commission covers all issues relevant to conclusions to be reached by the Commission. It will be completed in time to provide guidance for the UK representatives in those negotiations.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the advantages of lifting the United Kingdom reservations on the Ospar draft objectives relating to (a) the continuous reduction of discharges of hazardous substances to the maritime area, (b) the continuous reduction of discharges of radioactive substances to the maritime area and (c) the prohibition of the dumping of offshore oil installations in the maritime area. [11859]

Angela Eagle: UK reservations on aspects of these instruments are all covered by the review of the UK positions on the issues to be discussed within the Ospar Commission. As I told my right hon. Friend the Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 23 July, Official Report, column 623, I shall write to that hon. Member outlining any major changes on which we decide, and will place a copy of the letter in the Library of the House. I will also send a copy of the letter to the hon. Member for Truro and St. Austell (Mr. Taylor).

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which civil servants are dealing with the review of the Government's environmental policies on issues relevant to the Ospar commission. [11860]

Angela Eagle: All those civil servants who normally deal with the issues concerned.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which other (a) Government Departments and (b) organisations his Department is consulting in the review of the Government's environmental policies on issues relevant to the Ospar commission. [11866]

Angela Eagle: The review of the UK positions on the issues to be discussed within the Ospar Commission is to provide guidance for the representatives of the UK Government in those negotiations. All Government Departments with an interest are therefore being consulted. We are also taking into account such views as have been expressed by other organisations.

Radioactive Waste (Edmonton)

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what amount of radioactive waste was handled by the Edmonton waste incinerator in (a) 1996 and (b) 1997; and what monitoring procedures are in place at the incinerator to monitor levels of radioactivity. [11044]

Angela Eagle: The disposal of radioactive waste is regulated in England and Wales by the Environment Agency under the Radioactive Substances Act 1993. I understand that the agency has neither received an application for authorisation nor issued an authorisation under the Act to dispose of radioactive waste at the Edmonton waste incinerator.

British Waterways Board

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made in implementing the recommendations in the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report published in January 1994 on the British Waterways Board. [11628]

Angela Eagle: The British Waterways Board has now made its third and final response to the report. I am placing a copy in the Library of the House.

Disabled Access

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what actions his Department will take to ensure that renovations carried out by the release of capital receipts as proposed in the Local Government Finance (Supplementary Credit Approvals) Bill take into account the access needs of disabled people. [10859]

Mr. Raynsford: It will be for individual local authorities to determine their local needs and priorities when they apply resources released under the capital receipts initiative. When an authority decides to use resources to support new provision by registered social landlords, that development must meet the Housing Corporation's scheme development standards. These set out minimum requirements for new developments: all passenger lifts must be accessible to those in wheelchairs; new developments for the elderly must take account of their increasing accessibility needs; and properties built for wheelchair users must conform to standards agreed with the National Wheelchair Housing Association Group.

Planning Decision (Cockermouth)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to announce a decision in relation to supermarket planning matters in Cockermouth. [10634]

Nick Raynsford: The Secretary of State expects to be able to announce his decision in respect of the four separate proposals for new large food stores in Cockermouth shortly.

Water Pollution

Mr. Terry Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to introduce further environmental quality standards for the discharges of dangerous substances into controlled waters. [11852]

Mr. Meacher: A consultation paper proposing environmental quality standards for 13 dangerous substances, as defined in directive 76/464/EEC on pollution caused by certain dangerous substances discharged into the aquatic environment of the Community, was issued by my Department in March. It is planned to bring regulations containing these standards before the House shortly. In addition, I have today placed in the Library of the House a consultation paper proposing standards for a further 21 dangerous substances. These substances are:

4-chloro-3-methyl-phenol
2-chlorophenol
2,4-dichlorophenol
2,4 D (ester and non ester)
1,1,1-trichloroethane
1,1,2-trichloroethane
bentazone
benzene biphenyl chloronitrotoluenes
demeton dimethoate linuron
MCPA
mecoprop mevinphos
naphthalene omethoate toluene triazaphos
and xylene

Owner-occupied Housing

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proportion of homes in (a) each region of the United Kingdom and (b) the United Kingdom as a whole were owner-occupied in each year since 1979. [11304]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 29 July 1997]: The latest available estimates, as at end December for each year, are provided in the table.

Water and Sewerage Companies (Investment)

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much has been invested in the water and sewerage systems by each water and sewerage company in each year since 1987. [11195]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 29 July 1997]: Information on water and sewerage companies' investment since privatisation in 1989 is available in the report on the financial performance and capital investment of the water companies in England and Wales published annually by the Office of Water Services. The annual "Waterfacts", published by the Water Services Association, has shown figures for capital expenditure by water and sewerage companies and, before privatisation, by water authorities. Copies of both these publications are in the Library. Expenditure by water authorities included sums spent on some functions, including pollution control, flood protection and land drainage, which in 1989 were transferred to the National Rivers Authority.

Hybrid Wolves

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what conditions his Department places upon the breeding and keeping of hybrid wolf dogs; [11095]

(2) what regulations are in place to monitor the selling of hybrid wolf dogs; [11099]

(3) what assessment he has made of the impact on public safety of the keeping of hybrid wolf dogs in residential areas; [11100]

(4) what studies his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the breeding of hybrid wolf dogs. [11101]

Angela Eagle: The keeping of wolf hybrids is controlled under the Dangerous Wild Animals Act 1976. Under the Act, a licence is required to keep such animals. The issuing of licences and the day-to-day administration of the Act are the responsibility of the relevant local authority.

A licence can be issued only if a local authority is satisfied that it would not be against the public interest on grounds of safety or nuisance; that the applicant is a suitable person to hold a licence; that the proposed accommodation ensures that the animal will not escape, and is suitable from an animal welfare point of view. In issuing licences, local authorities may require restrictions on the movement of the animal from the premises specified in the licence, and impose any other condition which they consider appropriate.

The 1976 Act contains no provisions relating to the breeding or sale of wolf hybrids, and the Department has not undertaken any studies into their breeding. However, in replying to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Caroline Flint) on 9 July 1997, Official Report, column 496, I indicated that the Department will be considering whether further guidance under the Act is required.

Planning Process

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will introduce statutory time limits for the planning process; and if he will make a statement. [11070]

Mr. Raynsford: Article 20 of the Town and Country Planning (General Development Procedure) Order 1995 already specifies the time periods within which planning decisions should be taken and we have no plans to amend this aspect of the legislation. The responses to my Department's recent consultation paper on development plans confirmed the difficulty of setting a statutory timetable for the development plan process which would be appropriate to all authorities. However, certain parts of the process are already subject to time limits and we are considering the scope for extending this. We are also looking at the possibility of requiring authorities publicly to set target timetables for the adoption of their plans, for which they would be accountable locally.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures he proposes to improve the procedures involved in taking planning decisions. [11069]

Mr. Raynsford: We are currently considering what steps might be taken to speed up the planning process and will be announcing our conclusions in due course.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the number of changes of use that occur within use categories in planning terms. [10880]

Mr. Raynsford: Under section 55 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 and the Town and Country Planning (Use Classes) Order 1987, changes of use within individual use classes are not development, do not require planning permission and are therefore not recorded.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will allow objectors the right of appeal in planning matters. [10879]

Mr. Raynsford: We have no plans to extend the right of appeal to third parties in planning cases. It is for elected local authorities to act in the general public interest when determining planning applications. Planning legislation already provides extensive opportunities for members of the public and interested organisations to comment on both draft development plans and individual planning applications.

Plastic Silage Wrap

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will take measures to increase the quantity of waste silage-wrap which goes for recycling. [11148]

Angela Eagle: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Somerton and Frome (Mr. Heath) on Monday 28 July 1997, Official Report, column 48. In addition, we are looking to see what further measures could be taken to increase the quantity of waste silage wrap which is recycled.

Dry Stone Walls

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to (a) prevent the destruction and (b) encourage and improve maintenance of dry stone walls in England and Wales. [11153]

Angela Eagle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Sheffield, Hillsborough (Ms Jackson) on 9 July 1997, Official Report, column 495. Responsibility for dry stone walling in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Estates Renewal Challenge Fund

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many council estates have benefited from the estates renewal challenge fund. [10928]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 28 July 1997]: Sixty-nine estates have received £316 million of funding under rounds 1 and 2 of the estates renewal challenge fund.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list, by year, the number of applications for consent to release organisms genetically modified for ampicillin resistance that have been (a) granted and (b) rejected for the purposes of (i) field testing and (ii) marketing. [10975]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 28 July 1997]: Since the coming into force of the Genetically Modified Organisms (Deliberate Release) Regulations 1992, (i) seven applications to field test genetically modified organisms with the ampicillin-resistance gene, whether the gene be functional or not, have been granted a consent and, (ii) no applications for consent to market GMOs with ampicillin-resistance gene have been received in Great Britain. The numbers by year for the field testing are as follows:

1997	'1+1	0

Applications marked ' had a functional ampicillin resistance gene.

Methyl Bromide

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to tighten controls on the use of methyl bromide. [10967]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 28 July 1997]: EC regulation 3093/94 places a freeze on the production and consumption of methyl bromide at 1991 levels from 1995, and requires a further 25 per cent. cut from 1998. The Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer requires all developed countries to phase out methyl bromide by 2010, with cuts of 25 per cent. in 2001 and 50 per cent. in 2005.

The controls on methyl bromide under the Montreal protocol will be reviewed at the ninth meeting of the parties in September. At the Environment Council in June, Environment Ministers agreed that the controls should be strengthened and that the European Community should propose that the phase-out date for developed countries should be advanced to 2005 subject to exemptions for critical uses. The Community will also propose that there should be an interim cut of 50 per cent. in 2001.

Emissions

Mr. Grieve: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what has been the change in United Kingdom levels of emissions of (a) chlorofluorocarbons and (b) sulphur dioxide since 1979. [10980]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 28 July 1997]: Total UK emissions of sulphur dioxide have decreased from 5,553,000 tonnes in 1979 to 2,365,000 tonnes in 1995, a reduction of 57 per cent.

No information is collected on the level of emissions of CFCs, but information is held on the level of consumption. The earliest data are from 1986, when UK consumption was 58,357 tonnes. This decreased to 1,702 tonnes in 1995, a reduction of 97 per cent.

Environmental and Nature Conservation Bodies

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to review the role of environmental and nature conservation statutory bodies; which bodies will be subject to review; what will be the nature of the review; and what plans he has to consult non-governmental environmental organisations for their views. [10944]

Angela Eagle: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the news release issued by the Deputy Prime Minister on 24 July about the reviews being undertaken by the Department, which includes reviews on the environment, and countryside and rural policy. Copies of the news release have been placed in the House Libraries. Officials conducting the reviews will be interested to receive the views of outside bodies.

Lorries (Noise Pollution)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will take steps to control noise pollution arising from refrigeration units on lorries. [10878]

Angela Eagle: Manufacturers of refrigeration equipment are aware of the nuisance these devices can cause and I understand that noisier separate engines are slowly being replaced with more advanced systems which can be considerably quieter.

Traffic commissioners have powers when considering applications for operator licences to impose operational restrictions on a licence to minimise disturbance and, in certain circumstances, may refuse a licence.

Under part III of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, as amended by the Noise and Statutory Nuisance Act 1993, local authorities have wide-ranging powers to prevent or abate noise nuisance which is prejudicial to health or a common law nuisance and which is emitted from vehicles, machinery and equipment in the street. If a local authority officer judges a problem complained about to be a "statutory nuisance" then he must serve an abatement notice on the person responsible or, where that person cannot be found, by placing the notice on the vehicle. Failure to comply with the terms of a noise abatement notice can result in substantial penalties.

Departmental Payroll

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list each of the functions relating to the payroll for which his Department is responsible, indicating the management systems purchased, all sub-contractors involved in the work, co-operative arrangements with other Departments and the costs of the systems and processes in the last year for which figures are available. [10729]

Angela Eagle: My Department authorises Chessington Computer Services Ltd., through its standard payroll input and retrieval system—SPIRE—to undertake the full range of payroll functions covering all staff including those in next steps agencies and, until 1 August those in the Government Office for the Regions.

My Department also carries out payroll work on behalf of the Office of the Rail Regulator and the London Regional Passengers Committee. Total costs in 1996–97, inclusive of internal and Chessington charges, were £2.04 million.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 23 July, Official Report, column 624, if he will provide an exemplification for each local authority of the revenue support grant they would receive in 1998–99 based on the figures for local government published in the Red Book and adjusted by the Budget, applying the distribution methodology used in the 1997–98 settlement. [10953]

Mr. Raynsford: It is not possible to provide direct exemplifications in the manner requested. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer made stated additions to net total standard spending and net aggregate external funding in the Budget. However, no decision has yet been made on the level of revenue support grant for 1998–99. A decision on the level of revenue support grant for 1998–99 will be announced later this year.

Millennium Experience (Land Decontamination)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures (a) have been taken and (b) will be taken to decontaminate the land which is planned to be developed for the Millennium Experience at Greenwich; and what estimate he has made of the cost of these measures. [10596]

Angela Eagle: Under the terms of the conveyance of the site, British Gas, the original owners, has completed the statutory decontamination of the site of the dome to the requirements of the Environment Agency and the London borough of Greenwich. British Gas contractors are now undertaking the statutory decontamination of the balance of the exhibition site and this work should be completed in October 1997. The cost of the decontamination is borne entirely by British Gas and is commercially confidential.

English Partnerships has completed the development remediation of the site of the dome and will let a contract in August to complete the development remediation of the balance of the exhibition site. English Partnerships' current forecast expenditure on development remediation of the exhibition site is £13 million.

Lophelia Pertusa

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will draw up a species action plan for the conservation of lophelia pertusa. [10657]

Angela Eagle: The UK biodiversity group is currently reviewing the species and habitats for which further national biodiversity action plans should be prepared. It is expected to provide its advice to Government in the autumn.

Water Savings Trust

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to implement the recommendation made by the Environment Committee in its report on water conservation and supply—first report, HC 42, 1996–97, concerning the establishment of a water savings trust. [10648]

Angela Eagle: Water companies are under a duty to promote the efficient use of water by their customers and have prepared water efficiency plans to implement that duty. In addition, the Government have recently established the environmental task force, which may have a role to play, for example through the installation of water-saving devices and promotion of water efficiency. The Government are keen that all complementary avenues, including the possibility of a water saving trust, are investigated, but do not envisage offering any assistance at this stage.

Housing Sites

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will encourage local authorities to identify brown-field sites for new housing wherever possible; and if he will make a statement. [10525]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government already encourage local authorities to reuse previously developed land for housing wherever possible. Some of these sites arise from redevelopment opportunities which cannot always be foreseen, which means that they cannot always be identified in advance. It is therefore important that local planning authorities have clear policies in their development plans that encourage the reuse of previously developed land for housing, particularly within urban areas. This is also an issue that was raised by respondents to last November's Green Paper on household growth; we are currently considering all the responses received.

Oil Extraction (Atlantic Frontier)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the implications of his policy and targets in respect of carbon dioxide emissions for proposals to extract oil in the Atlantic frontier area. [10658]

Angela Eagle: The Government have set themselves challenging domestic target to reduce carbon dioxide emissions by 20 per cent. from 1990 levels by 2010 and we are currently looking at the policy options which could contribute towards that target.

The most recent projections for carbon dioxide emissions, published in energy paper No. 65, take account of likely developments in oil and gas production in the United Kingdom. In 1995, carbon dioxide emissions from oil and gas production accounted for 3.5 per cent. of national carbon dioxide emissions. Any oil production which might take place in the Atlantic frontier is not expected to result in a significant increase or decrease in national carbon dioxide emissions.

Out-of-town Developments

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his policy in respect of future planning applications for out-of-town developments; and if he will make a statement. [10606]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government's planning policy guidance on this issue remains as set out in PPG6: Town Centres and Retail Developments and PPG13: Transport.

Multilateral Investment Agreement

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the compatibility of the latest draft of the multilateral agreement on investment with the Government's policies on sustainable development. [10655]

Angela Eagle: The Government are working hard for a successful conclusion to the negotiations on a multilateral agreement on investment. Our objective is to achieve an agreement with the highest possible standards of investor protection, liberalisation of investment regimes, and effective dispute settlement. But this Government would not agree to an MAI which damages our commitments to sustainable development, environmental protection and core labour standards. We shall therefore continue to work to ensure that these commitments are properly reflected in the agreement.

Waterway Speed Limits

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the cost of changing waterway speed limits and speed limit signs to metric measurements to (a) public funds, (b) the owners of motor boats and cruisers on the Broads and (c) the Broads Authority. [10336]

Angela Eagle: No nationwide assessment has been made. The Broads Authority estimates the total costs of changing its speed limits and signs to metric would be some £54,000. Since the cost of operating the Broads Authority's navigations is financed by users, these costs would be recovered from boaters via their licence fees.

Leasehold Valuation Tribunals

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on progress on the reform of leasehold valuation tribunals. [10241]

Ms Armstrong: Service charge disputes are renowned for causing distress and misery to many leaseholders who have, in the past, had to go to court to challenge unreasonable charges, risking unknown and potentially high costs.

From 1 September, leaseholders will be able to apply to the 11 leasehold valuation tribunals, which will use their specialist professional expertise towards settling these disputes. Leaseholders' risks of incurring large legal bills will also be limited, because the tribunals do not award costs. Applicants will, however, have to pay a fee of up to £500 for each application, although the tribunals will have a discretion to require the other party to the dispute to reimburse this fee.

As well as challenging service charge bills for costs already incurred by the landlord, leaseholders will now be able to challenge works which are proposed. Landlords too will be able to seek a determination that the costs or scope of the proposed works are reasonable before they start spending money.

Bad management is a continuing problem for tenants of flats, who will now also be able to apply to the tribunal instead of the county court for the appointment of a new manager, if the tribunal is satisfied that the landlord has determined, or is likely to demand excessive service charges, or that he has failed to comply with a relevant provision of one of the three approved codes of management practice available.

National Sustainable Development Plan

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans the Government have to introduce an annual national sustainable development plan; and if he will make a statement. [8673]

Angela Eagle: Defining objectives and indicators, and reporting on them, will be an important element of the Government's approach to sustainable development, and we will be considering how to do so in ways which are regular, transparent and accessible.

Offshore Supplies Office

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the members of the board of the Offshore Supplies Office; and which companies they represent. [8989]

Mr. Battle: I have been asked to reply.

The Offshore Supplies Office was renamed the Oil, Gas and petrochemicals Supplies Office but has retained the acronym "OSO". The OSO is advised by a board drawn from the private sector and appointed by Ministers in line with Nolan procedures. Board members give their advice as individuals and do not formally represent their employers.

The following is a list of board members and their employers:

Sir Ian Wood CBE, Chairman and Managing Director, John Wood Group Plc.

Sir Alan Cockshaw, Chairman, AMEC Plc.

Paul Barron, Managing Director, Industrial Gas Turbine Group, European Gas

Turbines Ltd.

John Blythe, Chairman and Chief Executive, Foster Wheeler Ltd.

Tom Cardale, Managing Director, Consolidated Supply Management Ltd.

Rodney Chase, Chief Executive Officer, BP Exploration Company Ltd.

Dr. Chris Fay, Chairman and Chief Executive, Shell UK Ltd.

John Hood, Managing Director, Weir Pumps Ltd.

Alasdair Locke, Chairman, Abbot Group

David Moorhouse, Chief Executive, Kvaerner John Brown

David Varney, Chief Executive, BG Plc

Health and Safety (Prosecutions)

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the number of prosecutions which the Health and Safety Executive has brought against each local authority in England in the last three years; and how many have resulted in convictions. [3252]

Angela Eagle [pursuant to her reply, 12 June 1997, c. 520–22]: In the three years from 1993–94 to 1995–96 the Health and Safety Executive prosecuted local authorities in England 63 times for 92 alleged breaches of health and safety law and secured 87 convictions. Details from HSE's records are shown in the table. This table supersedes that given in the answer to this question on 12 June. Figures for the year April 1996 to March 1997 are not yet available.

Education Expenditure

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the percentage of local authorities' total expenditure spent on education for each county in Wales for the years (a) 1991–92, (b) 1992–93, (c) 1993–94, (d) 1994–95, (e) 1995–96 and (f) 1996–97, ranked in order from the highest percentage to the lowest. [10865]

[1] On 1 April 1995, police authorities became authorities in their own right. Prior to that date, police expenditure formed part of county council overall expenditure. For consistency across years, police expenditure has been excluded throughout.

Higher and further education colleges transferred out of the local authority sector on 1 April 1992 and 1 April 1993 respectively and this may affect patterns of expenditure before and after these dates.

Up to 1995–96 includes county and district services to be consistent with 1996–97 unitary authority figures.

Welsh Assembly

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the administration cost for 1996–97 of each of the executive agencies listed in annexe B of the White Paper on a Welsh Assembly; and if he will make a statement. [11931]

Mr. Ron Davies: The following table sets out the latest available information for those executive agencies listed in annexe B of the White Paper on Welsh devolution:

	Administration costs 1996–97 £ million[1]
Non-departmental public bodies
Welsh Development Agency	20.3
Development Board for Rural Wales	3.4
Land Authority for Wales	1.8
Cardiff Bay Development Corporation	4.3
Wales Tourist Board	4.0
Countryside Council for Wales	8.9
Tai Cymru	2.9
Curriculum and Assessment Authority for Wales	1.6
Welsh National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting	1.0
Higher Education Funding Council for Wales	1.9
Further Education Funding Council for Wales	2.4
Residuary Body for Wales	0.2

	Administration costs 1996–97 £ million[1]
Welsh Language Board	1.1
Agricultural Wages Committees (there are six regional committees in Wales)	0.002
National Museums and Galleries of Wales	10.4
National Library of Wales	4.9
Sports Council for Wales	1.0
Arts Council of Wales	1.8
Royal Commission on the Ancient and Historic Monuments of Wales	1.2
NHS bodies[2]
5 Health Authorities	17.4
2 Special Health Authorities	18.7
29 Trusts	129.7

[1] There is no fixed definition of administration costs and the criteria used vary from organisation to organisation.

[2] The source of these figures is the 1996–97 unaudited accounts and may change. The audited figures for 1996–97 will be available in August/September.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are employed in each of the executive bodies outlined in annexe B of the White Paper on a Welsh Assembly: what changes to these numbers he envisages following the changes to their status proposed in the White Paper; and if he will make a statement. [11929]

Mr. Davies: Details of staff numbers are published annually in "Public Bodies", a Cabinet Office publication, copies of which are available in the Library of the House. I expect that the reforms detailed in the White Paper will lead to efficiencies in the delivery of services, but it is not possible to say precisely at this stage how this will affect staff numbers. This will depend upon decisions yet to be taken by the boards of the bodies concerned, the Welsh Assembly and me.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what savings in administration costs he calculates will accrue from the proposed changes to the executive bodies listed in the White Paper on a Welsh Assembly; and if he will make a statement. [11930]

Mr. Davies: I expect that savings in administration costs will accrue from the abolition or merger of five executive non-departmental public bodies, two special health authorities and two training and enterprise councils, because there will be fewer boards, chief executives and so on. But it is not possible to calculate precisely at this stage what the savings will be, because that depends on decisions yet to be taken by the boards of the bodies concerned, the Welsh Assembly and me.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what will be the cost of setting up the information hotline relating to the Welsh Assembly; and if this figure has been included in his Department's estimates of the cost of disseminating information relating to the Welsh Assembly. [12019]

Mr. Davies: The telephone helpline cost £13,054.25 to set up. This figure has been included in the published estimates. The Government believe that it is necessary that the public be fully informed of their proposals for a Welsh Assembly, the establishment of which was a key element in the election manifesto.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many copies of the White Paper on the Government's proposals for a Welsh Assembly have been printed; what forecasts he has made of their likely sales; what has been the total subsidy towards production of the White Paper to date; and if this figure has been included in his Department's published estimates of the cost of disseminating information relating to the Welsh Assembly. [12020]

Mr. Davies: Twelve thousand five hundred copies of the White Paper have been printed. Sales forecasts for White Papers is a matter for the Stationery Office. However, it is my intention that this document should be easily available to anyone throughout Wales. Up to now, I have agreed a subsidy of £17,200. Any additional subsidy—for example, because of particularly high demand—will be a matter for negotiation between my officials and the Stationery Office. It is my intention that costs will remain within published estimates. The Government believe that it is necessary that the public be fully informed of their proposals for a Welsh Assembly, the establishment of which was a key element in the election manifesto.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will produce a video version of his proposals for a Welsh Assembly carrying subtitles and sign language interpretation. [12002]

Mr. Davies: A printed summary of the Government's proposals will be delivered to every household in Wales. This will be supported by television advertising and telephone helpline. I have no plans to produce a separate video.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will ensure that all publicly broadcast information in relation to the forthcoming referendum in Wales carries subtitles and sign language interpretation. [11999]

Mr. Davies: Television advertising in support of the referendum information campaign will carry Teletext subtitles. I will examine the practicality of also including sign language.

Roads Programme

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what plans he has to build new roads across the Gwent levels; and if he will make a statement; [11902]

(2) if he will list all continuing plans under the roads programme; and if he will make a statement. [11911]

Mr. Hain: My right hon. Friend announced the broad terms of a strategic review of the trunk roads programme in Wales on 3 July, and we are today publishing a consultation document.

The review will be set firmly within the context of the development of a balanced, integrated transport policy for Wales. I intend to take a strategic approach to the process of making decisions on the roads programme, judging proposals—including those relating to the Gwent levels—on the criteria of accessibility, safety, economy and the environment, together with their contribution to the achievement of an integrated strategy.

Copies of the consultation paper are being sent to interested parties and placed in the Library of the House. It is also available on request from my Department.

Family Planning Services

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairmen of the Welsh health authorities concerning recent changes in the provision of family planning services; if he will list recent changes in family planning service provision notified to him; and what guidance he has issued to health authorities on the commissioning of such services. [11927]

Mr. Win Griffiths: I have had no consultation with chairmen of health authorities regarding family planning services. Government policy is that people should be free to choose their source of contraceptive advice and that health authorities' family planning services complement rather than duplicate those services provided by GPs. Guidance which reminded health authorities of their responsibilities was issued to the service in Wales in 1990 and reinforced in 1993 by the "Protocol for Investment in Health Gain: Healthy Living".

Copies of both documents have been placed in the Library of the House.

Ms Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the relationship between changes in the level of provision of family planning services and the number of abortions carried out in Wales. [11928]

Mr. Griffiths: The following figures show the general downward trend of abortions in Wales. The increase in the first quarter of 1996 might be attributable to the reaction to publicity about oral contraceptives and thrombosis in October 1995.

Abortions performed to women resident in Wales

1990: 7,440

1992: 6,856

1993: 6,924

1996: 7,279

Abortions performed in Wales

	1995	1996	Percentage increase from 1995 figure
January–March	1,073	1,226	14
April–June	1,061	1,097	3
July–September	1,115	1,033	–7
October–December	1,107	1,031	–7

St. David's Day

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take steps to have St. David's day made a bank holiday in Wales. [11718]

Mr. Ron Davies: The Government have no current plans to change the bank holiday arrangements in the UK. However, I am sympathetic to the sentiment that my hon. Friend expresses and will seek to promote further consideration of this idea within government.

Business Start-up Scheme

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many unemployed people have qualified for assistance on the business start-up scheme in each of the last five years; and what was the annual expenditure. [12169]

Mr. Hain: The information requested for Wales is given in the following table:

	Number of participants[1]	Expenditure (£ million)
1992–93	2,077	4,683
1993–94	1,957	5,174
1994–95	1,958	4,979
1995–96	1,593	4,821
1996–97	1,679	4,703
Total	9,264	24,360

Aberfan

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will consider restoring to the people of Aberfan the sums taken from them in 1968 towards the cost of removing coal tips above the village. [12269]

Mr. Ron Davies: I have long made clear my view that there should have been no requirement in the first place for a contribution to be made from the disaster fund toward the costs of clearing the tips.

I am pleased to announce today that I shall be making available a grant of £150,000 to repay the sum originally contributed and to supplement provision in the Aberfan disaster fund and in the memorial charity. My Department will be discussing with the trustees how this money can best be spent for the benefit of the community of Aberfan.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what approach he will adopt when considering applications for sanction by local authorities under sections 19 and 20 of the Local Government Act 1982; and if he will make a statement. [12455]

Mr. Win Griffiths: As required by the statute, we shall decide each application for sanction on its merits having regard both to our policy on sanction applications and to the circumstances of the individual case concerned. Our policy is to continue the approach previously followed—that the power to sanction should not be exercised too widely. Sanction may be appropriate in those cases where the expenditure is incurred in good faith, but in ignorance of the strict letter of the law, or inadvertently without observance of requisite formalities, or under such circumstances as make it fair and equitable that the expenditure should not be disallowed by the auditor.

In accordance with our commitment to open government, we will send to the Welsh Local Government Association, the Audit Commission, the Commission for Local Administration in Wales and to all local authorities in Wales a departmental note setting out the basis on which applications for sanctions under sections 19 and 20 of the Local Government Finance Act 1982 are to be made and considered. Copies of the note will be placed in the Library of the House as soon as possible.

Council Tax (Second Homes)

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will review the operation of the legislation on council tax discounts for second homes in Wales. [12456]

Mr. Win Griffiths: My right hon. Friend and I are aware of the concerns of a number of local authorities about the operation of the legislation on council tax discounts for second homes and have decided to review it in partnership with the Welsh Local Government Association.

Small Firms

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to address the implications of the multilateral agreement on investment for small firms in Wales. [10654]

Mrs. Roche: The multilateral agreement on investment will be the first multilateral, comprehensive and legally binding investment instrument and will represent a major step towards a global level playing field for investors. It will create the framework which all businesses need to be able to take international investment decisions with greater confidence.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the investigation by the Legal Aid Board's special investigations unit of the applications for legal aid made by a constituent of the hon. Member for Taunton, whose name has been supplied to him. [11615]

Mr. Hoon: I do not comment on, or intervene in, the award of legal aid in individual cases. I have, however, been advised by the Legal Aid Board that the investigation of the hon. Lady's constituent's means by the special investigations unit is still in progress.

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what measures he is taking to prevent multiple applications to the Legal Aid Board through different regional offices to support unnecessary litigation. [11631]

Mr. Hoon: All application forms for legal aid require the applicant to state if they have applied for legal aid before and, if so, to provide details. The declaration to be signed by the applicant makes clear the range of penalties available if the applicant knowingly gives false information or withholds relevant information.

The Legal Aid Board is introducing a new corporate information system which will give every legally assisted person a unique personal identifier. This will provide board staff with the applicant's full legal aid history, preventing applications relating to the same case from being submitted to more than one regional office.

Departmental Payroll

Mr. Todd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list each of the functions relating to the payroll for which his Department is responsible, indicating the management systems purchased, all subcontractors involved in the work, co-operative arrangements with other Departments and the costs of the systems and processes in the last year for which figures are available. [10733]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor's Department's departmental pay unit is responsible for collating and inputting data to enable the payment of salaries and allowances to staff of the Lord Chancellor's Department, including the Court Service and the Public Trust Office agencies, and to certain full-time judicial officers and judges. The Department also processes data for the payment of fees and retainers for the clerks to the general commissioners of income tax, the Lord Chancellor's advisory committee on legal education and conduct and staff of the legal services ombudsman's office. The unit also inputs data to enable the payments of some pensions.

Payments are actually made by Chessington Computer Services Ltd. on behalf of the Lord Chancellor's Department. It also calculates, deducts and pays income tax and national insurance.

Payment of fees to part-time judicial officers and certain part-time Lord Chancellor's Department staff are processed by local offices within the Lord Chancellor's Department, with deductions for tax and national insurance. Some offices use manual systems, while others use an in-house accounting package for calculation and payment.

For the centralised payroll function, the Department uses SPIRE—standard payroll input and retrieval—a software package operated by Chessington on a bureau basis. This permits the Department's payroll staff to input data on payments and deductions direct to the payroll computer at Chessington.

Staff costs of the Department's pay unit in 1996–97 were £492,952, with £6,817 being spent in postage, training, staff travel and miscellaneous items. Chessington Computer Services Ltd. provided its services at a cost in 1996–97 of £780,867.

Solicitors (Complaints)

Mr. John Cryer: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has for the creation of an independent body to adjudicate on complaints against solicitors. [11226]

Mr. Hoon: The Department has no plans to create a new complaints handling body. The Office for the Supervision of Solicitors was set up by the Law Society in September 1996 and I agree with the legal services ombudsman that it will take two to three years before the office can be properly judged by results.

Waste Minimisation

Ms Walley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to introduce a waste minimisation strategy for his Department. [11571]

Mr. Hoon: As Green Minister for the Lord Chancellor's Department, I am currently revising the Department's environmental strategy and associated action plans. Waste minimisation will be one of the major elements within this strategy.

Ms Walley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on existing targets set to minimise waste within his Department. [11572]

Mr. Hoon: As Green Minister for the Lord Chancellor's Department, I am currently revising the Department's waste management procedures. The information gathered during this process will be used to measure progress in the reduction of levels of waste in due course.

Ms Walley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the amount, and proportion, of paper recycled by his Department in each of the last five years. [11573]

Mr. Hoon: The information requested is not available. The Lord Chancellor's Department has 417 buildings, each with separate contracts for collection of confidential and ordinary waste. The information could not be determined without incurring disproportionate cost. As Green Minister for the Lord Chancellor's Department, I am currently reviewing the arrangements for collection of waste.

The existing arrangement is for confidential waste to be collected by specialist contractors. All other waste is collected through local authorities. Paper collected by our confidential waste contractors is either pulped prior to recycling or incinerated to produce electricity. I intend that all our paper waste should be disposed of in this way.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the Crown Prosecution Service's consideration of the unlawful killing of Mr. Shiji Lapite. [11282]

The Attorney-General: Following the concerns expressed by the divisional court, the Director of Public Prosecutions has, with my full support, commissioned an inquiry into the decision by the Crown Prosecution Service not to bring criminal proceedings following the deaths of Shiji Lapite and Michael O'Brien. It will be headed by His Honour Gerald Butler QC and it will inquire into the considerations by the Crown Prosecution Service of the Lapite and O'Brien cases and, more generally, the process and quality of casework decision making in deaths in custody cases.

His Honour Gerald Butler QC will make such recommendations as appear appropriate and will report to the Director of Public Prosecutions, who will then report to me. The report will be made public.

Ms Beverley Hughes: To ask the Attorney-General what are the terms of reference for the review of the CPS; from what sources evidence and opinions are being sought; and what is the timetable for the review. [12213]

The Attorney-General: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Lincoln (Gillian Merron) on 12 June, Official Report, columns 533–34.

CABINET OFFICE

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister without Portfolio (1) pursuant to his answer of 28 July, Official Report, column 25, for what reasons he is unable to itemise the journeys undertaken at public expense since 2 May; [11804]

(2) what were the objectives of his recent visit to France. [11811]

Mr. Mandelson: I do not propose to disclose the details of conversations, meetings or other engagements undertaken in pursuance of my duties as Minister without Portfolio.

Millennium Dome

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what independent advice he has taken in respect of the environmental impact of (a) the materials and (b) the method of construction identified for the millennium dome. [11878]

Mr. Mandelson: The New Millennium Experience Company, of which I am sole shareholder, has taken the advice of a wide range of organisations in the construction field. Specifically, the environmental consultant, Battle McCarthy, was commissioned to provide advice on the construction of the millennium dome, including its environmental impact. In preparing its report Battle McCarthy drew on the technical expertise of the dome's architects, the Richard Rogers Partnership, and the consulting engineers, Buro Happold.

Ministerial Advisers

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will list the persons who are not established civil servants who advise or assist him in the performance of his ministerial duties indicating their age and previous occupations, the use they make of official accommodation, equipment, facilities, transport and secretarial services, the access they are given to official meetings or unpublished official information, and the person or organisation responsible for their remuneration. [11720]

Mr. Mandelson: I have nothing further to add to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 18 July, Official Report, columns 340–41.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what funding is presently committed from his departmental budget for (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000 to resolve the year 2000 computer problem; and if he will make a statement. [11889]

Dr. David Clark: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. I shall therefore be writing to the hon. Member and will place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Sick Leave

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list for each Department and agency (a) the average days of sick leave, (b) the total days of sick leave and (c) the index figure, taking the civil service average as 100, in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [11504]

Dr. David Clark: The information requested is shown in the tables for 1994 and 1995. It is based on figures in the report "Analysis of Sickness Absence in the Civil Service 1995" prepared for my department by the Occupational Health and Safety Agency Ltd. and published last month. Figures for earlier years could be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

My Department regularly encourages Departments and agencies to review their approaches to sickness absence management.

Next Steps Agencies

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the next steps agencies which have regional administrative structures. [11363]

Dr. David Clark: The next steps agencies which have regional administrative structures are listed:

Armed Forces Personnel Administration Agency
Central Office of Information
Coastguard
Court Service
Defence Dental Agency
Defence Estate Organisation
Defence Evaluation and Research Agency
Defence Postal and Courier Services Agency
Defence Secondary Care Agency
Defence Vetting Agency

Social Security Benefits Agency
Social Security Child Support Agency
Social Security Contributions Agency
Specialist Procurement Services
The Buying Agency
United Kingdom Passport Agency
Valuation Office
Veterinary Laboratories Agency

Principal Civil Service Pension Scheme

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans his Department has to extend benefits currently enjoyed by spouses of members of the principal civil service pension scheme to partners of members who are the same sex or a common law spouse. [11829]

Dr. David Clark: Any extension of benefits would have a cost and could be made only if there is a willingness on the part of scheme members to meet the cost in full.

Civil Servants (Alleged Wrongdoing)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) on how many occasions a civil servant who has reported alleged wrongdoing under the civil service code has reported the matter in writing to the Civil Service Commission; [11814]

(2) on how many occasions since the introduction of the civil service code a civil servant has reported alleged wrongdoing. [11813]

Dr. David Clark: Where a civil servant believes that he or she is being required to act in a way which would be in breach of the Civil Service Code, he or she should report the matter internally in accordance with departmental procedures. If the civil servant involved believes that the response is not a reasonable one, he or she may report the matter in writing to the civil service commissioners.

Two appeals falling within the terms of the civil service code have been investigated by the civil service commissioners and upheld. Details are provided in the commissioners' annual report for 1996–97. A third approach is still the subject of internal departmental procedures. A fourth was resolved within the Department before it became clear whether it fell within the terms of the code.

Information on the number of cases raised under the code, and settled internally within Departments without reference to the commissioners, is not held centrally.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Cattle Cull

Mr. Green: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimates his Department has made of the number of over-30-months scheme cattle in Kent requiring incineration over the next three years. [10355]

Mr. Rooker: A designated abattoir in Kent has been awarded a contract to deal with those animals coming forward for slaughter under the scheme in Kent and the neighbouring counties, notably Sussex and part of Hampshire. It is estimated that 25,000 animals over 30 months of age from these counties will be slaughtered in Kent each year. It is not possible to give an estimate of the numbers which will be incinerated over the next three years because the majority of animals being slaughtered under the scheme at the present time are being rendered prior to disposal. However, a carcase incineration facility may be established adjacent to the over-30-months scheme abattoir in Kent which will offer significant efficiencies.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the average weight of cattle slaughtered under the over-30-months cattle slaughter scheme; and what proportion of the cattle slaughtered under the scheme exceeded that average weight. [10159]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 28 July 1997]: The average weight of cattle slaughtered under the over-30-months slaughter scheme is 595 kg.

Sixty-three per cent. of cattle presented under the scheme weighed more than 595 kg.

Dr. Lewis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cattle weighing (a) between 560 kg and 609 kg, (b) between 610 kg and 659 kg, (c) between 660 kg and 709 kg, (d) between 710 kg and 759 kg and (e) over 760 kg live weight have been slaughtered under the over-30-months cattle slaughter scheme during 1997. [10160]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 28 July 1997]: The information requested is as follows:

Live weight (kg)	Number of cattle presented liveweight	Number of cattle presented deadweight
560–609	29,500	48,135
610–659	22,809	39,849
660–709	12,929	29,699
710–750	5,813	19,827
Over 760	4,744	27,120

Beaufort's Dyke

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Kirkcaldy (Dr. Moonie) of 1 July, Official Report, columns 158–59, what radioactive waste has been dumped in the Rockall or Rockall trough areas, other than that already reported to the International Atomic Energy Agency and listed in IAEA–TEC Doc. 558, March 1991. [11357]

Mr. Rooker: I am not aware of any dumping of radioactive waste in those areas other than those reported in the IAEA document and carried out in 1951 and 1953. The search of archive records referred to in my reply of 1 July was in relation to areas not previously recognised as sites for the disposal of radioactive waste.

Food Standards Agency

Mr Clifton-Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) when he expects to publish the remit of a food standards agency; [11325]

(2) what will be the composition of the membership of the proposed food standards agency. [11326]

Mr. Rooker: The Government will publish a White Paper in the autumn setting out their detailed proposals for a food standards agency in the light of pubic consultation on Professor Philip James's report.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects the Meat Hygiene Service to be incorporated into a new food standards agency. [11324]

Mr. Rooker: The Government are considering all aspects of the structure and remit of the proposed agency, including the question of meat hygiene enforcement, in the light of consultation on Professor James's report. It will publish detailed proposals in a White Paper in the autumn.

Arable Area Payments Scheme

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many payments were made under the arable area payments scheme in 1996 of (a) £0 to £1,000, (b) 1,000 to £5,000, (c) £5,000 to £10,000, (d) £10,000 to £15,000, (e) £15,000 to £20,000, (f) £20,000 to £25,000, (g) £25,000 to £30,000, (h) £30,000 to £40,000, (i) £40,000 to £50,000, (j) £50,000 to £75,000, (k) £75,000 to £100,000, (l) £100,000 to £200,000, (m) £200,000 to £500,000, (n) £500,000 to £1 million, (o) £1 million to £1.5 million and (p) £1.5 million to £2 million. [11314]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 30 July 1997]: The following table sets out the payments made to each claimant by the Ministry under the 1996 arable area payments scheme in the bands requested.

Size band	Number of claimants
(a) £0 to £1,000	2,728
(b) £1,000 to £5,000	15,255
(c) £5,000 to £10,000	4,718
(d) £10,000 to £15,000	4,707
(e) £15,000 to £20,000	3,482
(f) £20,000 to £25,000	2,664
(g) £25,000 to £30,000	1,996
(h) £30,000 to £40,000	3,074
(i) £40,000 to £50,000	1,973
(j) £50,000 to £75,000	2,837
(k) £75,000 to £100,000	1,357
(i) £100,000 to £200,000	1,487
(m) £200,000 to £500,000	327

Size band	Number of claimants
(n) £500,000 to £1 million	27
(o) £1 million to £1.5 million	4
(p) £1.5 million to £2 million	1

In addition, one claimant received payments totalling over £2 million.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many payments of £1 million or more were made under the arable area payments scheme in 1996. [6300]

Mr. Rooker [pursuant to his reply, 1 July 1997, c. 158]: Six.

Waste Minimisation

Ms Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on existing targets set to minimise waste in his Department. [11539]

Mr. Morley: Under the Department's action plan for green housekeeping, there is a requirement on all our sites to minimise the generation of waste. So far, it has not been considered appropriate to set specific targets in what is a diverse and changing departmental estate. Although the scope for setting targets remains under consideration, a series of formal environmental audits of our laboratory sites is planned for later in 1997–98.

Ms Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the amount, and proportion, of paper recycled by his Department in each of the last five years. [11540]

Mr. Morley: This information is not available. Paper recycling schemes are in operation at many of the Ministry's 230 sites and the responsibility for handling such schemes is decentralised. At our London headquarters buildings, 37 tonnes of good-quality waste paper was recycled during 1996–97, which considerably exceeded expectations.

Ms Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to introduce a waste minimisation strategy for his Department. [11538]

Mr. Morley: A waste minimisation strategy already forms part of the Department's action plan for green housekeeping, with the objective of reducing the amount of waste produced, encouraging recycling schemes and reusing materials. A leaflet and notices have been issued to all staff and local campaigns have been undertaken to encourage participation, including exhibitions, presentations and the introduction of schemes for recycling paper, tin cans and other materials.

Pigs (Gas Stunning)

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library a copy of the advice he received from the Farm Animal Welfare Council on the carbon dioxide gas stunning of pigs. [11827]

Mr. Morley: I have placed in the Library a copy of the letter from the Farm Animal Welfare Council dated 1 May 1997. This says that the council would like MAFF to encourage the industry to develop superior stunning and killing methods which move away from stressful handling and that these should make use of non-aversive gas mixtures. FAWC in its letter further recommended that the industry should concentrate on the use of argon to induce anoxia and that high concentrations of carbon dioxide in air should be phased out as systems using alternative gas mixtures became commercially available.

We have commissioned commercial trials using alternative gas mixtures and the next steps we take will depend on the results of these.

We also await formal proposals from the European Commission to add alternative gas mixtures to the permitted methods for stunning animals.

Office Refurbishment

Mr. Terry Lewis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has for the refurbishment of ministerial offices in his Department; and what is the estimated cost of the works and date of completion. [11870]

Mr. Morley: The current Ministry building in Whitehall which houses ministerial offices is in need of major renovation within the next few years. Ministers, and about 76 officials, will therefore move by the end of November to MAFF offices in Nobel house, Smith square.

Details on costs for this move and associated redecoration works were included in the reply given to the hon. Member for Romsey (Mr. Colvin) on 28 July, Official Report, columns 23–24.

Vegetable Oils

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to this answer of 23 July, Official Report, column 639, concerning research into use of crops yielding vegetable oils, if he will list the principal research projects his Department is funding, indicating the cost of each to public funds. [11820]

Mr. Rooker: The information requested is as follows:

Project title	Total cost (£)
Genetic engineering of oilseed rape to produce products of defined acyl variation and low downstream processing	320,697
Oilseed rape seed loss-improving strength of pods by using engineering fracture analysis of genetically diverse pods	348,000
Genetic improvement of oilseed rape for reduced susceptibility to pod shatter	607,193
Regulation of pod shatter in oilseed rape	190,210
A knowledge based assessment of rapeseed oil as a pesticide adjuvant	243,261
Vegetable oils with specific fatty acids	87,840
Pesticide adjuvants from vegetable oils	68,092
Cost benefit assessment, including life cycle analysis, of oils produced from UK-grown crops compared with mineral oils	192,754
Comparative field trials of alternative UK road transport fuels	33,520
Linseed agronomy	1,015,216

Cattle Traceability

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Shrewsbury and Atcham (Mr. Marsden) of 19 June, Official Report, column 286, on cattle traceability, when he expects to implement a system which meets the Florence precondition on cattle traceability. [11637]

Mr. Rooker: We believe that the cattle passport system, introduced on 1 July 1996, fulfils the Florence precondition on cattle traceability in Great Britain. However, a computerised system will improve cattle traceability still further, and is required under recent EU legislation which applies to all member states.

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what actions his Department is taking to proceed with (a) the export certified herds scheme and (b) the date-based scheme. [12199]

Mr. Rooker: On 24 July, my officials discussed both schemes with the EU Commission. As a result, further clarification is to be provided on the date-based scheme. In line with the Florence agreement, the Commission will be putting both schemes to its scientific advisory committees.

State Veterinary Service

Mr. Gale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many veterinarians are currently employed in the State Veterinary Service; and if he will make a statement on the future of the State Veterinary Service with particular reference to his plans for a food standards agency; [11780]

(2) what plans he has to conduct open consultation with interested organisations in respect of proposed changes to the State Veterinary Service. [11781]

Mr. Morley: At 1 July 1997, the number of veterinarians employed in the State Veterinary Service within the direct line command of the chief veterinary officer was 306.15 full-time equivalents and includes permanent, fixed-term and casual appointees. This total excludes 13 veterinary posts recently transferred to the MAFF food safety and standards group on 2 June 1997 in preparation for the creation of a foods standards agency. It has been decided that the veterinary field service—the operational arm of the SVS—should not at present become an executive agency and I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Aberdeen, North (Mr. Savidge) on 30 July, Official Report, column 322. The Government's proposals for a food standards agency will be published in a White Paper in the autumn. The White Paper will provide interested bodies with a further opportunity to comment on the organisation and remit of the new agency, including any implications it may have for the State Veterinary Service.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what funding is presently committed from his departmental budget for (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000 to resolve the year 2000 computer problem; and if he will make a statement. [11899]

Mr. Morley: Current commitments from the central information technology budget to resolve the year 2000 computer problem are: making a total of £4,650,000. Further expenditure—to take the figure up to an estimated £7 million in total—is expected as detailed plans are finalised over the coming month.

(a) 1997–98: £2,500,000

(b) 1998–99: £1,400,000

(c) 1999–2000: £750,000

Costs will be met from existing public expenditure survey provision. The Department is working in line with guidance published by the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency; detailed and costed plans will be supplied by the end of October 1997.

Fishing

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which articles and subsections of articles of Council regulation 3760/92 will automatically continue after 2002; and what is the relevant legal text which substantiates their continuation. [12190]

Mr. Morley: All of Council regulation (EEC) No. 3760/92 apart from article 6 continues automatically until the Council decides to change it. The provisions on access restrictions within six and 12-mile limits are exceptional in that they automatically end on 31 December 2002, but the Government are committed to securing their renewal thereafter.

Article 21 of the regulation says that it entered into force on 1 January 1993. With the exception of article 6, no date is specified in the regulation for any part of it to expire. It therefore continues sine die until the Council decides otherwise.

Camphill Devon Community Ltd.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he plans to make a decision on the eligibility of Camphill Devon Community Ltd. for a farm and conservation grant; and if he will make a statement. [12168]

Mr. Morley: The claim for grant from Camphill Devon Community Ltd. has raised a number of questions concerning the eligibility of the investment on which grant is being claimed under the farm and conservation grant scheme. However, we hope to have resolved these questions shortly.

Performing Animals

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the quarantine arrangements for travelling zoos and circuses involving performing animals. [12084]

Mr. Rooker: Each animal subject to the Rabies (Importation of Dogs, Cats and Other Mammals) Order 1974 and imported into Great Britain from outside the British Isles is required to be quarantined for six months. In each case, the physical arrangements of the quarantine premises for containing the animal have to be shown to be satisfactory.

Rams' Horns

Mr. Reed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from the British Stickmakers Guild about the classification of rams' horns as animal offal; and if he will make a statement. [10556]

Mr. Rooker [pursuant to his answer, 28 July 1997, c.24]: I have received representations from the British Stickmakers Guild about the classification of rams' horns as animal offal.

Under the Heads of Sheep and Goats Order 1996, the heads—excluding the tongue—of sheep and goats of any age other than those born, reared and slaughtered in Australia and New Zealand must be disposed of as specified waste material. This would include the horns if still attached to the head. However, horns themselves are not considered to be a risk, provided they are removed without breaking into the cranial cavity in order to ensure that there is no risk of contamination with brain material.

Fisheries (Rockall)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the potential fish catches and stocks in the 60,000 sq miles of ocean around Rockall; and what funding the Government have made available in the last 20 years to research and develop the potential of these waters. [11581]

Mr. Chisholm: I have been asked to reply.

I shall write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the House Library.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what licensing arrangements currently apply to fishing operators in the 60,000 sq miles of Atlantic ocean around Rockall; how many (a) British and (b) Spanish fishing vessels operate there; and what estimate he has made of the number of British vessels with the capacity to fish waters of these depths. [11577]

Mr. Chisholm: I have been asked to reply.

United Kingdom vessels fishing within the current Rockall fisheries zone must be in possession of a UK fishing licence, while vessels from other EC member states are subject to their own national licensing and management arrangements. All such vessels are subject to quota restrictions and western waters effort ceilings where appropriate. This will remain the case following the redrawing of British fisheries limits.

Landings information held by the fisheries departments shows that, in 1996, 46 British vessels operated in the waters affected by the change. Comparable information for Spanish vessels is not held by the fisheries departments.

Information on the number of vessels capable of fishing in deep waters around Rockall is not held centrally.

Vitamin Supplements

Mr. Allan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has further to review the scientific evidence relating to the safety of vitamin B6 supplementation; and if he will make a statement. [11719]

Mr. Rooker: The scientific evidence relating to the safety of vitamin B6 has been reviewed by Department of Health's independent Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment—COT—on two separate occasions. I have every confidence in the ability of the COT and in the quality of its advice and I have no plans to invite it or any other body to undertake a further review.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the dangers to public health of higher dose vitamin B6 supplements. [10956]

Ms Jowell: The Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment—COT—has considered the toxicity of vitamin B6 on two occasions. The committee reviewed the scientific papers published in national and international journals and noted reports of peripheral sensory neuropathy in humans. There was evidence of nerve damage in animals. It recommended that the level of vitamin B6 in dietary supplements be limited to 10 mg per day. This recommendation applies to supplements sold under food law.

In the light of the COT's recommendation, the Medicines Control Agency's Committee on Safety of Medicines reviewed vitamin B6 containing medicinal products and recommended that those sold on the general sales list—GSL, that is, those freely available to the public—should be limited to 10 mg, while those above 10 mg and below 50 mg should be available under the supervision of a pharmacist while those of 50 mg and above should be available under the supervision of a doctor—prescription only medicines.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research he has evaluated into the number of deaths or cases of adverse health reactions in the last 10 years in America arising from higher dose vitamin B6 supplementation; and if he will make a statement. [10942]

Ms Jowell: The Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment—COT—has considered the toxicity of vitamin B6 on two occasions. Lists of the references from national and international scientific journals which it considered are lodged in the Library. Following its consideration, the COT published a statement on 4 July 1997. Officials have no specific information on adverse health reactions to higher dose vitamin B6 products in America, but in the years 1987–96 the UK yellow card adverse drug reaction—ADR—reporting scheme administered by the Medicines Control Agency has received a total of 42 reactions associated with products containing only vitamin B6.

TREASURY

Foreign Income Dividends

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about his proposals to abolish foreign income dividends; and if he will make a statement. [8928]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 21 July, Official Report, column 445. We have received several representations from United Kingdom-owned companies that obtain a high proportion of their profits from overseas, and as my hon. Friend the Paymaster General stated in Standing Committee on the Finance Bill on 22 July, we welcome their views and shall find a way froward that balances the interests of the Exchequer with those of the companies involved.

Windfall Tax

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his policy on the future use of windfall taxes. [11472]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The windfall tax is a one-off tax.

Indirect and Corporate Taxation

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the proposals contained in CSE (97) 1 final 9000/97 relating to (a) the elimination of significant distortion in the area of indirect taxation and (b) the longer-term need to look at further elements of corporate taxation. [9652]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 21 July 1997]: The Government welcome the commitment by member states to consider measures to eliminate significant distortions in the area of indirect taxation. In particular, we are keen to see progress on alcohol and tobacco duties where significant cross-border trade is distorted by varying rates of duty.

Privatised Industries

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total amount at current prices paid in taxes by privatised firms (a) in the most recent year for which figures are available and (b) since 1979. [10920]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 28 July 1997]: Corporation tax paid by formerly publicly owned companies since 1987-88 is as follows:

Year	£ billion
1988–89	1.6
1989–90	1.5
1990–91	2.1
1991–92	2.3
1992–93	2.3
1994–95	2.5
1995–96	2.9
1996–97	2.7

Release of earlier figures would infringe taxpayer confidentiality.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue the formerly nationalised industries have contributed to the Exchequer since privatisation. [11340]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 29 July 1997]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Mid-Dorset and Poole, North (Mr. Fraser) regarding Exchequer receipts of corporation tax paid by formerly publicly owned companies.

Nationalised Industries

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the annual profits and losses of the nationalised industries in current prices for each year between 1974 and 1997. [11350]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 29 July 1997]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. John Bercow, dated 31 July 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question on the annual profits and losses of the nationalised industries in the current prices for each year between 1974 and 1997.

I regret to say that estimates of profits/losses of the nationalised industries are not produced.

For the National Accounts, the nationalised industries are classified within the Public Corporations sector. As of April 1997, the nationalised industries were as follows:

British Coal Board

Magnox Electric

British Railways Board

London Region Transport

Highlands Islands Airports

British Nuclear Fuels

Post Office

Civil Aviation Authority

British Waterways Board

Caledonian MacBrayne

The Public Corporations sector also contains many other bodies, e.g. NHS trusts, the BBC, Channel 4, and urban development corporations. The composition of the sector has changed significantly, over the period from 1974, particularly with privatisations.

The National Accounts definition of the United Kingdom profits, losses of Public Corporations is entitled to the gross trading surplus (this is gross of depreciation). It would be possible to construct gross trading surplus aggregates for the nationalised industries from 1991 to 1996 only, but this would be at disproportionate cost. Data before 1991 are unavailable.

The Office for National Statistics (ONS) does not publish data for the gross trading surplus of the Public Corporations sector as a whole. This series goes back to 1946 but is affected by breaks due to sectoral reclassifications, including privatisation, nationalisation and the establishment of NHS trusts. I attach a table of the data from 1974 to 1996. This data, from 1986 onwards, will appear in the 1997 edition of United Kingdom National Accounts which is being published on 8 August. Gross trading surplus data for 1997 are not yet available.

Gross trading surplus of public corporations

Year	Current prices (£ million)
1974	2,561
1975	3,094
1976	4,505
1977	5,095
1978	5,466
1979	5,710
1980	6,309
1981	7,974
1982	9,502
1984	8,511
1985	7,262
1986	8,213
1987	6,993
1988	7,554
1989	5,951
1990	3,426
1991	1,410
1992	1,699
1993	2,438
1994	2,698
1995	4,230

BSE

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update the figures contained in table 5A.4 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1997–98", showing projected United Kingdom expenditure on BSE for (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [11186]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 29 July 1997]: The provision made for expenditure on BSE remains as in that table, supplemented by a further £0.2 billion spread over 1996–97 and 1997–98 in respect of the selective cull of animals most at risk of developing BSE announced on 16 December 1996, Official Report, column 632. The actual outturns will depend on a variety of factors, including some policy decisions that have not yet been taken.

EU Budget

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the net benefit to the United Kingdom at today's prices in each year as a result of the budget rebate of 1984. [11234]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 29 July 1997]: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the abatement agreed at Fontainebleau. The table sets out the information requested.

	Value of UK's abatement, in current prices (£ million)
1985–86	1,346
1986–87	2,131
1987–88	1,713
1988–89	2,260
1989–90	1,739
1990–91	2,247
1991–92	2,791
1992–93	2,198
1993–94	2,519
1994–95	1,740
1995–96	1,620

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what estimate he has made of the net level of United Kingdom contributions to the European Community for (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement; [11306]

(2) if he will update the figure for the estimated net United Kingdom contribution to the European Community budget for 1998–99, in table 5A.4, page 123, of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1997–98", incorporating the impact of developments at the European Union budget negotiations on 24 July; and if he will make a statement. [11612]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 29 July 1997]: The Government's expenditure plans take account of the plans of the previous Government for the forecast of the trend in the United Kingdom's net contributions to the European Community budget; as published in the previous Chancellor's departmental report on his smaller departments, Cm 3617. The forecasts are as follows:

1997–98: £2,750 million

1998–99: £3,000 million

1990–2000: £3,400 million

The Treasury will revise the forecasts in due course. As the Community budget for 1998 has not yet been finalised, there is no reason at this stage to update these forecasts.

Generalised System of Preferences

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to receive the European Commission's report on the abuse of the generalised system of preferences. [10141]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 22 July 1997]: The European Commission has indicated that its study on the post-clearance recovery of customs debts associated with preferential customs schemes—including the generalised system of preferences—will be published in the early autumn.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number of United Kingdom businesses affected by claims to retrospective duties arising from irregularities found in origin certificates issued by developing countries under the generalised system of preferences. [10143]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 22 July 1997]: In the 12 months ending 30 June 1997, some 70 UK businesses were notified of a duty liability as a result of invalid claims to preferential rates of duty under the generalised system of preferences.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the level of outstanding duty arising from the irregularities found in origin certificates issued by developing countries under the generalised system of preferences. [10142]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 22 July 1997]: Approximately £1,600,000 duty is outstanding in respect of irregularities found in the past five years in origin certificates issued under the generalised system of preferences.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking to ensure that an agreement made between Bangladesh and the EC concerning invalid origin certificates under the generalised system of preferences does not disadvantage United Kingdom businesses. [10144]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 22 July 1997]: Importers in a number of member states have received invalid origin certificates from Bangladesh. Her Majesty's Customs and Excise will seek to ensure that action taken in respect of these documents is consistent throughout the Community and it will continue to press for a fair and equitable solution to the problem.

Welsh Assembly

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what powers the Treasury will have to ring-fence itemised expenditure under the process described in paragraph 1.22 of the White Paper on a Welsh Assembly; and if these powers will extend to the determination of individual subheads within the estimates. [10707]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 28 July 1997]: The allocation of the budget assigned to Wales will be at the discretion of the Welsh Assembly, as it is at present a matter for the Secretary of State for Wales.

European Central Bank

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the Government's policy towards an independent European central bank. [11822]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: I regret that it has not been possible to provide a substantive answer before the summer recess. I shall write to the hon. Member shortly and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Budget (Environmental Impact)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to publish a green book on the environmental implications of the next Budget. [11861]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer the hon. Member to the oral answer I gave to the hon. Member for South Suffolk (Mr. Yeo), on 10 July, Official Report, column 1062.

Tobacco Duty

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce banding for the tobacco products duty on cigarettes related to their nicotine content; and if he will make a statement. [11313]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 30 July 1997]: EC law requires that all cigarettes sold within a EU member state shall be subject to the same rate of excise duty. It would not therefore be possible to band tobacco products duty in this way.

Financial Services (Distance Selling)

Mrs. May: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to introduce legislation on the distance selling of financial services. [11784]

Mr. Darling: None. The Government will of course consider any draft directive covering distance selling of financial services which may be proposed by the European Commission. However, no such draft has been issued.

Travel-to-work Areas

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will amend the travel-to-work area boundaries to coincide with the new local government boundaries; and if he will make a statement. [11218]

Dawn Primarolo: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics, who has been asked to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. David Marshall, dated 30 July 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS) to your recent question on travel-to-work area boundaries.

A recent consultation exercise by the ONS has shown a demand for statistics for travel-to-work areas (TTWAs) as well as for local authority areas. ONS has accordingly decided to continue to produce statistics for TTWAs and is now consulting on revised boundaries.

Investors Compensation Scheme

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many representations he has received concerning the investors compensation scheme from investors who made their investments prior to the formation of the scheme; and if he will make a statement. [11907]

Mrs. Liddell: I receive such representations from time to time.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the qualifying conditions for a claim under the investors compensation scheme; and if he will make a statement. [11906]

Mrs. Liddell: The eligibility of any claim on the investors compensation scheme will depend on the individual circumstances. However, the following general conditions must be met:

the claimant is a private investor;

the investment firm must have been fully authorised before it failed;

the claim arises out of business regulated under the Financial Services Act;

the firm owes the investor money—through fraud or negligent dealing—or was holding shares or other investments on the investor's behalf;

the firm cannot pay out investors' claims;

the firm has been declared in default by the ICS.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what funding is presently committed from his departmental budget for (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000 to resolve the year 2000 computer problem; and if he will make a statement. [11967]

Mr. Darling: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson) on 10 July 1997, Official Report, column 609.

Financial Services Regulation

Mrs. May: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made in discussions with the Bank of England regarding the role of the registrar's department after the change in responsibility for debt management from the Bank of England to the Treasury. [11725]

Mr. Darling: The Treasury and the Bank have agreed that the status of the registrar's department will not be affected by other changes on debt management, and this has been announced to staff. The registrar's department will remain under Bank of England management and continue with the current programming of restructuring. The options over its future will then be reviewed in five years.

Mrs. May: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the new supervisory body for the financial sector will have responsibility for supervising (a) friendly societies, (b) credit unions and (c) cheque traders. [11731]

Mr. Darling: As my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary announced in a written answer on 23 July, Official Report, column 595, the new regulatory organisation will have responsibility for supervising friendly societies and credit unions. We have no plans at present to extend financial regulation to cheque traders.

Financial Services Regulators

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has received from Sir Andrew Large an implementation plan for the new financial regulatory body announced on 20 May. [12271]

Mr. Gordon Brown: I received the plan on 29 July. Copies have been placed in the Vote Office, together with copies of a letter from Sir Andrew and my reply.

Treasury Supplement

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the amount of the Treasury supplement in each of the last 10 years; and what are the estimated figures for the next two years. [11715]

Mr. Darling: The Treasury supplement to the national insurance fund was abolished in 1989. From 1993, a new Treasury grant was introduced, and the level of that annual grant has been as follows:

1993–94: £7,589 million

1994–95: £6,280 million

1995–96: £3,575 million

As part of his report to the Secretary of State for Social Security on the 1997 uprating and rerating orders, the Government Actuary has estimated the size of the Treasury grant needed for 1996–97 and 1997–98 to be £1,925 million and £980 million respectively.

Personal Pensions

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what new advice he plans to provide to people with approved personal pension plans in respect of the amount they contribute to those plans following the abolition of advance corporation tax credits. [11653]

Dawn Primarolo: None.

National Audit Office

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the future role of the National Audit Office in relation to auditing the Budget. [11602]

Mr. Darling: As part of the opening up of economic decision making, the Chancellor intends that there should be a continuing role for the National Audit Office in subsequent Budgets. Future arrangements are not yet settled.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he intends to announce new public expenditure plans for 1999–2000 and beyond; and if he will make a statement. [11606]

Mr. Gordon Brown: Spending plans for 1999–2000 and beyond will be announced next year after the Government have concluded the comprehensive spending review announced by the Chief Secretary on 11 June.

Departmental Spending Limits

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if further changes to departmental spending ceilings for (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99 will be made; and if he will make a statement. [11607]

Mr. Darling: Departments are expected to live within the ceilings currently set for the next two years.

National Lottery

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the effect on the public sector borrowing requirement in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98 to date and (d) 1997–98 of the discrepancy between the timing of receipts and disbursements relating to the national lottery to and from the Exchequer; and if he will make a statement. [11994]

Mr. Darling: I regret that it has not been possible to provide a substantive answer before the summer recess. I shall write to the hon. Member shortly and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Low Pay

Mr. Pond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many and what proportion of (a) full-time employees, (b) part-time employees and (c) all employees on adult rates of pay in the south-east and Greater London as a whole and broken down by county, unitary authority and London borough, have earnings excluding overtime payments of less than (i) £3.50 an hour and (ii) £4.42 an hour; and if he will list these figures separately for men and for women; [12191]

(2) how many and what proportion of all employees on adult rates of pay in the south-east and Greater London have earnings excluding overtime payments of less than (i) £3.50 an hour (ii) £4.42 an hour broken down by standard occupational classification and by standard industrial classification; [12192]

(3) how many and what proportion of (a) full-time, (b) part-time and (c) all employees on adult rates of pay working in social work activities in Great Britain have earnings excluding overtime payments of less than (i) £4.26 an hour and (ii) £4.42 an hour. [12088]

Dawn Primarolo: I regret that it has not been possible to provide a substantive answer before the summer recess. I shall write to my hon. Friend shortly and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Construction Workers

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to align the tax and national insurance treatment of construction workers who provide their services through an agency. [12272]

Dawn Primarolo: The exemption for construction workers from the agency tax rules will be removed with effect from 6 April 1998. So agencies that supply workers to the construction industry will, subject to the conditions set out in these rules, be required to operate pay-as-you-earn on payments to construction workers in the same way as other agency workers. Agencies are, of course, already obliged to account for employer and employees class 1 national insurance contributions, provided the relevant conditions are satisfied.

Tax Law Rewrite Project

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made on the tax law rewrite project. [12273]

Dawn Primarolo: I am delighted to report that the tax law rewrite project continues to make good progress. The Inland Revenue has today published the project's first exposure draft containing draft clauses. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of the House. A number of innovative techniques have been adopted. The rewritten legislation incorporates easier to understand language, a more logical structure and shorter sentences.

I very much support this important project, which aims to bring clarity and certainty in our direct tax legislation for businesses and individuals. Full consultation is the key to its success, and I urge everyone with an interest in tax law to take this opportunity to comment.

Office Refurbishment

Mr. Terry Lewis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has for the refurbishment of ministerial offices in his Department; and what is the estimated cost of the works and the date of completion. [11868]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: There are no plans to refurbish any ministerial offices in the Treasury.

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the proposal to refurbish the Treasury building in Great George street under the private finance initiative. [12274]

Mr. Robinson: At a time when all Departments are undertaking comprehensive spending reviews and are subject to extremely tight expenditure controls, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer was unwilling to embark on a major construction project of this scale, which would have involved substantial expenditure and significant financial risks for the other Government occupants of the building in terms of the disposal of property elsewhere. The plans to refurbish the main Treasury building under the private finance initiative represented good value for money in their own terms, but Ministers judged they had to have regard to wider considerations.

My right hon. Friend the Chancellor has therefore decided to terminate negotiations with our private sector partner, Exchequer Partnership plc.

Securities and Investments Board

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the financial position of the Securities and Investments Board. [12326]

Mr. Darling: The Treasury has today laid a minute to inform the House that the Treasury has issued a non-statutory guarantee to the Securities and Investments Board for up to £8 million.

This exceptional course is necessary to ensure that SIB is able to raise a commercial loan in order to finance work on preparation for assuming additional regulatory responsibilities after Royal Assent to the legislation announced in the Chancellor's statement of 20 May. SIB cannot use the fees that it raises under the current powers in the Financial Services Act 1986 for this purpose. The process of transition is described in more detail in my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer's reply of today to my hon. Friend the Member for East Ham. In particular, the documents mentioned in that reply make it clear that SIB, and its successor, will receive no support from public funds.

The guarantee will cover a loan sufficient for all SIB's preparation costs which can be foreseen now. This sum does not at this stage cover accommodation. The guarantee may therefore need to be extended at some point in the future, in which case I will notify Parliament of it.

The guarantee will remain in place until SIB obtains powers under the legislation to reform the financial regulatory system, to recoup its operational costs from the industry it regulates. This power will apply to the cost of transition as well as to SIB's on-going administrative costs. It is thus likely that SIB will need the guarantee for at least two years. I will ensure that the contingent liability continues for as short a period as possible. While the liability is outstanding, Parliament will be kept informed in the usual way.

VAT (Fuel)

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 15 July, Official Report, column 136, concerning the fine tuning of his modelling of the consequences of reducing value added tax on domestic fuel, if he will estimate the weekly benefit of the reduction, net of the consequential lower uprating of pension benefits next April, to an average (a) single pensioner, (b) pensioner couple and (c) single householder on average earnings. [9450]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 18 July 1997]: The change in the VAT rate on domestic fuel will have no impact on the real value of the basic state pension. We are committed to uprating the basic state pension at least in line with prices and will consider the uprating of benefits at the normal time and in the normal way.

Households will on average gain £18 a year from the reduction in VAT on domestic fuel from 8 to 5 per cent.

Income Tax

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people paid income tax in (a) 1978–79 and (b) 1997–98; and how many people would have been paying income tax in 1997–98 if the tax regime had been indexed and maintained at 1978–79 levels. [10895]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 28 July 1997]: Estimated number of taxpayers are given in the table. This comparison is hypothetical since if an indexed version of the 1978–79 tax regime had prevailed over the last 19 years the income base would not have grown in the way it has.

	Number of individuals paying tax (million)
1978–79	25.9
1978–79 indexed regime on 1997–98 income base[1]	27.4

[1] The effect of changes in mortgage interest relief cannot be included in this comparison because most mortgage interest relief is now given at source and therefore is not recorded on individual tax records.

Disposable Incomes

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 23 July, Official Report, column 591, on changes in disposable income, for what reason the effects of indirect tax changes including excise duties, in the July 1997 Budget were not included in his answer. [11367]

Mr. Geofrey Robinson [holding answer 29 July 1997]: The hon. Member asked for the percentage change in after-tax disposable income. Disposable income is generally defined in economic literature as personal income minus personal taxes, where personal taxes consist of inheritance taxes, property taxes and personal income taxes. Disposable income is that part of income which households may use in any way they wish. The amount of indirect taxes paid depends upon what individual households choose to consume—for instance, those households who choose to spend their income on cigarettes will pay more indirect tax than those who choose to spend their income on books.

For estimates of the effects of the tax changes, including indirect taxes, announced in the Budget, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the right hon. Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) on 16 July Official Report, columns 167–68.

Public Sector Pay

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to make an announcement on Government guidelines for the next public sector pay round; and if he will make a statement. [11373]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 29 July 1997]: The evidence to the pay review bodies will include evidence on economic considerations and public sector pay. We expect to publish it in the autumn.

Income Tax (Covenants)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the amount of income tax recovered by charities or charitable covenants for the latest year available. [10766]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 29 July 1997]: Income tax repayments and payments of tax credits to charities were £755 million in 1996–97, of which around £250 million were repayments at the basic rate of tax for donations under deeds of covenant.

EU Budget

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what will be the percentage nominal increase in the United Kingdom's gross sterling gross national product-based contribution between the 1998 outturn EU budget and the 1996 outturn EU budget on the assumptions that (a) the adopted budget for 1998 is identical to the preliminary draft budget for 1998, (b) there is no underspending by the EC in 1997 and (c) the sterling-ecu exchange rate as at 31 December 1997 is 1.3644 ecu to £1. [11118]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 29 July 1997]: I regret that it has not been possible to provide a substantive answer before the summer recess. I shall write to the hon. Member shortly and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the reforms made to the EU budget process since 1979; and if he will make a statement about their impact on the United Kingdom. [11233]

Mr. Robinson: I regret that it has not been possible to provide a substantive answer before the summer recess. I shall write to the hon. Member shortly and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

EU Funds (Fraud)

Mr. Frabricant: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps have been taken to eliminate fraud in the United Kingdom in respect of EU funds during the last five years; and with what results. [11237]

Mrs. Liddell: I regret that it has not been possible to provide a substantive answer before the summer recess. I shall write to the hon. Member shortly and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Personal Equity Plans

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he plans to continue personal equity plans and tax-exempt special savings accounts beyond 1999; and if he will make a statement. [11469]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor announced in his Budget that a new individual savings account will be introduced in 1999. This will extend the principle of TESSAs and PEPs to encourage people, through tax reliefs, to raise the level of their long-term savings. Individuals, including PEP investors, will have the opportunity during 1999 to switch to the individual savings account, which will provide a tax-free environment for savings. Consideration is being given, in consultation with interested parties, to the scope of a tax-free environment for savings after 1999. A consultative document will be published later in the year.

Mr. Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of individuals who have invested in personal equity plans where the value of the investment is (a) more than £1 million, (b) between £500,000 and £999,999, (c) between £100,000 and £499,999 and (d) between £25,000 and £99,999 and if he will make a statement. [11470]

Mr. Robinson: This information requested is not available. PEP investors do not have to give details of the plans they hold onto their tax office; and PEP plan managers are not required to list the current value of individual plans when making their returns to the Inland Revenue.

Mr. Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the total effect of the tax reliefs on tax-exempt special savings accounts and personal equity plans on the aggregate level of savings in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [11471]

Mr. Robinson: Research suggests that most of the funds going into TESSAs do not represent new savings, with a considerable amount coming from other deposit accounts, but for PEPs there may be a somewhat greater element of new equity investment. The new individual savings accounts will be attractive to a wider range of savers. Extension to those with little or no financial savings at present should make them more effective in attracting new savings.

Pensioners (Fuel Costs)

Mr Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 23 July, Official Report, column 595, what effect he expects the reduction of VAT on domestic fuel to have on (a) the retail prices index increase in Septemberr 1997 and (b) the basic pension uprating in April 1998, assuming that the uprating is in line with prices and average earnings respectively. [11492]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 30 July 1997]: The effect of reducing VAT on domestic fuel from 8 to 5 per cent. would be to reduce retail prices index inflation by 0.12 percentage points. The state retirement pension is uprated in April of each year by the annual RPI inflation rate for the preceding September. Uprating by the RPI reflects the changes in prices paid for goods and services; so the real value of the pension is not affected.

Duty-Free Shopping

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the Government's policy towards duty-free shopping in the United Kingdom. [11589]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The Government's policy is in line with international customs agreements to which the United Kingdom is a party and under which individuals travelling abroad are entitled to purchase goods duty and tax free, up to specified quantitive or monetary limits. Duty-free shopping for intra-EU travellers is due to be abolished on 30 June 1999 in line with the decision taken by the Council of Finance Ministers towards the end of 1991. Duty-free shopping will, however, continue to be available to those travelling to destinations outside the European Union.

North Sea Oil and Gas

Ms Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the time scale is for reporting the findings of the joint Treasury/Inland Revenue/DTI review of the North sea taxation regime announced in the Budget. [11519]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: I refer to the answer given to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) on 28 July 1997, Official Report, column 15.

Ms Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the last review of the North sea taxation regime was carried out; and if he will make a statement. [11520]

Mr. Robinson: That is a matter for the previous Government. The last time that a significant set of changes were made to the North sea fiscal regime was in March 1993.

Ms Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps his Department is taking to consult independent organisations in the review of North sea taxation announced in the Budget. [11522]

Mr. Robinson: Interested parties are being given an opportunity to put forward their views. Officials have written to a number of representative bodies to that end.

Ms Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in what ways he plans to consult the offshore oil and gas industry during the current review of the North sea taxation regime. [11521]

Mr. Robinson: Interested parties are being given the opportunity to put forward their views. Officials have written to a number of representative bodies to that end.

Ms Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which companies or individuals have contributed their views to the review of North sea taxation announced in the Budget. [11523]

Mr. Robinson: The review was announced on 2 July, some four weeks ago. I understand that no interested parties have chosen to make their detailed views known as yet.

Ms Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which individuals or companies are being asked to contribute expert studies to the current review of North sea taxation. [11524]

Mr. Robinson: Interested parties are being given the opportunity to put forward their views. Officials have written to a number of representative bodies to that end. We have also asked the advice of an academic on certain specific issues. The review will take the views of commentators into consideration.

Ms Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps are being taken to consider the environmental implications of any changes to the North sea taxation regime as part of the review announced in the Budget. [11525]

Mr. Robinson: As has been made clear on numerous occasions, concern for the environment is at the heart of all Government policy making.

Small Businesses

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the need for funding to assist small businesses in respect of equity gaps. [11788]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The Government fully recognise the need for small firms to be able to obtain appropriate forms of finance. In the Budget, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor announced plans to sharpen the focus of the venture capital trust scheme and keep it under review to ensure that it remained properly targeted, while encouraging and rewarding risk taking by individuals.

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will assess the advantages of introducing tax incentives to encourage business to corporate venturing in relation to the provision of funding for capital high-technology and other small business projects. [11819]

Mr. Robinson: There is no clear evidence of a market failure in respect of corporate venturing by businesses. Nor is it certain that any market failure could be properly addressed by offering a tax incentive. But the Government recognise the importance of the small business sector, particularly high-technology businesses, and are determined to pursue policies which create a climate in which enterprise can flourish.

Mr. Horam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what response the Treasury has made to the Bank of England's October 1996 report on the financing of technology-based small firms. [12238]

Mr. Robinson: The Government agree with a number of recommedations in the Bank of England's report and are reviewing the loan guarantee scheme with a view to improving access for new high-technology start-up firms, within the existing resources of the scheme.

Mr. Horam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to amend the enterprise initiative scheme and venture capital trust schemes to improve the availability of start-up and second-round funding for smaller businesses. [12236]

Mr. Robinson: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor recognises the progress the EIS and VCT schemes have made in raising investment for early stage and expending businesses. In his Budget, the Chancellor announced plans to sharpen the focus of the EIS and VCT schemes and intends to keep both schemes under review to ensure they remain properly targeted, while encouraging and rewarding risk taking by individuals.

Mr. Horam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to encourage the provision of equity for start-ups in the small business sector and for high-technology small ventures. [12235]

Mr. Robinson: The Government fully recognise the need for small firms to be able to obtain appropriate forms of finance. We are currently reviewing the loan guarantee scheme to improve access for new high-technology start-up firms, within the existing resources of the scheme.

Waste Minimisation

Ms Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on existing targets set to minimise waste within his Department. [11533]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The Treasury has not set any waste minimisation targets but intends to do so in August 1997.

Ms Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to introduce a waste minimisation strategy for his Department. [11532]

Mr. Robinson: The Treasury intends to have a waste minimisation strategy in place by August 1997.

Ms Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the amount, and proportion, of paper recycled by his Department in each of the last five years. [11534]

Mr. Robinson: The Treasury introduced a white paper recycling scheme in 1993. This scheme was extended to include newspapers in 1996 and the amounts recycled are as follows:

	Financial year	Kg
White paper	1993–94	7,230
	1994–95	9,680
	1995–96	5,490
	1996–97	5,600
Newspapers	1996–97	2,400

It is not possible to determine the proportion of total waste that this represents.

Tax and Benefits System

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the members of the committee reviewing the tax and benefits system headed by Mr. Martin Taylor. [11124]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 29 July 1997]: The task force headed by Martin Taylor is comprised of senior officials from HM Treasury, the Inland Revenue, the Department of Social Security and the Department for Education and Employment. The review will draw on other Departments as necessary.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what arrangements are being made to encourage external submissions to the review on the tax and benefit system headed by Mr. Martin Taylor. [11126]

Mr. Robinson [holding answer 29 July 1997]: External submissions are welcome from all sources, and a number have already been received.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects the review of the tax and benefit system headed by Mr. Martin Taylor to be published. [11110]

Mr. Robinson [holding answer 29 July 1997]: I expect Martin Taylor's project to last about a year.

Auctioneers

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy on the imposition of value added tax at 17.5 per cent. on (a) auctioneers' services and (b) imported works of art and antiques; and if he will make a statement. [11584]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: Goods imported into the UK normally bear VAT at the standard rate [illegible]7.5 per cent. Under the terms of a derogation from the sixth VAT directive, as amended by the seventh VAT directive, certain works of art, antiques and collectors' pieces are eligible until 30 June 1999 for an effective rate of VAT at importation of 2.5 per cent. After that date, the UK should increase the VAT rate to at least the normal minimum reduced rate of 5 per cent.

Supplies of auctioneers' services to persons in the UK are normally liable to VAT at the standard rate of 17.5 per cent. Special arrangements apply when auctioneers' services are supplied in respect of certain works of art and so on held under temporary importation conditions and eligible for the effective rate of VAT of 2.5 per cent. on permanent importation. In these cases all auctioneers' services are taxed at the same effect rate of VAT as the goods themselves, though this is currently the subject of challenge by the European Commission.

Investors Compensation Scheme

Mr. Öpik: To ask the chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to allow claims to be made under the investors compensation scheme where the initial investment predates the formation of the scheme; and if he will make a statement. [11908]

Mrs. Liddell: I regret that it has not been possible to provide a substantive answer before the summer recess. I shall write to the hon. Member shortly and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mrs. May: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the responsibilities of (a) Her Majesty's Treasury and (b) the Bank of England regarding work on EMU and the single currency. [11726]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: HM Treasury is the Department responsible for Government policy regarding economic and monetary union. On 24 July, HM Treasury published a booklet to inform businesses about the practical implications of EMU, which will arise whether or not the United Kingdom joins the single currency. The Treasury has also recently announced the establishment of an advisory group of private sector representatives to provide a two-way exchange between the Government and business about the practical effects of EMU.

The Bank of England participates fully in the work of the European Monetary Institute. The Governor is a member of the Council of the EMI. The Bank of England will continue to be responsible for co-ordinating preparations in the financial sector, especially the wholesale financial markets which will need to be able to use the euro whether or not the United Kingdom joins the single currency.

Government Expenditure

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide a breakdown of general Government consumption between spending programmes in cash. [11639]

Mr. Darling: I regret that it has not been possible to provide a substantive answer before the summer recess. I shall write to the hon. Member shortly and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Personal Pensions

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if the rebate for contracting out of SERPs was calculated by the Government Actuary on the basis of prospective investment yields after tax; [11651]

(2) if he will take action against those providers of approved personal pensions who fail to review whether personal pension holders should opt back into the state earnings-related pensions scheme following the abolition of advance corporation tax credits; [11601]

(3) what estimate was made in the Budget forecasts of the number of people who will opt back into the state earnings-related pensions scheme as a result of the abolition of advance corporation tax credits; [11652]

(4) what estimate he has made of the revenue impact over the next five years from people opting back into state earnings-related pensions scheme following the abolition of advance corporation tax credits. [11654]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: It is too early to assess the overall effects of the Budget tax changes on pension funds.

Offshore Trusts

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to review the tax advantages which exist under pre-March 1991 overseas trusts. [11645]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The Chancellor announced in his Budget a wide-ranging review of all areas of tax avoidance.

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the amount of corporation tax revenue which is lost from the use of Channel Island trusts by British companies for executive incentive programmes in the last financial year. [11646]

Mr. Robinson: There are no special corporation tax allowances or exemptions for British companies which remunerate their executives through incentive programmes, whether or not such programmes involve the use of Channel Islands trusts.

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to discourage the placing by British companies of shares related to executive incentive schemes in offshore trusts. [11647]

Dawn Primarolo: I regret that it has not been possible to provide a substantive answer before the summer recess. I shall write to the hon. Member shortly and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Warrington Valuation Office

Helen Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) by how much income exceeded expenditure at Warrington valuation office in 1996–97; [11592]

(2) if the Warrington valuation office has sufficient surplus capacity to accommodate staff and files transferred from Bolton; [11593]

(3) how long he estimates it will take for Warrington valuation office to generate enough surplus income to cover the estimated costs of refurbishment. [11594]

Dawn Primarolo: I regret that it has not been possible to provide a substantive answer before the summer recess. I shall write to my hon. Friend shortly and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Welfare to Work

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what estimate he has made of the displacement rate resulting from private sector substitution involving employees subsidised through his welfare-to-work proposals; what estimate he has made of the deadweight costs involved in such proposals; and if he will make a statement; [11604]

(2) if he will estimate the welfare benefit and other savings resulting from the welfare-to-work proposals in his Budget for (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [11603]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: I regret that it has not been possible to provide a substantive answer before the summer recess. I shall write to the hon. Member shortly and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

New Deal (Young People)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give a breakdown of the total expenditure on the new deal for young people for (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99, to show expenditure on (i) payments to employers, (ii) payments to trainers, (iii) payments to new deal clients, (iv) administration costs and (v) other costs; and if he will make a statement. [11605]

Mrs. Liddell: I regret that it has not been possible to provide a substantive answer before the summer recess. I shall write to the hon. Member shortly and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Diesel

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many litres of (a) ultra-low-sulphur diesel and (b) normal diesel fuel were sold in each of the last five years. [12227]

Dawn Primarolo: The total amount of diesel released for consumption in the last five years was:

	Million litres
1992–93	13,260
1993–94	14,170
1994–95	15,529
1995–96	16,479
1996–97	17,303

Separate figures for ultra-low-sulphur diesel and normal diesel fuel are not available.

DEFENCE

Ships Support Agency

Ms Atherton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Royal Navy's Ships Support Agency for 1997–98. [12460]

Mr. Spellar: The Ships Support Agency was launched as an agency in December 1996. It is responsible for directing in-service support of surface ships and submarines and their equipments; for ensuring that proper consideration is given to support issues and marine engineering design requirements in the procurement of new naval platforms; and for the ownership and management of the naval stores inventory, except for fuel and food.

The Ships Support Agency has developed a comprehensive set of performance indicators in conjunction with its owners and customers. These include measures to monitor the quality, timeliness and efficiency of the agency's outputs. The targets which have been agreed, for the period up to March 1998, are:

Performance indicator	Targets
Materially available vessel days (MAVDs) 1. To provide the Royal Navy with the agreed percentage of materially available vessel days.	62 per cent.
Pounds per MAVD 2. To provide the agreed Fleet availability cost-effectively.	£55.5K per MVAD
To introduce a refined pounds per MAVD performance indicator 3. To introduce a refined pounds per MAVD performance indicator to provide a more robust measurement of the SSA's efficiency.	March 1998
Upkeep period timeliness 4. To deliver upkeep periods within specified tolerances of the agreed programme.	+5 per cent.
Upkeep period costs 5. To contain the cost of programmed upkeep periods within tolerance of the predicted costs.	+/–4 per cent.
Upkeep material performance 6. To introduce a performance indicator to quantify material state at the conclusion of upkeep periods. Progress report.	March 1998
Fleet time material performance 7. To limit the average number of outstanding Operational Defects per vessel in Fleet Time.	4
8. To introduce a performance indicator based on the percentage of Fleet Time that vessels are unable for material reasons to carry out their programmed task.	March 1998
Efficient stockholding 9. To improve stockholding to issue ratio.	2.5:1
Resource accounting 10. To ensure the implementation of the MoD accruals accounting system within the Agency. Progress report.	March 1998
Through life costs 11. To create an effective Through Life Cost model.	March 1998
Private sector involvement 12. To complete a review of the options for further Private Sector Involvement in the support of vessels, equipments and weapons. Progress report.	March 1998

Defence Intelligence and Security Centre

Mr. Borrow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Defence Intelligence and Security Centre for 1997–98. [12207]

Mr. Spellar: The role of the Defence Intelligence and Security Centre is to train the armed forces and other intelligence agencies in intelligence and security disciplines and conduct after capture; to contribute to effective and timely advice to the armed forces on appropriate intelligence and security matters; and to maintain an operation capability. The key performance targets are set for the agency for the 12 months from April 1997 are:

Key target 1:

To meet 100 per cent. of operational tasking to performance standards agreed with the Director General and Intelligence Geographic Resources—DGIGR—and to the satisfaction of "customers", in accordance with priorities laid down by, or through, Director Intelligence Commitments, and within agreed resources.

Key target 2:

To make available to "customers" 3,483 training days and, where possible, to meet surge requirements within agreed resources.

Key target 3:

To produce by 31 March 1998 a plan to introduce a systems approach to training to DISC courses from ! April 1998 onwards.

Key target 4:

(a) To complete the rationalisation and collocation of DISC in accordance with the timetable, subject to the satisfactory performance of contractors and other external staff.

(b) To deliver the required output as expressed in the "Aim, Objectives and Key Targets", within agreed resources.

Key target 5:

To achieve a 2.5 per cent. improvement in efficiency within the 1997–98 operating costs budget, in addition to the savings from collocation.

Military Survey Defence Agency

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Military Survey Defence Agency for 1997–98. [12209]

Mr. Spellar: The role of Military Survey Defence Agency is to ensure the provision of geographic support to defence operations, planning and training. The key targets set for the agency for the 12 months from April 1997 are:

Key target 1:

To satisfy 100 per cent. of requirements for operations on time from within the agency's capabilities and resources.

Key target 2:

To maintain the operational readiness of the field support elements of the agency to the Army standard known as "substantially effective".

Key target 3:

To achieve the agreed work programme on time, to cost and to deliver 457 discrete products.

Key target 4:

To meet milestones agreed by the operational sponsors for the Military Survey digital geographic information system.

Key target 5:

To meet agreed milestones in a wider Defence intelligence "Competing for Quality" project, embracing the agency's non-core IT, media and print support.

Key target 6:

To achieve a 2.5 per cent. improvement in efficiency above the 1996–97 baseline.

Joint Air Reconnaissance Intelligence Centre

Mr. Alan Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Joint Air Reconnaissance Intelligence Centre for 1997–98. [12216]

Mr. Spellar: The Joint Air Reconnaissance Intelligence Centre exploits analyses and exploits imagery from all available sources and produces intelligence products and services to meet central MOD and operational command requirements. The targets set for the 12 months from April 1997 are:

Key target 1:

To respond to all operational tasks, which might involve the detachment of up to 22 service personnel. Tasks are to be met within agreed timescales as follows:

98 per cent. of priority 1 tasks

90 per cent. of priority 2 tasks

85 per cent. of priority 3 tasks

Key target 2:

Subject to achieving key target 1, the agency's programme of work, including standing intelligence requirements and support to contingency planning, will be met within agreed timescales as follows:

90 per cent. of priority 2 tasks

85 per cent. of priority 3 tasks

75 per cent. of priority 4 tasks

70 per cent. of priority 5 tasks

Key target 3:

In conjunction with the Defence Analytical Services Agency, to establish a baseline for measuring customer satisfaction by October 1997, and to improve the quality of customer service by March 1998.

Key target 4:

To achieve a 2.5 per cent. improvement in efficiency.

Key target 5:

To ensure the upgrade of JARIC's technical capabilities meets its planned operating capability by March 1998.

Key target 6:

To conduct trials and studies to support the procurement of reconnaissance systems in response to MOD agreed tasking, meeting time and quality requirements within agreed resources.

Defence Clothing and Textiles Agency

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Defence Clothing and Textiles Agency for 1997–98. [12325]

Dr. Reid: The chief executive of the Defence Clothing and Textiles Agency has been set the following key targets for 1997–98:

1. To achieve 80 per cent. demand satisfaction on presentation.
2. To obtain the works brief so that laboratories and workshops can be collocated by September 1999.
3. To complete a review of the scope for further private sector involvement.

These key targets take forward the work of the previous year's targets in the context of the agency's continuing collocation and restructuring plans. Collocation of the agency will ensure the agency remains in a position to benefit from opportunities for further rationalisation and provide the scope to reform activities which are essential to the achievement of the agency's corporate and business plans. Given all the other pressures on the agency, particularly downward financial pressure, I believe they are challenging but achievable. I have previously arranged for copies of the agency's framework document to be placed in the Library of both Houses and the annual report and accounts for 1996–97 have also been so placed.

Defence Animal Centre

Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Defence Animal Centre for 1997–98. [12318]

Dr. Reid: The chief executive has been set the following key targets for 1997–1998:

1. Meet 100 per cent. of the requirements for trained military personnel and trained military working animals for operations;
2. Meet 95 per cent. of customer satisfaction for trained output quality;
3. Meet 95 per cent. of customer satisfaction in terms of trained output;
4. Meet 95 per cent. of customer satisfaction in timeliness of delivery;
5. To reduce net full costs as shown in the accruals accounts by 2.5 per cent.;
6. Meet course specific success rates for military working animals greater than or equal to 95 per cent.;
7. Meet training success rate for personnel greater than or equal to 90 per cent.;
8. To complete the planned stages of the investors in people action plan;
9. To explore all private finance initiative options for rebuilding administrative and single person accommodation.

RAF Maintenance Group Defence Agency

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the RAF Maintenance Group Defence Agency for 1997–98. [12324]

Mr. Spellar: The RAF Maintenance Group Defence Agency's key targets for 1997–98 are:

To achieve at least 98 per cent. of the aerosystems maintenance task to standard and on time.

To keep within the agency's allocated budget.

To achieve the efficiency targets specified in the logistics command management plan.

To complete the comprehensive rationalisation of functions within the agency by:

relocating the ground ratio servicing centre from RAF North Luffenham to RAF Sealand by 31 December 1997.

withdrawal from RAF North Luffenham by 31 March 1998.

To achieve the civilianisation programme at the RAF MGDA units.

To implement the delegation of specified civilian personnel management functions to RAF St. Athan, RAF Sealand and RAF Stafford by 31 March 1998.

To continue the certification of Units with the agency to the ISO9000 standard by:

achieving second or third party ISO9002 re-certification of the Royal Air Force armament support unit (RAFASUPU) by 1 November 1997.

achieving third party ISO9001 certification for RAF Stafford by 27 July 1997.

To develop and implement continual customer satisfaction measurement by 31 March 1998.

Defence Analytical Services Agency

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the review of the Defence Analytical Services Agency has commenced. [12458]

Dr. Reid: A periodic review of the Defence Analytical Services Agency is under way. As a defence agency, the performance of DASA since its launch will be evaluated and a review of the options for the best management of its functions will be undertaken.

Comments and contributions from those with an interest in DASA and its work will be welcomed and should be sent by 30 September 1997 to:

DASA Review Team
Project Manager
Room 119
Northumberland House
London
WC2N 5BP
Telephone: 0171 218 0339
Fax: 0171 218 5203.

Defence Bills Agency

Ms Dari Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Defence Bills Agency for 1997–98. [12459]

Mr. Spellar: Targets have been set for the chief executive of the Defence Bills Agency for financial year 1997–98 in accordance with the agency's overall aim of meeting the requirements of its service level agreement with the Ministry of Defence fully, efficiently and in a manner which offers best value for money. The chief executive's key targets build on the already high standards of service provided by the agency since its formation in January 1996 and are as follows:

1. To pay 97 per cent. of correctly-presented bills within 11 working days of receipt and 100 per cent. within 30 days.

2. To raise 100 per cent. of invoices within five working days of receipt of correctly-presented instruction.

3. To obtain investors in people accreditation by 30 September 1997.

4. To meet the performance criteria laid down in the service level agreement

5. To deliver the service contracted for in the service level agreement at the agreed price.

Wessex Helicopter Replacement

Mr. Bruce George: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the replacement of the service currently provided by the Wessex helicopters of No. 32 (The Royal) Squadron. [12473]

Mr. Spellar: The two Wessex aircraft used by No. 32 (The Royal) Squadron are nearly 30 years old and are becoming increasingly costly to maintain and operate. At the request of the royal household, we will therefore shortly issue invitations to tender to UK helicopter operators to provide a service based on a single helicopter. The cost of the new service will be met by the royal household from the royal travel grant in aid and should provide significant savings.

Future Large Aircraft

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the current status of the future large aircraft programme. [9979]

Mr. George Robertson: The importance of an air transport capability in the new strategic environment has been demonstrated in numerous recent operations such as the Gulf conflict and Bosnia.

My Department has been closely involved in discussions with European partners on the future large aircraft programme, which is a potential solution to our future air transport requirements. I have now decided that the UK should join partners in issuing a request for proposals to Airbus Military Company for the future large aircraft, and formally endorse the European staff requirement and statement of principles governing the commercial management of the programme.

The programme offers an important opportunity for European industry. The Government believe, however, that there is a need to maintain competitive pressure to ensure best value for money. We shall, therefore, be encouraging our partners to join us in seeking bids from other aircraft manufacturers.

We expect the replacement aircraft to come into service early next century. Precise costs for each aircraft will be provided in response to our request for proposals.

Gordon Foxley

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about negotiations with the companies involved in the payment of commissions to Gordon Foxley relating to defence companies. [7090]

Mr. Spellar [pursuant to his answer, 3 July 1997, c. 257]: and following the announcement made by the then Minister of State for Defence Procurement on 13 June 1996, Official Report, column 248, concerning settlement with Raufoss AS: A satisfactory settlement has now been concluded with the second of the three companies concerned, Junghans GmbH of Germany, under which the company will pay an agreed sum in redress to my Department, including interest and a contribution to costs for payments made contrary to contractual conditions. A statement of contribution by the company, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House, forms part of the agreement with the Ministry of Defence. We have decided that in the light of this agreement the company will become eligible to be considered for Ministry of Defence orders, although normal commercial relations will not be resumed for some months. Discussions are continuing with the successor companies to Fratelli Borletti SpA, the third company involved in the Foxley case, against whom proceedings are still in train.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many and what percentage of employees in his private office are (a) of Asian origin and (b) of Afro-Caribbean origin. [8964]

Mr. Spellar: Data on the ethnic origin of civilian staff are collected on a self declaration, confidential basis. Under my Department's code of practice on ethnicity data relating to civilian staff, we do not give information if numbers in statistical summaries are so small that it would be easy to identify the individuals concerned.

The number of staff in private office who have declared themselves as of Asian origin is fewer than five and is not therefore given. The number of staff who have declared themselves as of Afro-Caribbean origin is five which is 10 per cent. of the current total numbers of civilian and service staff.

Hawk Aircraft (Indonesia)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations he undertook with (a) the Foreign Secretary and (b) the President of the Board of Trade before the decision was made to allow further sales of Hawk jets to Indonesia. [10366]

Mr. Spellar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the Minister for Small Firms, Trade and Industry on 11 July 1997, Official Report, columns 646–47.

Services Museums

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the services museums indicating the financial contribution to each from his Department in the latest year for which figures are available; [10753]

(2) what action he will take following the publication of the report "The Way Ahead" on services museums. [10751]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House. I shall also provide additional information on the funding and location of museums across all three services which, for completeness, should have been included in the Minister for the Armed Forces' answers to him of 29 July 1997, Official Report, columns 178–79.

Departmental Payroll

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list each of the functions relating to the payroll for which his Department is responsible, indicating the management systems purchased, all sub-contractors involved in the work, co-operative arrangements with other Departments and the costs of the systems and processes in the last year for which figures are available. [10739]

Mr. Spellar: Employees on the payroll of the Ministry of Defence are either civil servants or members of the armed forces.

Civil Service

For civil servants the Pay and Personnel Agency carries out the following functions related to the department's payroll responsibilities. The associated management systems and costs are also shown.

Function	Management systems	Costs of the systems/processes in 1996–97 £ million
Civil Service non-industrial pay	On-line validation and error reporting—known as "OLIVER"	5.59
Civil Service industrial pay	The Defence Industrial Pay Systems (DIPS)	5.82
Pensions administration	Financial Information System—known as "FIS"	2.97
Expenses management and processing	Computerised payment and authorising of civilian travel—"COMPACT"	1.54
Personnel IT support	Civilian Personnel Management Information System—CIPMIS	0.62

There are no co-operative arrangements with other Departments although the agency does provide some payroll associated services to other Government Departments and agencies on a recoverable costs basis.

There is no sub-contractor involvement with the systems and processes associated with civilian payroll as the bulk are bespoke systems designed, maintained and operated in-house. However, the management system use for pensions administration is provided by Chessington Computer Services Ltd., which is contracted by the Cabinet Office under the central arrangements for the principal civil service pension scheme. Similarly the agency maintains a civilian staff personnel information system as a complementary service to the MOD and this uses a contractor—CAP Gemini—to provide IT operations and support.

Armed Forces

For members of the armed forces, the Armed Forces Personnel Administration Agency—AFPAA—formed on 1 April 1997, is responsible for the following tri-service payroll functions:

Payment of regular, reserve and volunteer reserve military personnel including associated allowances.

Payment of terminal grants, special capital payments and resettlement commutation.

Payment of family maintenance grants.

Pensions administration.

A number of mostly bespoke management systems provide the listed functions but a separate, commercial, package has been purchased to administer RAF reserves pay.

There are no co-operative arrangements with other Government Departments for armed forces payroll. However, normal administrative arrangements exist with external organisations such as DSS, CSA, HMIT and the Inland Revenue.

Sub-contractors who are employed by—AFPAA—and provide support to payroll systems are; QVF, Grist, CSS Trident, Lorien and Parity Solutions Ltd.

As military personnel administration and payroll functions utilise the same IT infrastructure and systems, it is not possible to identify separately those costs specifically attributable to payroll. However, indicative costs for providing payroll and pensions services to the armed forces are;

Navy £10.13 million

Army £11.69 million

RAF £9.81 million

AFPAA is currently engaged in the procurement of a partner from the private sector, through the private finance initiative, to deliver most of the agency's services. The contractor will be required to deliver a harmonised tri-service pay system by 1 April 2000."

HMS Tiger

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many and what type of Royal Navy vessels have carried the designation HMS Tiger; and what was the role of each vessel. [11959]

Mr. Spellar: There have been 12 ships of war built since the 15th century that have borne the name "Tiger".

Type	Built/commissioned
22 Gun ship	1546
Discovery vessel	1613
32 Gun ship	1647
48 Gun ship	1678
50 Gun ship	1743
60 Gun ship	1747
4 Gun ship	1794
12 Gun ship	1805
Sloop	1849
Destroyer	1900
Battlecruiser	1913
Cruiser	1942

Waste Minimisation

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on existing targets set to minimise waste within his Department; [11560]

(2) what plans he has to introduce a waste minimisation strategy for his Department; [11559]

(3) if he will list the amount, and proportion, of paper recycled by his Department in each of the last five years. [11561]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to my hon. Friend and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the nuclear accident response organisation was set up; and how many units within his Department report to it. [11828]

Mr. Spellar: A nuclear accident response capability has been in existence since the 1950s, when my Department began to use nuclear material. This capability has been developed over time into what is now known as the MOD Nuclear Accident Response Organisation. This organisation would draw on skills from a range of units across the armed forces and the MOD.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department plans to hold the next exercise to test procedures for dealing with accidents involving nuclear weapons on British territory; where this exercise will be held; and what is the title of this exercise. [11947]

Mr. Spellar: The next exercise—Exercise Senator 97—to test procedures in the event of an accident involving nuclear weapons on British territory, will be held between 22 and 26 September 1997 in conjunction with the authorities in Lincolnshire. Details of the exercise will be sent in the normal way to the hon. Members in whose constituencies the exercise will occur.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make public reports of exercises held to test his Department's procedures for dealing with an accident involving nuclear weapons on British territory. [11946]

Mr. Spellar: The reports of exercises held to test the Department's procedures for dealing with an accident involving nuclear weapons are classified or management in confidence documents. Making these reports public could affect the candour with which participants comment on experience and undermine the value of the exercises. We are considering, in consultation with all participating agencies, whether a summary of exercise activities should be publicly available on request.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the members of the nuclear weapons safety committee, indicating the Government Departments and organisations they represent. [11948]

Mr. Spellar: The members of the nuclear weapon safety committee are as follows:

Professor Sir John Cadogan CBE FRSE HON FEng FRS (Chairman)

Professor R.J. Berry RD FRCP FRCR FFOM

Professor R.H. Clarke

Mr. H.J. Dunster CB

Dr. B. Edmondson

Dr. B.L. Eyre CBE FEng

Mr. D.C. Fakley OBE

Professor J. E. Field OBE FRS

Rear Admiral J. S. Grove CB OBE RN Retired

Sir John Hill FEng FRS

Mr. P.G.E.F. Jones CB

Dr. F.H. Panton CBE

Members are invited to serve on the committee in their own right as acknowledged experts in the nuclear field. As such, they do not represent any particular organisations or Government Departments. They are assisted by officials from my Department who also attend meetings as and when necessary.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what guidelines for service personnel he has drawn up on how to fight fires involving nuclear weapons; when the latest version of these were issued; and how many versions have been issued since 1967. [11958]

Mr. Spellar: Instructions to service personnel on fighting fires involving nuclear weapons are contained in various service publications, which are updated as necessary. The key principles in these instructions are the same as the guidelines issued to civilian fire service personnel in the "local authority and emergency service information on nuclear weapon transport contingency plans"—the LAESI document a copy of which is in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many exercises have been held since January 1996 to test his Department's procedures for dealing with an accident involving nuclear weapons on British territory; what were the names of these exercises; and where and when they were held. [11884]

Mr. Spellar: The following medium and major nuclear weapon accident exercises have been held since January 1996:

Nuclear weapon accident exercises since January 1996

Date	Name	Location
February 1996	Running Fox	Hampshire
April 1996	[1]Standardisation	Wiltshire
May 1996	Senator 96	Northumberland
June 1996	Running Fox	Hampshire
September 1996	Bowline	Argyll and Bute
October 1996	[1]Standardisation	Oxfordshire
October 1996	[1]Standardisation	Suffolk
November 1996	[1]Standardisation	South Glamorgan
March 1997	[1]Standardisation	Norfolk
April 1997	[1]Standardisation	Wiltshire
June 1997	[1]Standardisation	West Yorkshire

[1] Standardisation exercises test the RAF immediate response force teams for the transportation of nuclear weapons.

Information regarding minor exercises, organised at unit level is not held centrally.

Meteorological Experiments

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will open for public inspection at the Public Record Office the file with the classmark AIR 2/17902 relating to meteorological experiments. [11956]

Mr. Spellar: In line with our commitment to greater openness, arrangements are being made to review AIR 2/17902 ahead of its scheduled review date. Companion files, AIR 2/17903 and 17904, will also be examined at the same time. I will write to the hon. Member on completion of the review process and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

10 Squadron (Cargo)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the nature of the material which was transported from RAF Brize Norton to Dover Air Force base in the United States of America by 10 Squadron on (a) 10 February, (b) 12 May and (c) 16 May; from which establishment this material originated; what was the ultimate destination of the material; and under which defence agreement this material was transferred. [11957]

Mr. Spellar: I am withholding the information requested under exemption 1 of the code of practice on access to Government information relating to defence, security and international relations.

Office Refurbishment

Mr. Terry Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the refurbishment of ministerial offices in his Department; and what is the estimated cost of the works and date of completion. [11871]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to my hon. Friend and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Air Force Bases (Germany)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Royal Air Force began operating from its bases at Laarbruch and Bruggen in Germany; and what use is currently made of the bases by the Royal Air Force. [11857]

Mr. Spellar: RAF Laarbruch commenced operations in November 1954. Currently, the station is the main operating base for Numbers 3 and 4 squadrons, equipped with Harrier GR7 aircraft, and Numbers 1 (Field) and 26 (Rapier) squadrons, RAF regiment. RAF Bruggen commenced operations in July 1953. Currently, the station is the main operating base for Numbers 9, 14, 17 and 31 squadrons, equipped with Tornado GR1 aircraft, and Number 37 squadron RAF regiment.

RAF Menwith Hill

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department received a copy of the report carried out by a United States department inspector general into breaches of security at RAF Menwith Hill in 1993. [11853]

Mr. Spellar: The inspector general's office is an auditing body with no locus in security matters. However, there is a regular dialogue between my Department and the US authorities concerning security at RAF Menwith Hill and I am aware that an internal US review was carried out in 1993.

Military Assistance

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the review of the practice of withholding details of military assistance to other countries is expected to be completed. [11964]

Mr. Spellar: Work on the review is continuing. I expect to make an announcement to the House soon after Parliament returns in the autumn.

WE-177 Bomb

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the WE-177 bomb is expected to be withdrawn from service; and which types of WE-177 have been in service and on what dates. [11954]

Mr. Spellar: The WE-177 type B bomb entered service on 1966. The type A and type C variants entered service in 1969 and 1973 respectively. The last of these weapons will be withdrawn, as previously announced, on 31 March 1998.

AWE Aldermaston Newsletter

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how often the newsletter at the atomic weapons establishment, Aldermaston is produced; when the newsletter was first produced; and what is the current security classification. [11965]

Mr. Spellar: An internal newsletter has been produced at the atomic weapons establishment since November 1953. It is issued six times a year and is unclassified. A recent additional innovation is an occasional magazine, "AWE Community Link", which is distributed to some 10,000 households in the locality.

Defence Employment

Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the figures for military personnel employed in 1996 by local authority area. [11576]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Defence Analytical Services Agency and I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Paul Altobell to Sir George Young, dated 31 July 1997:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence requesting publication of "figures for military personnel employed in 1996 by local authority area" since this falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of Defence Analytical Services Agency.

This information is published annually by Defence Analytical Services Agency in our tri-service personnel series under the title "UK Regular Forces" strengths in the United Kingdom by local authority area.

The latest version covers the deployment of Armed Forces as at 1 July 1996. Copies of this return are available from the House of Commons library.

I hope you find the information useful.

Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list for each region the number of employees in defence industries for the financial year 1995–96. [11579]

Mr. Spellar: The information requested is not available precisely in the form requested. However, table 1.12 of the 1997 edition of "UK Defence Statistics", published on 29 July, gives the provisional estimated UK regional employment directly dependent on defence equipment expenditure, that is to say those working directly for defence contractors. A copy of "UK Defence Statistics 1997" has been placed in the Library of the House.

British Prisoners of War (Salary Payments)

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy in respect of the payment of salaries to British officers held as prisoners of war in future conflicts. [11723]

Mr. Spellar: British officers who are taken prisoner of war in any future conflict will continue to receive their pay unless the Defence Council or an officer authorised by them is satisfied:

(a) that they were made prisoners through their own disobedience to orders or wilful neglect of duty;

(b) that having been made prisoners they failed to take any reasonable steps available to them to rejoin Her Majesty's service;

(c) that having been made prisoners they served with, or aided, the enemy in the prosecution of hostilities or measures calculated to influence morale or in any other manner whatsoever not authorised by international usage.

(d) That they were in receipt of pay advanced by the detaining power.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy towards the payment of salary to officers from the armed forces who were held as prisoners of war during the Gulf conflict. [11722]

Mr. Spellar: British officers who were taken prisoner during the Gulf conflict continued to receive their pay for the few weeks they were held captive.

Land Mines

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 25 July, Official Report, column 785, on land mines, when his officials first learnt that all British anti-personnel land mines had not been taken up following conflicts in the Falkland Islands and the Gulf. [11611]

Mr. Spellar: Officials in my Department have been aware since the clearance of British minefields in the Falkland Islands in August 1986 that one British anti-personnel land mine could not be located.

The officials responsible for providing my right hon. Friend with advice on this subject were informed on 10 July 1997 by those responsible for laying the anti-personnel land mines in Iraq that not all have been recovered.

Officers

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many serving officers hold the ranks of (a) field marshal, (b) general, (c) lieutenant general and (d) major general or their equivalents in the (i) Army, (ii) Royal Air Force, (iii) Navy and (iv) Royal Marines; how many and what percentage of each category attended fee-paying private schools; what steps are being taken to ensure that future officer intakes reflect the educational provision of the UK; and if he will make a statement. [12006]

Mr. Spellar: My hon. Friend the Minister for the Armed Forces will write to my hon. Friend and a copy of his letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what funding is presently committed from his departmental budget for (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000 to resolve the 2000 computer problem; and if he will make a statement. [11900]

Mr. Spellar: In accordance with guidelines issued by the Cabinet Office and the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency Year 2000 Public Sector Group, my Department is examining its computer systems to determine their susceptibility, if any, to the year 2000 problem and to produce plans for the necessary modifications. The estimated costs of these modifications will not be available until later this year. My Department has also stressed the importance of this issue to industry. For all new procurements, the Department is insisting year 2000 compliance as a condition of contract.

Document AIR 2/16918

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons his Department withdrew AIR 2/16918 from the Public Record Office; which offices within his Department consulted the document; on what date the document was received from and returned to the Public Record Office; and if he will make a statement. [12239]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment of the medical effects of the CS gas solvent, methyl isobutyl ketone has been made by officials of his Department since 1990; how many published or internal reports have been written on this subject by his Department's medical officers since 1990; and how many of these reports are currently unclassified. [12176]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to my hon. Friend and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Abbeywood

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list in respect of Abbeywood (a) the number of part-time and full-time employees, (b) the totals of (i) wages and salaries, (ii) national insurance and (iii) pensions in respect of each category, (c) the totals of (1) travel costs and (2) housing costs in respect of all employees at Abbeywood and (d) all expenditure on Abbeywood broken down by category in 1996–97; and what was the total of expenditure listed in (d) as a percentage of that year's total Ministry of Defence outturn. [11597]

Mr. Spellar: The major occupier of the Abbeywood site is the Procurement Executive with 3,999 full-time and 74 part-time employees. Sharing the site is the Ships Support Agency with 754 full-time and 12 part-time employees.

Costs related to the specific categories requested are not readily available and will require further investigation. I will write to the hon. Member with further information when it is available and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Gulf War Syndrome

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many of the biological detection system vehicles operated by the 1 field laboratory unit during the Gulf war (a) arrived at their destination with scientific equipment damaged and (b) were repaired to full operational capability by the end of the conflict; and if he will make a statement; [11879]

(2) in what form were samples collected by the Sandfly air sampling system on each of the nine vehicles of the 1 field laboratory unit in the Gulf war (a) recorded and (b) stored; and where those samples and records are currently kept. [11596]

Dr. Reid: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all papers prepared by Dr. Coker for his Department's Gulf war illness inquiries; and if he will place in the Library copies of all reports. [12018]

Mr. Spellar: Group Captain Coker published a paper on the results from the first 284 patients seen by the MoD's medical assessment programme—MAP—in the summer 1996 edition of the Journal of the Royal Naval Medical Service—"A Review of Gulf War Illness".—I have arranged for a copy of this paper to be placed in the Library of the House.

In late 1996, the group captain prepared the first draft of a paper concerning the results from some 500 MAP patients. However, in the event work on this draft paper was never completed.

Doctors at the MAP have now seen 1,520 patients and the Government have undertaken to publish detailed results form the programme later this year. Group Captain Coker will be closely involved with this work, which will supersede his earlier draft paper.

Hadleigh

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons his Department has closed its site on the outskirts of Hadleigh in Suffolk; when this site was first opened by the Ministry of Defence; and what was its function. [12103]

Mr. Spellar: The reasons for closing ammunition compound Hadleigh were, as the site is in close proximity to residential development, the explosive licences issued were so restrictive and therefore the full range of ammunition required by units based in East Anglia could not be stored. The cost of running the site was high as the movement of ammunition in to and out of the storage buildings was manpower intensive, the design of the buildings precluded the use of mechanical handling equipment.

The site was first opened during world war two.

The function of the site was to store ammunition.

Nuclear Warheads

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of active nuclear warheads available to British forces for each year since 1975. [11797]

Mr. Spellar: I am withholding this information under exemption 1 of the code of practice on access to Government information relating to defence, security and international relations.

Hawk Jet Sales

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what factors underlie the continued sale of Hawk jets. [11831]

Mr. Spellar: Any application for a licence to export Hawks will be considered in accordance with the Government's policy on the export of conventional arms, as announced by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary on 28 July, Official Report, columns 26–29.

American Submarines

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy in respect of the use of British waters by American submarines with nuclear capability. [11815]

Mr. Spellar: United States Navy nuclear-powered and nuclear-armed submarines may visit UK waters or designated berths subject to prior agreement with my Department. However, as with all vessels, they have a right of innocent passage through territorial waters.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Departmental Payroll

Mr. Todd: To ask the President of the Council if she will list each of the functions relating to the payroll for which her Department is responsible, indicating the management systems purchased, all subcontractors involved in the work, co-operative arrangements with other Departments and the costs of the systems and processes in the last year for which figures are available. [10746]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The collation and processing of payments to my Department's staff are carried out within the Privy Council Office; the staff costs associated with this work are estimated at £1,900 in the year 1996–97. The actual payments are made by Chessington Computer Services Ltd., which uses the SPIRE—standard payroll input and retrieval—management system; the cost of this contract in the year 1996–97 was £4,900.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Environmental Audit Committee

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Council if she will ensure that the reports of the proposed environmental audit committee are debated on the Floor of the House. [10674]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: I cannot give any undertakings, but I hope that it will be possible to find opportunities for the House to give appropriate consideration to the work of the committee.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Council if she will ensure that the proposed environmental audit committee is able to investigate and comment on legislation before it reaches Committee stage. [10675]

Mrs. Taylor: It will be for the committee to decide the subjects for its own inquiries.

The possibility of a Select Committee inquiry before the Second Reading of a Bill is discussed in the first report from the Select Committee on Modernisation of the House of Commons, which was published on Tuesday 29 July.

Scottish Business

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the President of the Council how much time has been spent by the House and its Committees considering Scottish issues in each of the past five years, indicating separately time spent on (i) Bills, (ii) questions and (iii) debates on (a) education, (b) housing, (c) transport, (d) social work, (e) employment and economic development and (f) other subjects. [10179]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The information is available in parliamentary Session, rather than calendar year. The hon. Member should note that Session 1992–93 was longer than usual, and 1996–97 shorter than usual, due to general elections.

1992–93: 28 meetings, 15 visits, one report and four minutes/memoranda of evidence and appendices.

Public Accounts Commission

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chairman of the Public Accounts Commission what discussions he has held with the Comptroller and Auditor General on the cost of inspecting the accounts of NHS trusts. [11846]

Mr. Sheldon: The Commission regularly discusses the costs of the National Audit Office's activities, most recently on 23 July 1997 when it considered the NAO's corporate plan for 1998–99 to 2002–03. The costs of inspecting the accounts of NHS trusts are included in the plan, but were not separately identified or discussed.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Waste Minimisation

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what plans he has to introduce a waste minimisation strategy for his Department; [11547]

(2) if he will list the amount, and proportion, of paper recycled by his Department in each of the last five years; [11549]

(3) if he will make a statement on existing targets set to minimise waste within his Department. [11548]

Mr. Fatchett: In 1996, in response to the White Paper "A Strategy for Sustainable Waste Management", we commissioned consultants to propose a waste minimisation strategy. Before then, there were no statistics available. Our consultants estimated that in 1996 this Department produced around 3,900 tons of solid waste per annum; 2,280 came from our London sites and 1,620 from our Hanslope Park site near Milton Keynes. Of the total, around 2,900 tons went ultimately to landfill. The balance, around 1,000 tons from the London sites, was incinerated by Westminster city council and the heat recovered for power generation.

Our current aim for central London by recycling, mainly paper, is to reduce by the year 2000 the amount of solid waste sent for landfill by 400 tons per annum, equivalent to a 33 per cent. reduction. Elements of this strategy were already in place in 1996 whereby white paper and toner cartridges were recycled.

At our Hanslope Park site, we are aiming for a reduction of 300 tons on the same time scale, representing a 20 per cent. reduction. At Hanslope Park, where we have a dispatch and packing operation, we introduced a recycling arrangement, whereby incoming cardboard packing material is shredded for reuse as an alternative to polystyrene products. We estimate that the financial savings from not dumping the cardboard as landfill, and not having to buy as much polystyrene packing materials, will meet the cost of the shredding equipment within 18 months. This is in addition to significantly reducing the amount of material sent to landfill.

The long-term aim of our waste minimisation strategy is to reduce by the year 2000 the proportion of waste going to landfill to 60 per cent. of the 1996 figure.

Rockall

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reason he proposes to give up British claims to the area of the Atlantic around Rockall. [11779]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: British fishery limits to the west of Rockall will be redrawn upon the UK's accession to the United Nations convention on the law of the sea. The conversion will bring many advantages to the UK, including the right to impose strong anti-pollution measures around our shores and important freedom of navigation. The convention provides that rocks which cannot sustain human habitation or economic life of their own shall have no exclusive economic zone or continental shelf.

Even before accession, the UK's claim to 200-mile fishery limits based on Rockall was highly questionable. Rockall itself will remain part of Scotland with a 12-mile territorial sea, and will remain within British fishery limits, as will the Rockall Bank and the new deep water fisheries to the east of Rockall. Redrawing our fishery limits has no effect on our continental shelf to the west of Rockall.

Straddling Stocks

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the rules relating to straddling stocks under the UN law of the sea convention 1983; when they come into force; and if he will make a statement on the capacity of flag states to take action against foreign vessels taking straddling stocks. [11955]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The United Nations convention on the law of the sea—UNCLOS—of 10 December 1982, which enters into force for the United Kingdom on 24 August, contains a number of provisions relevant to straddling fish stocks, including a requirement that the states concerned seek to agree measures to conserve such stocks in the high seas. A detailed framework agreement of 1995 implementing these provisions of UNCLOS has been signed by the United Kingdom, but is not yet in force.

A costal state may pursue into the high seas foreign vessels fishing for straddling stocks within its fishery limits in breach of its law and regulations. The control of vessels fishing for straddling stocks on the high seas is primarily the responsibility of the flag state. A coastal state will also be able to take action to the extent provided in the 1995 straddling stocks agreement, once it enters into force.

Defence Exports

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the differences between the criteria set out in his answer to the hon. Member for East Ham (Mr. Timms) of 28 July, Official Report, columns 26–29 and the criteria followed by the previous Government. [11885]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The new criteria for considering licence applications for the export of conventional arms build on the UK's commitments to guidelines on arms transfers agreed with permanent members of the UN Security Council, the European Union and the then Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe.

The new criteria are more detailed and precise than those followed by the previous Government. They represent a clear tightening of policy on arms exports, inter alia, by:

moving from an assessment of whether equipment is likely to be used for internal repression of international aggression to an assessment of whether equipment might be so used; requiring officials to consider clear evidence of recent use of similar equipment exported by any country;

providing detailed guidance on the meaning of internal repression; giving guidance on those goods which have a more obvious potential for use in internal repression.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contracts permitted by the previous Government he intends to prohibit in accordance with the criteria set out in his answer to the hon. Member for East Ham of 28 July, Official Report, columns 26–29. [11886]

Mr. Lloyd: As my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary announced on 28 July, Official Report, columns 26–29, we were not responsible for the decisions on export licences made by the previous Administration. We do not, however, consider it realistic or practical to revoke licences which were valid and in force at the time of our election.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for East Ham of 28 July, Official Report, columns 26–29, for what reasons Her Majesty's Government do not consider it would be realistic or practical to revoke arms exports licences which were valid and in force at the time of the general election. [12211]

Mr. Lloyd: I will write to my hon. Friend shortly.

Sikander Mahmood

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the re-application for entry clearance by Sikander Mahmood, Islam Abad ref. IMM/D2436, will be dealt with (a) on the documentation submitted and (b) by interview. [11793]

Mr. Fatchett: We have asked our high commission in Islamabad for a detailed account of the application and my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs will write to my hon. Friend within one week of receiving that account.

Indonesia

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what factors underlie the continued sale of Hawk jets to Indonesia. [11832]

Mr. Fatchett: The decision to authorise the issue of the current licences to export 16 Hawk Aircraft to Indonesia was announced to the House on 21 November 1996, Official Report, column 676.

As my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary told the House on 28 July, Official Report, columns 26–29, the present Government were not responsible for the decisions on export licences made by the previous Administration. We do not, however, consider that it would be realistic or practical to revoke licences that were valid and in force at the time of our election.

East Timor

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) how many British made (a) Land Rovers, (b) water cannon and (c) other military, security and police equipment and vehicles are currently deployed in East Timor; and where they are located; [12105]

(2) what steps the British Government have taken to ascertain the amount of British-made military, security and police vehicles and equipment currently deployed by Indonesia in East Timor; and what mechanisms have been put in place to monitor the end use in East Timor of such vehicles and equipment; [12106]

(3) what assurances the Government have received from the Indonesian authorities regarding the deployment and use of British-made military, security and police equipment and vehicles in East Timor. [12104]

Mr. Fatchett: I will write to my hon. Friend shortly.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what funding is presently committed from his departmental budget for (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000 to resolve the year 2000 computer problem; and if he will make a statement. [11892]

Mr. Fatchett: This Department's current cost estimate is £3 million—excluding the cost of replacement office automation systems, which will be millennium compliant, introduced before March 1999. We do not yet know the likely cost breakdown over the period in question. We will submit costed year 2000 plans to the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency by October 1997, in accordance with central requirements.

Congo

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what efforts his Department is making to monitor the human rights situation in eastern areas of the Democratic Republic of the Congo; [12091]

(2) what plans he has to refer the human rights record of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to (a) the UN Security Council and (b) the Organisation for African Unity; [12092]

(3) if he will make a statement on the human rights situation in eastern areas of the Democratic Republic of the Congo. [12090]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I will write to my hon Friend shortly.

Burma

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking against the State Law and Order Restoration Committee regime in Burma; what plans he has to support sanctions against the regime; and if he will make a statement. [12225]

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking to encourage the UN to investigate the conditions in the Karenni relocation camps in Burma and the activities there of SLORC forces. [12241]

Mr. Fatchett: I will write to my hon. Friends shortly.

Karabakh Conflict

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the new proposals of the three co-chairmen of the Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe Minsk conference for a settlement of the Karabakh conflict; and if he will make a statement. [11984]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Cambodia

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what discussions he has had with other European Union countries regarding recent events in Cambodia; and if he will make a statement; [12014]

(2) what reports he has received on the involvement of Cambodian Government officials in the drugs trade; and if he will make a statement; [12089]

(3) what representations he has made to the Government of Cambodia following the recent coup d'etat; and if he will make a statement; [12012]

(4) what consideration he has given to the withdrawal of Her Majesty's ambassador in Phnom Penh following the recent coup d'etat by the minority party in the coalition Government established after the supervised elections; and if he will make a statement. [12013]

Mr. Fatchett: I will write to my hon. Friend shortly.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to his letter of 26 June concerning a constituent; and why no acknowledgement has been sent to him. [11985]

Mr. Fatchett: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs will write to my hon. Friend shortly.

British Embassy, Berlin

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to announce the preferred bidder for the private finance initiative contract for the British embassy in Berlin; and if he will make a statement. [12278]

Mr. Fatchett: The Department has selected Bebcon, a consortium of prominent German contractors and financiers, as the preferred bidder for the new British embassy offices in Berlin.

The embassy will be built to a design by Michael Wilford and Partners, winners of the 1995 embassy design competition, on the site of the pre-war British embassy in Wilhelmstrasse. Under the eventual contract, Bebcon will finance, construct and then manage the building for 30 years. Building work will start around the end of this year, and the embassy staff will move into the new building in autumn 1999.

This is the Department's pathfinder private finance initiative overseas estate project. European Union competition procedures and British Government private finance initiative guidance have been followed throughout.

European Council

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the forthcoming business in the Council of the European Union for August; and if he will list major EU events for the next six months. [12279]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The information is as follows:

Entry Clearance

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he intends to lay before the House the 1996 report by Dame Elizabeth Anson, the independent monitor of refusal of entry clearance where there is no right of appeal. [12266]

Mr. Robin Cook: The report was laid today. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of the House. I welcome the report and note Dame Elizabeth's recommendations, which will receive careful consideration.

North Atlantic Assembly

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the United Kingdom delegation to the North Atlantic Assembly. [12280]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The following will represent the United Kingdom at the North Atlantic Assembly:

Mr. Donald Anderson MP (Leader)
Mr. Hugh Bayley MP
Mr. Menzies Campbell MP
Mr. Harry Cohen MP
Mr. Frank Cook MP
The right hon. Sir Peter Emery MP
Mr. Bruce George MP
The Lord Gladwyn of Clee
Mr. Mike Hancock MP
Mrs. Sylvia Heal MP
The right hon. Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith MP
The Lord Kennet
Alice Mahon MP
Mr. Michael Mates MP
Mr. John Smith MP
Rachel Squire MP
Mr. Peter Viggers MP
The right hon. Alan Williams MP

Departmental Payroll

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list each of the functions relating to the payroll for which his Department is responsible, indicating the management systems purchased, all subcontractors involved in the work, co-operative arrangements with other departments and the costs of the systems and processes in the last year for which figures are available. [10730]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: This Department is responsible for the assessment of staff pay, the preparation of input, the evaluation of output and the reconciliation of the pay account.

No management system has been purchased and there is no subcontractor involved.

The calculation of pay is carried out on our behalf by GCHQ Cheltenham.

The total cost of the in-house part of the whole operation is currently £1,160,000 per annum. This includes direct staff costs plus the cost of accommodation. The pay calculation running costs are borne by GCHQ, this Department having contributed to the original set-up costs.

Kenya

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implications of the moral and ethical principles of his foreign policy for relations with Kenya. [11292]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave him on 2 June, Official Report, column 81. We will treat respect for human rights as an important element in determining our overall relationship with Kenya. I underlined to the Kenyan Government and opposition the importance we attach to free and fair elections when I visited the country from 25 to 28 June. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for International Development made clear on 16 July, Official Report, column 195, we will take account of further developments in this respect in deciding on future development assistance to Kenya. We have condemned the recent violence in Kenya and continue to urge all concerned to agree through peaceful dialogue on how the necessary conditions for free and fair elections can be established.

Defence Equipment (Export Licences)

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many export licences for defence equipment were issued between 1 May and 22 July. [10651]

Mrs. Roche: From 1 May up to and including 22 July 1997, 1,701 export licences were issued for the export of military, security and paramilitary goods and arms, ammunition and related material, controlled under part III of schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994; 1,673 were standard individual export licences, and 28 were open individual export licences.

PRIME MINISTER

Policy Unit

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the commercial and other external interests of the members of his policy unit. [10399]

The Prime Minister: No. As with all other civil servants, the members of my policy unit are not required to publish their private interests. However they are required to ensure that there is no conflict between their private interests and their public duties.

"Questions of Procedure for Ministers"

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister how many revisions have been made to "Questions of Procedure for Ministers" since May 1992; what paragraphs were revised and in what way; what factors underlay each revision; and on what dates each revision was announced to Parliament. [10406]

The Prime Minister: Three amendments to "Questions of Procedure for Ministers" have been made since May 1992. The first revised paragraphs 118 to 123 and was announced to the House on 21 July 1994, Official Report, column 551. The second, which revised paragraph 1 was amended after debate on the then Government's response to the first report of the Committee on Standards in Public Life Cm2931 and announced on 2 November 1995, Official Report, column 456. The most recent amendment was again to paragraph 1 and was set out in the then Government's response to the second report from the Public Service Committee on ministerial accountability and responsibility, HC 67, published 5 November 1996, the publication of which was announced to the House on 7 November 1996 Official Report, column 594. The background to the changes was set out in the statements to the House at the time and, in the case of the latter change, the Government response to the Public Service Select Committee report.

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Prime Minister whether he has issued a new edition of "Questions of Procedure for Ministers" to his ministerial colleagues. [12268]

The Prime Minister: I have issued to ministerial colleagues a successor document to "Questions of Procedure for Ministers" called the "Ministerial Code—a Code of Conduct and Guidance on Procedures for Ministers". I expect all Ministers to work within the letter and spirit of this code, in order to uphold the highest standards of honesty and propriety which the British people fairly expect of those in public life. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

I have also issued to my ministerial colleagues, "Guidance on the work of the Government Information Service"—a document which brings together in one place the guidance on the entire range of the Government information service's work. Copies of this have also been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Arms Sales

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list those Departments with responsibility for arms sales indicating the particular responsibilities in each case. [10518]

The Prime Minister: The Departments most involved in matters related to defence exports are the Ministry of Defence, the Department of Trade and Industry, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and HM Customs and Excise. The Defence Export Services Organisation, in the MOD, provides British defence exporters with the strongest possible Government support, within the framework of our defence, security and foreign policies. Licences to export controlled goods are issued by the President of the Board of Trade. All relevant individual licence applications are circulated by DTI to other Government Departments with an interest. These will normally include the FCO, MOD and Department for International Development. The DTI is also the sponsoring Department for the defence industry itself. It works closely with industry on the whole range of issues relating to its effectiveness. The FCO plays an active role in promoting British industry overseas and advises on the foreign policy implications of defence exports. Finally, HM Customs and Excise are responsible for the enforcement of export controls.

Sovereign (Documents)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if he will reduce the 100-year embargo on the release of documents relating to the sovereign and the sovereign's family. [10613]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 25 July 1997]: There is currently no statutory embargo on the release of public records relating to the royal family. The forthcoming White Paper on freedom of information will address the issue of public access to all types of Government records.

Departmental Payroll

Mr. Todd: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list each of the functions relating to the payroll for which his Department is responsible, indicating the management systems purchased, all sub-contractors involved in the work, co-operative arrangements with other Departments and the costs of the systems and processes in the last year for which figures are available. [10734]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, Official Report, 29 July 1997, columns 140–41.

Open Government

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 14 July, Official Report, column 44, if he will consider opening the other papers in the classmark CAB171 at the Public Record Office. [10954]

The Prime Minister: I shall consider this and let the hon. Member know the outcome once all the material has been reviewed.

Palestine

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on UK-Palestine relations following his recent discussions with Chairman Arafat of the Palestine National Authority. [11338]

The Prime Minister: I was pleased to welcome President Arafat to London and to reiterate the Government's support for his work in the cause of peace in the middle east.

I made clear our concern at the continuing deadlock and our strong support for international efforts to get the peace process back on track. We believe that it is important that neither side acts in a way that damages the prospects for peace. I reaffirmed to President Arafat our view that the continued building of Israeli settlements is not only illegal under international law, but a major obstacle in the way of peace.

I urged President Arafat to do everything possible to contain violence and to ensure the Palestinian Authority's respect for human rights. I reaffirmed Britain's willingness to continue playing an active role in the search for a just and lasting peace based on the two key principles of land for peace and the right of Israel to live in peace within secure and recognised boundaries. As we approach our presidency of the European Union, we shall be giving particular attention to ways in which Europe can contribute.

I also reassured President Arafat of the United Kingdom's continuing strong material support for the Palestinians.

Scottish Parliament

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the security of funding for (a) accommodation and (b) services for the Scottish Assembly over the next (i) 10 and (ii) 20 years. [9927]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 30 July 1997]: The Government's proposals for the funding of the Scottish Parliament are set out in the White Paper, "Scotland's Parliament", which was published on 24 July.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the impact of the division of responsibility between (a) a Scottish Assembly and (b) the Westminster Parliament on the capacity of (i) the Privy Council and (ii) other courts to evolve a corpus of consistent rulings in the legislative competence of the Assembly. [11732]

The Prime Minister: The proposed procedures for identifying and resolving problems over the legislative competence of the Scottish Parliament are set out in the White Paper, "Scotland's Parliament" at paragraphs 4.15 and 4.17. The Government believe that problems would normally be resolved amicably, but there would be procedures for establishing the competence of the Scottish Parliament both before and after legislation is considered by it; and there would be provision for unresolved disputes about vires to be referred to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. There is no reason why the courts should not evolve a consistent body of rulings.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the areas of Scots law which would be subject to the Scottish Parliament and not subject to Westminster. [11802]

The Prime Minister: The White Paper, "Scotland's Parliament" makes clear that all matters that are not specifically reserved would be devolved and would therefore fall within the legislative competence of the Scottish Parliament. A list of such matters is included in chapter 2 of the White Paper. Chapter 3 summarises the matters which would be observed.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if future United Kingdom legislation will include United Kingdom extent provisions following the introduction of a Scottish Parliament. [11801]

The Prime Minister: Following the introduction of a Scottish Parliament, United Kingdom legislation would continue where appropriate to include clauses defining its territorial extent.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the impact of a Scottish Parliament on the current judicial structure. [11803]

The Prime Minister: It is made clear in the White Paper "Scotland's Parliament" that responsibility for the criminal justice system and prosecution system for the civil and criminal courts in Scotland would be devolved to the Scottish Parliament. It would be a matter for the Scottish Parliament to determine how it discharges that responsibility, although I would expect it to pay full regard to the independence and standing of the judiciary. The two most senior judicial appointments in Scotland—The Lord President of the Court of Session and the Lord Justice Clerk—would however continue to be made by the Queen, on my advice, but on the basis of nominations from the Scottish Executive.

Amsterdam Summit

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Stone (Mr. Cash) of 26 June, Official Report, column 608, if he will make a statement on the obligations of member states not participating in the Euro-area as set out in the presidency conclusions at Amsterdam. [11423]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 30 July 1997]: As I said in my previous reply, membership of the new exchange rate mechanism will be voluntary. There is therefore no legal obligation to join.

Policy Reviews

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Prime Minister what recent instructions and guidelines he has given to Departments in relation to future policy reviews; and if he will make a statement. [11888]

The Prime Minister: Proposals for reviews should be cleared through my office, to ensure that they are considered in the context of the Government's overall agenda.

Age Discrimination

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister what is the Government's policy towards age discrimination in elections to public bodies. [11713]

The Prime Minister: Appointments to public bodies are governed by the overriding principle of selection based on merit. The Commissioner for Public Appointments' "Guidance on Appointment's to Executive Non-Departmental Public Bodies and NHS bodies", which is mandatory for all Government Departments, states that age should not be a criterion in drawing up a specification for a public appointment unless there is a need to balance the age range of membership. However, even then, age should not be used as the deciding factor when making appointments.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on age discrimination in employment; and if he will make a statement. [11792]

Mr. Alan Willians: To ask the Prime Minister what is his policy in relation to age discrimination; and what steps have been taken to implement the policy. [11806]

The Prime Minister: The Government firmly believe that age discrimination is unfair and makes no economic sense for business or society. However, tackling it is a complex matter and it is important to ensure that any action we take will bring real benefits. That is why we have already announced our intention to consult widely on age discrimination in employment to obtain a consensus on the best way forward.

Minister without Portfolio

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister for what reason the Government were represented at meetings in France on Thursday 17 July with (a) the French President's aide-de-camp and (b) the French Minister in charge of European affairs by the Minister without Portfolio. [11812]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him today by my hon. Friend the Minister without Portfolio.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to the answer of the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster of 22 July, Official Report, column 525, if he will include the answering practices of the Minister without Portfolio in the review of ministerial accountability. [11976]

The Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to the reply given by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 22 July, Official Report, column 525.

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the persons who were not established civil servants on 2 May whose salaries are currently being paid by Government Departments, identifying those who previously assisted the campaigning activity of the Labour party under the present Minister without Portfolio; and if he will list the current salaries and positions held by each of these persons. [5421]

The Prime Minister [pursuant to his reply, 18 July, c. 340–41]: Mr. Bernard Gray should be added to the list of special advisers.

Council of Europe

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Prime Minister if he will announce the composition of the United Kingdom delegation for the September 1997 part session of the parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe. [12281]

The Prime Minister: The September 1997 part-session of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe will be opened in Strasbourg on 22 September. The delegation from the United Kingdom for the session will consist of 23 members of the Labour party, nine of the Conservative party and four members from the minority parties. The delegation will serve in place of the current delegation from the opening of September 1997 part-session.

The appointments of representatives and substitutes have been made on the basis of nominations by the parties concerned, in accordance with the resolution of this House on 22 May 1992, Official Report, column 682 and of the House of Lords on 18 June 1992, columns 290–92.

The same delegation will be representing the United Kingdom Parliament at the Assembly of the Western European Union.

Representatives from the Government benches will be:

The hon. Member for Birmingham Hodge Hill (Mr. Davis), who will act as leader; the hon. Members for Tooting (Mr. Cox); for Leigh (Mr. Cunliffe); for Sunderland, North (Mr. Etherington) for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn); for Glasgow, Maryhill (Mrs. Fyfe); for Hull, North (Mr. McNamara); for Leicester, South (Mr. Marshall); for Knowsley, South (Mr. O'Hara); for Glasgow Baillieston (Mr. Wray); Lord Kirkhill and Lord Ponsonby of Shulbrede.

Representatives from the Conservative Party will be:

The hon. Members for: Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson); for Chipping Barnet (Sir Sydney Chapman); for East Yorkshire (Mr. Townend) and Lord Newall.

Representatives from the minority parties will be:

The right. hon. Member for Strangford (Mr. Taylor) and Lord Russell-Johnston.

The following substitutes have been appointed to act as necessary on behalf of the delegates.

From the Government Benches: the hon. Members for Keighley (Mrs. Cryer); for Wolverhampton, South-West (Ms Jones); for Bristol, North-West (Mr. Naysmith); for Dover (Mr. Prosser); for Stourbridge (Ms Shipley); for Basildon (Angela Smith); for Morecombe and Lunesdale (Miss Smith); for Leicestershire, North-West (Mr. Taylor); for Finchley and Golders Green; (Mr. Vis); Lord Grenfell and Lord Judd.

From the Conservative party—the hon. Members for Romsey (Mr. Colvin); for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. Pickles); for Solihull (Mr. Taylor); for Spelthorne (Mr. Wilshire) and the Earl of Dundee.

From the minority parties—the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock) and the Lord Steel of Aikwood.

Written Questions

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Prime Minister what has been the total cost of answering written questions tabled by the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker). [12536]

The Prime Minister: I am advised by POLIS that the hon. Member has tabled some 295 questions. The total cost is estimated at £30,000 since the beginning of May.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Higher Education

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if he will estimate, in 1995–96 prices, the level of Government expenditure on higher education for (a) 1990–91, (b) 1991–92, (c) 1992–93, (d) 1993–94, (e) 1994–95, (f) 1995–96, (g) 1996–97, (h) 1997–98, (i) 1998–99, (j) 1999–2000 and (k) 2000–01, using (i) the plans as set out in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1997–98" including the estimates of the gross domestic product deflators contained therein, and (ii) the new estimates of the GDP deflator announced in the Budget and any additional moneys available as a consequence of the policy changes announced in his statement of 23 July; [11590]

(2) what is his estimate of the extra Government expenditure available for higher education as a consequence of his statement of 23 July for (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99, (c) 1999–2000 and (d) 2000—01; and if he will make a statement. [11591]

Dr. Howells: The table shows the level of Government expenditure on higher education institutions for the period from 1990–91 to 1999–2000, in line with the expenditure plans announced in the 1996 Budget which were not changed in the July 1997 Budget. No figures are available for 2000–2001 at this stage.

In his statement of 23 July on the Government's preferred approach to the future funding of higher education, my right hon. Friend said savings would be used to improve quality, standards and opportunity for all in further and higher education. I refer the hon. Member to the following answer which sets out our estimates of the net savings associated with this preferred approach. Net savings would start to accrue in 1999–2000. We have not yet taken decisions about extra Government expenditure for higher education in the light of these savings.

Mr. Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his estimate on the present accounting basis, of the (a) additional expenditure on higher education and (b) additional revenues accruing to the Exchequer in (1) 1998–99, (2) 1999–2000 and (3) 2000–01, as a consequence of the proposed changes to higher education tuition payments and student maintenance; and if he will make a statement. [11188]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 29 July 1997]: The following table shows the estimated cost of extending loans and the savings associated with the replacement of grants with loans and the introduction of tuition fees under the Government's preferred approach to the future funding of higher education announced by my right hon. Friend on 23 July. Figures are for financial years at 1995–96 prices. The net savings are therefore notional and have been derived independently of current expenditure plans. They are also dependent on the phasing of the introduction of the new loans arrangements.

£ million

	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01
Additional loans expenditure[1]	(400)	(750)	(1,100)
Grants savings	250	600	850
Tuition fee savings	150	250	400
Net savings	0	100	150

Mr. Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his estimate of student numbers in higher education for (a) 1990–91, (b) 1991–92, (c) 1992–93, (d) 1993–94, (e) 1994–95, (f) 1995–96, (g) 1996–97, (h) 1997–1998, (i) 1998–99, (j) 1999–2000 and (k) 2000–01. [11622]

Dr. Howells: The Government's estimates of higher education student numbers in England remain for the time being as shown in the table. No projections have yet been made for the year 2000–01.

Home and EU students (full-time equivalents, thousands) by academic year:

	Number
1990–91 actual	673
1991–92 actual	756
1992–93 actual	853
1993–94 actual	942
1994–95 actual	1,000
1995–96 provisional	1,041
1996–97 projected	1,046
1997–98 projected	1,042
1998–99 projected	1,058
1999–2000 projected	1,060

We shall review student numbers for future years in the light of our comprehensive spending review and of the recently published report of the national committee of inquiry into higher education under Sir Ron Dearing, whose aim of widening participation we support.

School Inspections

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to review the system of school inspections to ensure that schools that have received a satisfactory Office for Standards in Education report are not subject to a further inspection after an amalgamation; and if he will make a statement. [11082]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 30 July 1997]: The timing of school inspections and the requested analysis of inspections undertaken so far are matters for Her Majesty's chief inspector. I have asked him to write to my hon. Friend, placing a copy of his letter in the Library.

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what were the numbers of (a) Ofsted reports published up to 1 January 1997 for primary and secondary schools in England, (b) teaching staff in those schools and (c) teachers identified by the reports as poor or failing; and if he will make a statement. [11093]

Mr. Byers: The timing of school inspections and the requested analysis of inspections undertaken so far are matters for HMCI. I have asked him to write to the hon. Member, placing a copy of his letter in the Library.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will estimate the costs of the preparation and evaluation of inspection bids by (a) local education authorities, (b) private companies and (c) Ofsted, since the introduction of the compulsory competitive tendering regime. [5336]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 23 June 1997]: The costs of the preparation and evaluation of inspection bids are matters for HMCI. I understand that he has written to my hon. Friend and a copy of his letter is being placed in the Library.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proposals he has to end compulsory competitive tendering in school inspections. [5335]

Mr. Byers: I will write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of the reply in the Library.

Welfare to Work

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment under what legislative authority the Government will be implementing its welfare-to-work programme. [11638]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Opportunities for work, education and training under our new deal for young people and long term unemployed adults will be provided pursuant to arrangements made by the Secretary of State under the Employment and Training Act 1973, as amended by the Employment Act 1988. The new deal will deliver high quality options for 18 to 24-year-olds who claim the jobseeker's allowance for six months or more. We intend to amend the Jobseekers Allowance Regulations 1996, subject to the approval of Parliament, to ensure that young people who are entitled to benefit from the new deal also have responsibility for participating in the programme, and that there is no additional option of continuing indefinitely on full benefit.

New Deal

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to incorporate foyers into the gateway framework of the new deal; and if he will make a statement. [11917]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Foyers, like other interested organisations, will be able to bid to deliver appropriate parts of the gateway against the national specification which will set out the detailed arrangements for the provision of these services.

We are consulting widely on the design of the new deal for young unemployed people and on the range of provision which should be available during the gateway to help young people to overcome particular disadvantages and problems. Foyers, like other interested organisations, are fully involved in those consultations.

Oxbridge Entrants

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to increase the percentage of students entering Oxford and Cambridge universities from state schools. [11716]

Dr. Howells: The universities of Oxford and Cambridge are, like all higher education institutions, responsible for their own admissions procedures and Ministers are prevented by law from intervening in such matters.

Business (Government Assistance Schemes)

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people in each of the last five years qualified for assistance on (a) the enterprise allowance scheme and (b) the business start-up scheme in each standard region and Great Britain as a whole; and what was the annual expenditure in each year. [12172]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The enterprise allowance scheme was replaced in 1991–92 by the business start-up scheme which, in turn, was absorbed within the single regeneration budget in 1994–95. The precise information requested is not available, but starts by Government office region are available for 1994–95 and are given in table 1 and total expenditure and number of starts in England for each year of the programme are given in table 2.

Table 1: Business start-up scheme: Starts by English region 1994–95

Region	Starts
South East	2,393
London	3,081
Eastern	1,925
South West	2,801
West Midlands	1,576
East Midlands	3,042
Yorkshire and The Humber	3,402
Merseyside	1,356
North West	3,058
North East	1,602

Table 2: Business start-up scheme: Starts and expenditure in England

Year	Starts	Expenditure (£ million)
1992–93	33,600	62.0
1993–94	34,700	82.0
1994–95	24,236	63.8

Class Sizes (Bolton)

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Bolton, West (Ms Kelly), of 18 June, Official Report, column 193–4, what factors underlie the maximum class size of 60 for the Bolton, South-East constituency. [12004]

Mr. Byers: The information derives from classes as taught during a single selected period on the census date in January. This can include some unusually large classes. Classes can include nursery as well as infant classes, classes engaged in activities such as physical education, games, drama, music, singing, watching television or listening to a radio programme, and classes supported by one or more members of the non-teaching staff of the school. Class sizes can be affected by one or more of these factors.

The class of 60 pupils taught by one teacher in the Bolton, South-East constituency was a nursery class. The teacher was supported by four nursery assistants.

Education-related Projects

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to review the criteria for the funding of youth and community projects and other education-related projects for young people in respect of the eligibility of those in the 11 to 14 years age range. [12230]

Dr. Howells: None. The delivery and funding of the youth service are matters for decision by individual local education authorities out of the resources made available to them through the annual local government finance settlement.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what funding is presently committed from his departmental budget for (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000 to resolve the year 2000 computer problem; and if he will make a statement. [11897]

Dr. Howells: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson), on 10 July 1997 Official Report, column 573.

Autistic Children

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what guidance he has issued to local education authorities on the provision of special educational needs for autistic children following the recent court judgment requiring an authority to pay for an autistic child to attend the Higashi school in the USA. [11791]

Ms Estelle Morris: The High Court's decision related to an individual appeal, where particular circumstances applied. It would not be appropriate to issue general advice to local education authorities on the basis of that case.

Disability Discrimination Act 1995

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when his Department's review of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 will be completed; and when he plans to make an announcement on its result. [11498]

Mr. Alan Howarth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 26 June, Official Report, column 635.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what representations he has received from (a) the National Disability Council and (b) organisations representing disabled people concerning the implementation of the later rights of access under part III of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995; and if he will make a statement; [11496]

(2) if he will publish a timetable for the implementation of the later rights of access within part III of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. [11497]

Mr. Howarth: The National Disability Council, disabled people and their organisations, individual businesses and their representatives and many others have responded to the consultation exercise carried out by the previous Government last year and have given their views on how quickly it would be sensible to implement the later rights of access under part III of the Disability Discrimination Act. A summary of responses to the consultation exercise will be published in due course. The Department is currently considering these matters in the context of our determination to deliver our manifesto commitment to establishing comprehensive and enforceable civil rights for disabled people. The Department will make an announcement as soon as possible. Whatever our eventual recommendation, the Department is committed to developing our proposals in consultation with all interested parties.

Class Sizes

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what penalties the Government will enforce against schools which educate five, six and seven-year-olds in classes of more than 30. [11640]

Mr. Byers: It is our pledge that, by the end of this Parliament, all pupils of five, six and seven years old will be in classes of 30 or less. We are consulting on the mechanics of implementing this pledge to reduce class sizes.

University Students

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on changes in the percentage of students entering university education in the last 18 years from social classes A, B, C and D. [11717]

Dr. Howells: The following table shows how the proportions of young people from different socio-economic groups entering full-time higher education have changed since 1991–92: comparable data are not readily available from earlier years.

Table 1: The Age Participation Index (API) for Great Britain by socio-economic group

Academic year	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96
I—Professional (A)	55	71	73	78	79
II—Intermediate (B)	36	39	42	45	45
IIIn—Skilled non-manual (C_1)	22	27	29	31	31
IIIm—Skilled manual (C_2)	11	15	17	18	18

Table 1: The Age Participation Index (API) for Great Britain by socio-economic group

Academic year	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96
IV—Partly skilled (D)	12	14	16	17	17
V—Unskilled (E)	6	9	11	11	12
Total	23	28	30	32	32
Groups I to III	26	31	33	35	36
Groups IV and V	11	13	14	15	16

The API is the number of home domiciled young (aged less than 21) initial entrants to full-time undergraduate courses in GB, expressed as a proportion of the average 18 to 19 year old GB population.

(A), (B), (C_1), (C_2), (D), (E)—institute of practitioners (IPA) equivalent definition of social class.

Participation among socio-economic groups D and E remains less than half that of socio-economic groups A to C, notwithstanding the recent expansion in higher education. The Government's proposals, as set out in my right hon. Friend's statement to the House on 23 July, will encourage access and ensure free education for the least well-off.

Tuition Fees

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what measures will be taken to address student hardship among poorer students following the introduction of tuition fees; and what assessment he has made of the impact of the introduction of fees on the composition of the student intake and on the level of educational attainment. [11794]

Dr. Howells: Under the Government's preferred approach to the future funding of higher education announced by my right hon. Friend on 23 July, students from poorer families will not have to pay fees. They will continue to receive free tuition. They will also have access to larger subsidised loans than students from better off families. The Government's proposals are designed to widen access to higher education and to encourage those from under-represented groups, such as lower-income families, to undertake higher education.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if European Union nationals studying in the United Kingdom will be required to pay fees for higher education on the same basis as United Kingdom nationals. [11626]

Dr. Howells: The Government remain committed to treating students from other European Union countries on the same basis as home students as far as fees are concerned.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the net annual savings to public funds from the introduction of tuition fees for higher education in each of the next 10 years. [11174]

Dr. Howells: The annual level of savings will be dependent upon the number of students entering higher education in each year, but for working purposes the savings associated with the introduction of tuition fees are estimated at approximately £150 million in the financial year 1998–99, rising to approximately £400 million in 2000–01. These figures are at 1995–96 prices. In the first year of the new funding arrangements, 1998–99, the savings associated with the introduction of tuition fees and the shift from maintenance grants to loans will be offset by the cost of additional loans expenditure.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment at what point in the academic year tuition fees will have to be paid; and if failure to pay will prevent a student from attending the course. [11173]

Dr. Howells: It will be for universities and colleges to determine when the fee should be paid and what should happen in the case of students who do not pay.

Educational Qualifications

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if United Kingdom students who have studied for a minimum period of one or two years will have their educational qualifications recognised in other European Union countries; and whether they will continue to qualify for European Union educational programmes and grants. [11627]

Dr. Howells: The acceptance of United Kingdom qualifications in other European countries is a matter for the appropriate authorities in the country concerned. United Kingdom students will continue to qualify for European Union programmes and grants if they satisfy the conditions of eligibility.

Bursaries and Awards

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the total cost of university grants, bursaries and maintenance awards paid to undergraduates in the last available year; and what proportion of that total was paid to undergraduates from households with net incomes of (a) £15,000 or less and (b) £15,000 to £25,000 annually. [11578]

Dr. Howells: Expenditure on mandatory awards made to students by local education authorities in England and Wales in the academic year 1995–96 was £2,059 million, of which £1,075 million was for maintenance grants. For most students, the grant is means tested primarily on the taxable income of his or her parents and not on the net income of the household. It is not possible to relate the total expenditure on grants to particular levels of parental income. However, in 1995–96, the parents of some 198,000—33 per cent.—dependent students were assessed to make a nil contribution to grant because their income was £15,510 or below. The parents of a further 149,000—25 per cent.—dependent students were assessed to make a contribution of between £45 and £1,000 because their income was between £15,510 and approximately £25,300.

Information on expenditure on bursaries and awards made by other bodies is not collected centrally.

Waste Minimisation

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the amount, and proportion, of paper recycled by his Department in each of the last five years. [11546]

Dr. Howells: The Department retains information only on the amount of recyclable wastepaper collected and this is as follows:

	Figures quoted in kilos
1992–93	82,066
1993–94	82,066
1994–95	289,001
1995–96	278,671
1996–97	196,860
Total	928,664

Recycling schemes were introduced at different points across the estate during the period covered by the question. Rationalisation of the estate.

The merger between the Department for Education and the Employment Department and a commitment to reduce the use of hard copy documents in favour of electronic documentation have also played their part in the resultant figures given.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to introduce a waste minimisation strategy for his Department. [11544]

Dr. Howells: Waste minimisation forms part of the Department's green housekeeping strategy. The strategy for 1997–98 is based on measuring several streams of waste collected for recycling—paper, aluminium cans, bottles, copier toner cartridges and fluorescent tubes. Within the framework of the strategy, facilities management teams on each of our four main sites—Darlington, London, Runcorn and Sheffield—decide which streams they will measure.

At the end of the year, it is intended that progress will be reviewed against the overall minimisation target and all sites will be urged to extend the range of streams to be measured during 1998–99.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on existing targets set to minimise waste in his Department. [11545]

Dr. Howells: The Department has set a target of reducing waste by 5 per cent. during 1997–98 and plans to compare records for the period from April to September with those from October to March. The year 1997–98 will then be adopted as the base year for setting realistic future targets.

Departmental Payroll

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list each of the functions relating to the payroll for which his Department is responsible, indicating the management systems purchased, all subcontractors involved in the work, co-operative arrangements with other Departments and the costs of the systems and processes in the last year for which figures are available. [10728]

Dr. Howells: I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my reply in the Library.

Consultation Exercises

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will place in the Library before the summer adjournment a list of his Department's current consultation exercises initiated since 1 May. [11796]

Dr. Howells: Since 1 May, the Department for Education and Employment has carried out, and is presently undertaking, the following consultations:

Consultations exercises which have ended

Introduction of a single school leaving date for 16-year-olds in 1998—ended 28 July

National curriculum assessment and reporting arrangements—ended 18 July

Current consultation exercises

Adult guidance

Arrangements for publication of primary school performance tables by local education authorities in 1997

Design and Implementation Advisory Group—university for industry

Draft amendments to the Education (Pupil Registration) Regulation 1995

Early years development plans for 1998–99: draft guidance for consultation

Education (Assisted Places) Regulations: statutory consultation

Employment-based routes into teaching

First aid in schools

Funding of in-service training for those involved in careers education and guidance

Higher education

Initial training and qualifications of careers advisers

Investing in young people: the right to study

New deal building partnerships

New deal national design consultation—(three events)

New deal regional conferences and events (28 in total)

Preliminary study into public sector financial control training for training and enterprise councils

Regulations to govern the approval of qualifications under section 37 (1) (b) of the Education Act 1997

School security: dealing with troublemakers

Smaller infant classes

"Successful careers in the 21st Century"—policy document on the future of the careers service

Teaching: high status, high standards—General Teaching Council

TECs and welfare to work

White Paper "Excellence in schools"

Youth service audit

The list includes both small and large-scale consultation exercises. In certain instances, the consultation is limited to a small number of key organisations and not to a scale normally associated with consultation exercises. The list does not include consultation exercises within the Department.

Windfall Tax

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proposals he has to include unemployed disabled people in employment and training programmes funded by the windfall tax; and if he will make a statement. [12016]

Mr. Andrew Smith: We intend that unemployed disabled people will get the help they need to meet the aim of improving their skills, employability and job prospects. Ministers have already decided that disabled people claiming jobseeker's allowance will have early access to the opportunities for work, education and training provided by the new deal for young unemployed people. We will also encourage and enable those with disabilities or a long-standing illness to access training and work, to improve their employability and thereby reduce their dependency on long-term incapacity benefits. Some £200 million from the windfall levy has been set aside to fund this and other measures.

Office Refurbishment

Mr. Terry Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has for the refurbishment of ministerial offices in his Department; and what is the estimated cost of the works and date of completion. [11872]

Dr. Howells: The only plans are to purchase appropriate furniture for the two new ministerial offices created in the DfEE headquarters building following the election. The estimated cost is £15,000 and delivery is expected within two to three months.

Tithe Farm Lower School

Sir David Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the latest position on the Office for Standards in Education inspection of Tithe Farm lower school, Houghton Regis, Bedfordshire; and if he will make a statement. [11620]

Mr. Byers: The inspection of individual schools is a matter for Her Majesty's chief inspector. I will, however, write to the hon. Member, setting out the statutory procedures for the production and distribution of inspection reports. I will place a copy of my letter in the Library.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Waste Minimisation

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to introduce a waste minimisation strategy for her Department. [11568]

Clare Short: My Department intends to review its management practices to ensure that we maximise energy efficiency, recycling and water saving. The review will include an examination of waste.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on existing targets set to minimise waste in her Department. [11569]

Clare Short: There are no existing formal waste minimisation targets although my Department recycles paper and glass. Energy-efficient lighting and state-of-the-art boiler controls have been introduced in the Department's building in East Kilbride and an energy efficiency audit has also been commissioned. The Department rents its London and overseas offices, and pursues energy-efficient policies within the constraints of rented property.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the amount, and proportion, of paper recycled by her Department in each of the last five years. [11570]

Clare Short: Records of waste paper recycling are incomplete, but the estimated quantities recycled in each of the last five years are:

1992–93: 29.7 tonnes

1993–94: 31.0 tonnes

1994–95: 31.2 tonnes

1995–96: 30.4 tonnes

1996–97: 29.0 tonnes

Data on paper usage for each of the last five years could be provided only at disproportionate expense, but the quantity recycled in 1996–97 is estimated to represent approximately 27.5 per cent. of supplies purchased in that year.

Office Refurbishment

Mr. Terry Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has for the refurbishment of ministerial offices in her Department; and what is the estimated cost of the works and date of completion. [11867]

Clare Short: Following the creation of a second ministerial post in my Department, it has been necessary to create additional ministerial office accommodation in the buildings in London and East Kilbride. Including consequential expenditure on relocating and repartitioning adjoining non-ministerial accommodation, the total estimated cost of building works was £26,263. The works are substantially complete. The cost of providing additional furniture is estimated at £19,832. No other refurbishment is planned.

North Korea

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to respond to the UNICEF appeal for aid to children in North Korea. [11288]

Clare Short: We are discussing the appeal with UNICEF and will decide on our response once we know the result of the UNICEF evaluation mission currently under way.

Aid and Trade

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what was the total value of aid and trade provision projects since 1978; and if she will list the top 10 (a) recipient countries in descending order by value of projects received and the value of ATP received by each country as a percentage of the total and (b) companies in descending order by value of projects received and the value of ATP received by each company as a percentage of the total. [11840]

Clare Short: The total value of commitments for aid and trade provision projects since 1978 is £1,387 million.

The top 10 recipient countries in descending order by the value of ATP commitments are:

Country	ATP allocation (£ million)	Percentage of ATP total
China	285.94	20.47
Indonesia	261.36	18.71
Malaysia	152.03	10.88
India	96.42	6.90
Turkey	89.93	6.44
Zimbabwe	55.64	3.98
Kenya	46.89	3.36
Philippines	46.52	3.33
Egypt	40.53	2.90
Morocco	37.95	2.72
Total	1,113.21	79.69
Total for all countries	[1]1,396.99	—

[1] Due to rounding the totals may not balance. The Balfour Beatty figure includes £24.37 million spent in respect of the Pergau hydro-electric project before 1994–95. This project is no longer being financed by the aid and trade provision.

It is not possible to provide figures for the amount of business retained by the prime contractor as opposed to the amount handled by subcontractors. It should, however, be noted that the extent of subcontracting is normally considerable.

The 10 companies that have won most ATP-supported business as prime contractors since 1978 are:

Company	ATP allocation (£ million)	Percentage of ATP total
Kvaerner (including the Trafalgar House Group)	188.66	13.50
GEC	155.31	10.94
Balfour Beatty	108.37	7.63
Rolls Royce (including NEI)	68.82	4.85
Biwater	66.42	4.68
AMEC	58.7	4.13
Foster Wheeler	53.85	3.79
Snamprogetti UK	47.18	3.32
Siemens Plessey	43.43	3.11
Philips UK	34.11	2.40

Debt Relief Assistance

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans the Government have for assistance with debt relief for (a) Ethiopia, (b) Burkina Faso, (c) Burundi, (d) Ghana, (e) Kenya, (f) Madagascar, (g) Mozambique, (h) Nicaragua, (i) Rwanda, (j) Zimbabwe and (k) Uganda. [11287]

Mr. Darling: I have been asked to reply.

Debt payments due to the UK arising from export credits are rescheduled in the multilateral forum of the Paris Club. Decisions on which countries qualify for debt relief, and on the amount of relief provided, are taken on a case-by-case basis. The UK has already cancelled its aid loans to six of the countries listed, and only one of the countries, Zimbabwe, now has any such loans outstanding to the UK.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will publish the latest draft of the multilateral agreement on investment, and place a copy in the Library. [10653]

Clare Short [pursuant to her reply, 28 July 1997, c. 56]: The Department of Trade and Industry leads on this agreement. My hon. Friend the Minister for Small Firms, Trade and Industry told the House on 23 July that the report that was presented to Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development Ministers in May 1997 on the progress of the multilateral agreement on investment is to be placed in the Library of both Houses.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Waste Minimisation

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) if he will list the amount, and proportion, of paper recycled by his Department in each of the last five years; [11531]

(2) what plans he has to introduce a waste minimisation strategy for his Department; [11529]

(3) if he will make a statement on existing targets set to minimise waste within his Department. [11530]

Mr. Tom Clarke: My Department recycled approximately 32 tonnes of paper last year, but no records are available for previous years. Arrangements are now being made to record the proportion of all waste paper which is recycled.

As part of a green housekeeping strategy, my Department is committed to adopting the best environment practices wherever possible and practicable, including reducing the amount of waste produced and maximising that which is recycled. Initiatives already implemented include guidance to staff on paper-saving practices such as using electronic mail, double-side copying, and reusing envelopes, the installation of green bins to collect paper or cardboard for recycling and schemes introduced for the recycling of cans, plastic cups, and printer toner cartridges.

A waste audit was recently undertaken and we will use the results of the audit to help us set a target for minimising waste by the end of August.

Newstead Abbey

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received about the possible undermining of Newstead abbey; what steps he is taking; and if he will make a statement. [11903]

Mr. Banks: Representations have been received from the Byron Society, the Newstead Abbey Byron Society, the Thoroton Society of Nottinghamshire and four individuals. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is very concerned by reports that the mining will have adverse effects on the structure of these nationally important buildings and is considering what can be done to mitigate the likely impact on these structures or prevent damage from occurring.

Museums and Galleries Commission

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement in respect of the grant in aid his Department proposes to give to the Museums and Galleries Commission until 2000. [11700]

Mr. Fisher: The Museums and Galleries Commission's grant in aid for the financial year 1997–98 is £8,904,000. The indicative figures for the next two years are:

1998–99: £8,826,000

1999–2000: £8,693,000

Firm allocations for 1998–99 will be announced in the autumn.

Office Refurbishment

Mr. Terry Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has for the refurbishment of ministerial offices in his Department; and what is the estimated cost of the works and date of completion. [11875]

Mr. Tom Clarke: My Department is creating a new office for the additional Minister announced following the election. This involves work to one other Minister's office and moving some private offices. In total, five offices will be redecorated. As this work is being tendered, the estimated cost is commercially sensitive at present.

Sports Broadcasting

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will introduce a development levy on television contracts with sporting clubs and ruling bodies to assist funding for youth development of sport. [11949]

Mr. Banks: Although I am not persuaded that a statutory levy is justified, the Government do want to see sports bodies re-investing a good proportion of television money into youth development of their sports. The sports' own code of conduct on the sale of television rights itself accepts this point.

Tourism (Dramatic Arts)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the contribution of British dramatic arts to the promotion of inbound tourism in (a) London and (b) the United Kingdom. [11702]

Mr. Tom Clarke: In 1995, 49 per cent. of visitors said that our theatres and performing arts were an important part of their decision to come to Britain. In 1996, 35 per cent. of overseas visitors to London said that London's culture and arts had greatly encouraged them to visit and a further 41 per cent. said that culture and arts had influenced their decision to come. The British Tourist Authority fully recognises the importance of arts and culture in attracting overseas visitors, and these play an integral role in its overseas marketing campaigns.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the impact of rises in ticket prices to dramatic arts venues in London on the United Kingdom tourism industry. [11703]

Mr. Clarke: The latest available information from the society of London Theatres, from 1991, showed that up to one third of seats in London's theatres were filled by overseas visitors and many other by domestic tourists. I understand that the society will be updating this information later this year. The English tourist board announced last week that tourist spending in England rose by 7 per cent. to a record level of £10.7 billion in 1996. The British Tourist Authority estimates that earnings from overseas tourism in 1996 increased by 5 per cent. to £12.69 billion. All the evidence therefore suggests that London continues to attract record numbers of visitors.

Museums and Galleries (Lottery Funding)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what measures are being taken to ensure an equitable distribution of lottery funds to museums and galleries across the United Kingdom. [11701]

Mr. Banks: The national lottery distributing bodies have already announced awards worth over £465 million to museums and galleries throughout the country, notably through the Heritage Lottery Fund's major museum, library and archive projects programme which aims to achieve a good regional spread of major projects across the United Kingdom.

The White Paper "The People's Lottery", Cm3709, published on 21 July, makes clear the Government's objective that there should be more confidence that lottery money generally is allocated fairly and equitably in the light of need across all regions and parts of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to extend the use of heritage lottery funding in respect of museums and galleries projects. [11699]

Mr. Banks: The National Heritage Act 1997 will extend the powers of the trustees of the National Heritage Memorial Fund and enable them to support a wider range of projects and applicants. The powers will open up new opportunities for the Heritage Lottery Fund to assist museum and gallery projects. The Heritage Lottery Fund is currently consulting on the use of the wider powers. We are considering implementation of the Act as part of our wider review of lottery distribution.

Millennium Commission Grants

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, if he will list by local authority area in (a) Wales and (b) England the (i) number and (ii) value of Millennium Commission grants made in each year to date. [7221]

Mr. Chris Smith: This is a matter for the Millennium Commission. I shall write to my hon. Friend in my capacity as chairman of the commission and place copies of my reply in the Libraries of the House.

Lottery Awards

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list, for each category of national lottery good causes, how much money has been awarded to individuals or organisations in the Chorley parliamentary constituency in each year since the lottery was established. [11219]

Mr. Banks: To date, over £3.7 billion has been awarded to 27,387 projects throughout the UK. Of these, 19 awards worth £534,962 have been made to projects in Chorley. Annual breakdowns are set out in the following table.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list, for each category of national lottery good causes, how much money has been (a) given and (b) awarded in the Government regions of (i) London, (ii) the north-west, (iii) Merseyside and (iv) the south-east, in each of the years since the lottery was established. [11220]

Mr. Banks: To date, over £3.7 billion has been awarded to 27,387 projects throughout the UK. An annual breakdown of the awards in London, the north-west, Merseyside and the south-east is set out in the following table. Figures for the amounts already drawn down by region are not held centrally.

[1] Awards to bodies based in London include many to institutions that are of national importance and are of benefit to the country as a whole. Awards to these organisations account for 60 per cent. (approximately £485 million) of the total so far awarded to London.

[2] Figures for Millennium Commission awards cover capital projects only and so exclude the Millennium Awards scheme.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what funding is presently committed from his departmental budget for (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000 to resolve the year 2000 computer problem; and if he will make a statement. [11894]

Mr. Tom Clarke: The cost of preventive and remedial action on year 2000 will be met from existing public expenditure survey provision. The Department is following the guidance published by CCTA. A detailed and costed action plan is being drawn up.

English Sports Council

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement about the appointment of ministerial nominees to the regions of the English Sports Council. [21319]

Mr. Banks: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has previously announced that, as part of our new approach to sport, we are looking at the way that the current sports council structures are working. As part of that review, we have looked carefully at the regional structure of the English Sports Council, the proposed role of ministerial nominees to the council's regional offices, and the relationship between the council and local authorities and governing bodies of sport in the regions. While there is still work to be done on what new arrangements might be introduced, my right hon. Friend and I have decided to stand down all the ministerial nominees that have either been formally appointed or were nominees-designate to work alongside the English Sports Council.

This decision is no reflection on the ability of the individuals concerned to play a part in developing the Government's plans for sport. I will make a further announcement later this year about how we intend to rebuild the relationships between the English Sports Council and its partners in the regions, which were once so strong, and to help ensure that the role of local government and of local sport organisations in providing sports opportunities are given the credit they deserve.

Television Broadcasters

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will require public television broadcasters to ensure that all public information, party political and party election broadcasts are fully accessible to the deaf and hard of hearing people in the United Kingdom. [12001]

Mr. Fisher: The Broadcasting Act 1990 set a target of 50 per cent. of transmissions for subtitling of programmes by 1998 for Channel 3 services and by the fifth anniversary of the commencement of the service for Channel 5. After that target is reached, it is for the Independent Television Commission to set the level of future targets. It is also a condition of the Channel 4 licence to ensure that 50 per cent. of its programmes are subtitled by 1998. I understand from the ITC that all Channel 3 licensees subtitle all their national news programmes and current affairs programmes and that Channel 4 subtitle their main news and current affairs programmes. Party political broadcasts are also subtitled.

Under the terms of the Broadcasting Act 1996, digital terrestrial television services have to meet a target of subtitling 50 per cent. of programmes by the 10th anniversary of the digital programme service starting. The 1996 Act required the Independent Television Commission to draw up a code on promoting the understanding and enjoyment of programmes by persons who are deaf or hard of hearing. As part of that code, the Independent Television Commission has also set interim targets for subtitling digital services.

In its statement of promises to viewers and listeners, the BBC is committed to subtitling 50 per cent of all its programmes by 1998. The statement also contains a commitment to subtitle all national daily news programmes, regional news and current affairs broadcasts.

The existing arrangements allow the ITC and the BBC flexibility to meet viewers' needs as fully as possible, constrained by statutory minimum subtitling levels and by what is technically and financially realistic. Within these arrangements, broadcasters place particular emphasis naturally on subtitling programmes which inform viewers of news and current affairs. The detailed arrangements for determining which programmes are subtitled, however, are not a matter for government.

National Lottery

Mr. Walter: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will request Camelot to install national lottery terminals in villages in remote rural areas; and if he will make a statement. [11167]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 29 July 1997]: This is an operational matter for Camelot Group plc. I have, therefore, asked the Director General of the National Lottery, who is responsible for regulating the operation of the lottery, to write to the hon. Member, and copies of his response will be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Our proposals for the future of the national lottery were set out in the White Paper "The People's Lottery" published on Monday 21 July. The White Paper makes clear our concern to protect the contribution which the lottery makes to small retailers throughout the country. The impact on retailers will, therefore, be taken into account when choosing the next operator of the national lottery.

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much was raised for good causes by the national lottery between November 1994 and April 1997. [11162]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 29 July 1997]: The national lottery raised £3,208,646,966 for the good causes between 19 November 1994 and 31 March 1997.

Millennium Commission

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) if he will list those projects funded by the Millennium Commission in (a) Nottinghamshire and (b) the east midlands; [9128]

(2) if he will list by region the expenditure allocated by the Millennium Commission. [9129]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 17 July 1997]: These are matters for the Millennium Commission. I shall write to my hon. Friend in my capacity as chairman of the commission and place copies of my reply in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what Millennium Commission funding has been allocated to projects in (a) The Wrekin, (b) Shropshire and (c) the west midlands. [7777]

Mr. Smith [holding answer 10 July 1997]: This is a matter for the Millennium Commission, I shall write to my hon. Friend in my capacity as chairman of the commission and place copies of my reply in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if the Millennium Commission will continue in existence after 2000; if it will remain responsible for the millennium experience at Greenwich; and what responsibility it will retain for financial shortfalls in respect of the millennium experience. [6479]

Mr. Smith: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. I shall therefore write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of my reply in the Libraries of the House.

Millennium Celebrations

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is the budget set aside for the millennium celebrations; and what percentage of that budget will be designated for projects in each of (i) Scotland, (ii) Wales, (iii) Northern Ireland, (iv) England (excluding London), and (v) London. [6130]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 3 July 1997]: It is estimated that, by the end of 2000, over £2 billion of national lottery proceeds will have been disbursed by the Millennium Commission on capital projects to mark the millennium, on the millennium awards scheme, and on the national millennium experience and its regional programme. While it aims for an equitable regional distribution of grant, the Millennium Commission does not designate portions of its budget for projects in particular regions of the United Kingdom.

No central Government expenditure on millennium celebrations is planned, other than approximately £40,000 per annum to support the work of the millennium co-ordinating group and its sub-groups.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what fee he estimates Mark McCormack International will receive from its consultancy for the millennium experience; and if he will make a statement. [6601]

Mr. Smith [holding answer 7 July 1997]: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. I shall therefore write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of my reply in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what factors led him to adopt his present policy on the millennium dome; and if he will make a statement. [6902]

Mr. Smith [holding answer 7 July 1997]: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. I shall therefore write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my reply in the Libraries of the House.

Sport (Spectators)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what reports his Department receives of spectator attendance at (a) premier, first, second and third division association football matches, (b) county cricket matches, (c) super league, first and second division rugby league matches, (d) Courage division 1 and 2 rugby union matches; and if he will make a statement. [6975]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 9 July 1997]: The Department does not receive reports of attendances at these matches, but has access to them when necessary from the governing bodies of the sports concerned.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Prisoner Transfers

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what monitoring arrangements exist at the embassy in Dublin concerning prisoner transfer agreements with the Irish Government; and if she will make a statement about early releases to date. [10475]

Mr. Ingram: There have been no prisoner transfers from Northern Ireland to the Republic of Ireland; nor have there been any requests for such transfers.

Postal and Proxy Votes

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many individuals listed on (a) the postal vote and (b) the proxy vote permanent register obtained postal and proxy votes for each election since 1992. [8691]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The following is the information:

Permanent list of absent voters

1992	9 April	Parliamentary General	12,980	17	2,521	15,518

1997	21 May	Local Government	19,959	33	2,378	22,370

Mr. Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list by constituency the number of applications signed by individual doctors and the reason given for (a) postal votes and (b) proxy votes for the 1997 general election. [8693]

Mr. Murphy: Records of absent vote applications are not currently stored in a way that would readily provide information on reasons for application and individual doctors attestations.

The chief electoral officer has instituted a review of all absent vote applications for the last three elections in Northern Ireland and any relevant conclusions of the report may be published in due course.

Mr. Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applications for (a) postal votes and (b) proxy votes have been refused for each election since 1992. [8692]

Mr. Murphy: Until 1996, absent vote applications were dealt with by area offices and as a consequence no records are available for the numbers of applications refused in previous years. For the 1997 elections, a central absent voting unit was established.

Significant numbers of applications were received in good time, but were incomplete and had to be returned to the applicant. In such cases, each applicant received a letter of explanation and was invited to resubmit their correctly completed form. However, large numbers of applications were received in the last hours before cut-off time for receipt of applications and, in these circumstances, it was not possible to return incomplete applications to applicants.

Total deaths allegedly caused by baton rounds 1972 to date: 16.

IRA Punishment Beatings

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many murders, maimings and beatings described as punishment beatings were carried out by the Provisional IRA in Northern Ireland (a) following the Provisional IRA's ceasefire declaration from midnight on 31 August 1994 to 6 pm on 9 February 1996 and (b) during the Provisional IRA's renewed terrorist campaign from 6 pm on 9 February 1996 to midday on 20 July 1997, on which their latest ceasefire declaration was announced. [10565]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 25 July 1997]: The information is not available in the format requested and would incur disproportionate cost to provide. The table, however, illustrates the number of deaths that have occurred directly due to the security situation and those casualties attributed to paramilitary style attacks by "Republican" organisations. The Royal Ulster Constabulary uses the term "paramilitary assaults" as opposed to punishment beatings as the latter tends to imply a certain justification for these appalling offences.

Deaths due to the security situation caused by Republican organisations

	Number of deaths
1 September 1994 to 9 February 1996 (1800 hours)	[1]10
9 February 1996 (1800 hours) to 20 July 1997 (1200 hours)	11

[1] This figure includes one RUC officer who died as a result of injuries sustained in 1973.

Casualties as a result of paramilitary style attacks by Republican organisations

	Number of casualties
Casualties as a result of paramility style assaults
1 September 1994 to 9 February 1996 (1800 hours)	183
9 February 1996 (1800 hours) to 20 July 1997 (1200 hours)	209
Casualties as a result of paramilitary style shootings

Departmental Payroll

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list each of the functions relating to the payroll for which her Department is responsible, indicating the management systems purchased, all sub-contractors involved in the work, co-operative arrangements with other Departments and the costs of the systems and processes in the last year for which figures are available. [10745]

Mr. Paul Murphy: For the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments, the available information is as follows:

The Department of Finance and Personnel provides a centralised non-industrial payroll service to NI Departments and NI civil servants employed by the NIO. For 1996–97, the total cost of the systems and processes, including the costs of the personnel section in each NI Department, was £2,303,202.

The Department of Education for Northern Ireland operates a teachers' payroll system which pays salaries to teachers in most schools and colleges on behalf of their employing authorities. Costs for 1996–97 were £886,612.

The Department of the Environment (NI) operates a payroll system for weekly paid industrial staff. Costs for 1996–97 were £1,774,713.

The Department of Agriculture (NI) operates a payroll system for weekly paid industrial staff. Costs for 1996–97 were £439,721.

The Northern Ireland Office has a contract with Chessington Computer Services Ltd., for the provision of a payroll service for the home civil service staff. The terms of the contract are commercial in confidence.

Absent Voting Papers

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the (a) number and (b) percentage of absent voting papers issued in (i) each parliamentary constituency for the 1996 forum election and (ii) the 1997 general election; and what steps she is taking to reduce electoral fraud. [10272]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 29 July 1997]: I have viewed with concern allegations that there is a significant level of electoral fraud in Northern Ireland. I will study the results of the chief electoral officer's investigations into postal vote applications with interest.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the different reasons, by number and percentage, for which absent voting papers were issued in each (a) parliamentary constituency and (b) council area in the 1997 general elections; and if she will make a statement on her policy in relation to discrepancies between Northern Ireland electoral laws and rules and those pertaining to the rest of the United Kingdom. [10122]

Mr. Murphy [holding answer 30 July 1997]: Regulations specifying the grounds upon which absent voting papers may be issued for a both parliamentary and local government elections are set in statute. In both cases, the chief electoral officer shall grant an application if he is satisfied that the applicant's circumstances on the date of the poll will, or are likely to be such, that he cannot reasonably be expected to vote in person. There may be almost as many circumstances which qualify as there are applications, and so it would be impossible to list them all here.

I do not consider that there are discrepancies between Northern Ireland's electoral laws and rules and those pertaining to the rest of the United Kingdom. There are clearly differences, but no more than are necessary to facilitate the different circumstances in Northern Ireland, not least of which is a system of single transferable vote proportional representation for local government and European parliamentary elections.

Electors

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many electors in each constituency are registered from addresses outside the United Kingdom; and if she will list the top five countries where such electors reside, indicating the numbers involved. [10313]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 29 July 1997]: In accordance with regulation 34 of the Representation of the People (Northern Ireland) Regulations 1986, the chief electoral officer for Northern Ireland publishes each year a list of overseas electors which gives details of the elector's name, the constituency in which they are registered and their declared present address.

Electoral Reform Committee

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will ask the chief electoral officer to give evidence to the Electoral Reform Committee of the Northern Ireland Forum for Peace and Dialogue. [10314]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 29 July 1997]: The chief electoral officer is an independent office whose duties are clearly established by statute.

It would not be appropriate for me to ask the chief electoral officer to do anything without those duties. I am aware, however, that the chief electoral officer has made clear that he is always prepared to see elected representatives at his office to discuss those matters within his area of responsibility.

Arable Area Payments

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many payments were made under the arable area payments scheme in 1996 of (a) £0 to £1,000, (b) £1,000 to £2,000, (c) £2,000 to £3,000, (d) £3,000 to £4,000, (e) £4,000 to £5,000, (f) £5,000 to £10,000, (g) £10,000 to £20,000, (h) £20,000 to £50,000 and (i) over £50,000. [11315]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 30 July 1997]: The number of payments made in 1996 under the arable area payments scheme were (a) 1,172 from £0 to £1,000, (b) 878 from £1,000 to £2,000, (c) 424 from £2,000 to £3,000, (d) 348 from £3,000 to £4,000, (e) 347 from £4,000 to £5,000, (f) 67 from £5,000 to £10,000, (g) 87 from £10,000 to £20,000, (h) 46 from £20,000 to £50,000 (i) three over £50,000.

European Parliament Elections

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the implications for Northern Ireland of the Government's plans to introduce a list system of proportional representation for European Parliament elections. [10474]

Mr. Paul Murphy: My officials will be considering whether it would be in Northern Ireland's best interests to be included in any British system of PR for European parliamentary elections, or whether Northern Ireland should retain its existing model of PR or something similar. The overriding criterion will be what is best for Northern Ireland. I would be interested to receive the views of the Northern Ireland parties on this matter.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to her answer of 23 June, Official Report, column 404, if she will make it her policy to ensure that disability living allowance reviews and appeals are costed and the price published; and if she will make a statement on the success rate for reviews and appeals. [10476]

Mr. Worthington: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Social Security Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Alec Wylie, and I have asked him to arrange for a response to be given.

Letter from Alec Wylie to Mr. Robert McCartney, dated 29 July 1997:

> I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question on the costs and success rate of Disability Living Allowance reviews and appeals.
> As explained in my letter of 17 June 1997, the Social Security Agency does not maintain records on the costs of Disability Living Allowance reviews and appeals, processes to which people who are dissatisfied with adjudication officer decisions have a statutory right of access. Compiling and maintaining this information would require a major clerical work programme at disproportionate costs and the Agency has no plans to introduce such a system.
> Current available information indicates that around one third of reviews and appeals for Disability Living Allowance are successful. This is broadly in line with other similar benefits. While the Agency aims to get as many decisions as possible correct at the initial claim stage, it frequently happens that, when given a decision on their application, customers provide further evidence of their disability which then has to be reviewed. This is the main reason for the success rate for reviews and appeals.
> I hope this explains the position for you but I would be happy to provide any further information you require.

Education (Schools) Bill

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will ensure that Northern Ireland is covered by the Education (Schools) Bill. [10477]

Mr. Worthington: Separate legislation is being prepared to give effect to class size requirements in Northern Ireland.

Parades

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many parades have taken place in Northern Ireland in the current year; how many were organised by (a) the Orange Order, (b) the Royal Black Institution, (c) the Apprentice Boys of Derry, (d) The Ancient Order of Hibernians, (e) children and youth organisations, such as boys and girls brigades, scouts, (f) the Royal British Legion, (g) Sinn Fein, (h) trade unions and (i) other organisations and individuals. [11501]

Mr. Ingram: The information is not currently available in the format requested and would incur disproportionate cost to provide. I can, however, give details of the number of parades which have taken place in Northern Ireland in the current year which are described as either loyalist, nationalist or other.

Parades held from 1 January 1997 to 27 July 1997

	Number
Loyalist	1,576
Nationalist	114
Other	254
Total	1,944

The statistics may be subject to adjustment.

Violent Crime

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will list for each month since 1 January 1994 the number of arson attacks and explosive attacks which have been made on (a) churches, by denomination (b) other church property, (c) Ancient Order of Hibernians halls, (d) Gaelic Athletic Association buildings, (e) Orange halls, (f) other halls, (g) private houses, (h) integrated schools, (i) maintained schools, (j) controlled schools and (k) voluntary schools; [11499]

(2) if she will list for the months of May, June and July to date in (a) 1995, (b) 1996 and (c) 1997 the numbers of incidents in which (i) petrol bombs were thrown at the security forces, (ii) firearms were used against the security forces and (iii) the security forces were attacked with stones or other missiles, broken down by town or police sub-division, giving (1) the duration of the assaults, (2) the numbers of persons involved and (3) the numbers of petrol bombs used; [11500]

(3) how many punishment beatings and shootings there have been in each month, broken down by police division, since 1 January 1994; and if he will indicate (a) which terrorist or paramilitary body was responsible and (b) how many were (i) republican and (ii) loyalist inspired. [11507]

Mr. Ingram: I shall write to the right hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Stolen Vehicles

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list for the months of May, June and July to date the numbers of vehicles stolen in each police sub-division in Northern Ireland this year and in (i) 1995 and (ii) 1996; how many of them were (a) recovered and (b) destroyed; and what estimate she has made of the costs of each case of damage in each sub-division in each year. [11503]

Mr. Ingram: I shall write to the right hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Stormont Talks (Bodyguards)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which delegations of participants in the all-party talks at Stormont have bodyguards within the castle buildings precincts; which of these bodyguards are armed; and if she will make a statement. [10432]

Mr. Ingram: I shall write to the right hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Bus Operators (Fuel Costs)

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate she has made of (a) the cost to public transport bus operators resulting from the increase in fuel costs announced in the Budget and (b) its effect on the cost of travel by bus. [11617]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I understand that Ulsterbus and Citybus, which operate the great bulk of bus services in Northern Ireland, estimate that the increase in fuel duty will add around £850,000 a year to their costs. As a result, they increased bus fares by an average of 1.75 per cent. on July 28.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what funding is presently committed from her departmental budget for (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000 to resolve the year 2000 computer problem; and if she will make a statement. [11895]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Northern Ireland Departments, together with the Northern Ireland Office, are each responsible for their own expenditure programmes. In each case the cost of rectifying the year 2000 problem will be met out of their existing public expenditure survey provision. The exact costs involved will not be known until later in the year when the Departments will have completed a set of fully costed plans for the work involved. At that point, the original expenditure programmes may have to be adjusted.

Employment Advertisements

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how often since 1992 her Department has been responsible for employment advertisements which contained age restrictions upon those who could apply. [9512]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I shall write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Computer-related Expenditure

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is her estimate of total departmental expenditure on computer-related current and capital work for (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98, (d) 1998–99 and (e) 1999–2000; and if she will make a statement. [11392]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 29 July 1997]:

For the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments, the information is as follows:

£ thousand

	Current	Capital
1995–96[1]	25,316	16,319
1996–97[1]	26,415	17,466
1997–98	26,821	18,202
1998–99	31,991	16,500
1999–2000	34,383	14,875

[1] Actual expenditure.

Waste Minimisation

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if she will make a statement on existing targets set to minimise waste within her Department; [11566]

(2) what plans she has to introduce a waste minimisation strategy for her Department; [11565]

(3) if she will list the amount, and proportion, of paper recycled by her Department in each of the last five years. [11567]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I shall write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Telecommunications Towers

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list (a) the number of planning applications for telecommunications towers made by each of the telecommunications companies operating in Northern Ireland in each of the last three years and the current year to the latest available date, (b) the number of such towers erected by each such company in each year, (c) the number of such towers erected for which planning permission was not needed and (d) her estimate of the total number of such towers which will be needed by each company to complete their network. [12187]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Organic Farming

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate she has made of (a) the present average yield of each of the principal farm crops and (b) the comparable yields if all farmers were to convert to organic farming. [12188]

Mr Paul Murphy: (a) The average yields of each of the main farm crops in 1996 and for the previous five years are given in the table.

tonnes per hectare

	1996	Average 1991 to 1995
Spring barley	5.03	4.26
Winter barley	6.64	5.78
Wheat	7.70	6.87
Oats	5.07	4.62
Potatoes (maincrop/ware and seed)	29.93	27.23

(b) The organic sector in Northern Ireland is too small to provide reliable estimates of comparable yields.

Social Security

Mr. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action will be taken in Northern Ireland to involve the private sector in delivery of social security services. [12276]

Mr. Worthington: The Government's objective is to create a modern welfare state where social security benefits are to bring people into mainstream society and are not simply hand-outs. The delivery of benefits has to be modernised as well as the system itself. Privatisation is not the only way of improving quality and reducing costs, but we see no reason why the public sector should deliver services if there are more efficient ways of doing so. The Society Security Agency, in conjunction with the Benefits Agency, has initiated a project to involve private sector consortiums to explore opportunities for the modernisation of service delay. This project fits well with our approach to public-private sector partnerships and action on it will continue. Specific details will soon be announced by the chief executive of the Social Security Agency.

Alongside this, whenever the private sector is used in the future, the arrangements will be strengthened to:

Define a minimum quality of service threshold when we assess bids.

Contracts will not be awarded if a supplier fails to reach this threshold.

Place greater emphasis on evaluation of suppliers' management of staff transfers.

Provide guidance to potential and current suppliers to make clear what we consider to be good employment practice.

Strengthen contract monitoring to assess suppliers' performance including quality of service, management of people, cost efficiency, evaluation and feedback on performance.

I believe that this approach will ensure that the best possible social security service will be delivered to people in Northern Ireland by committed staff at the right cost to the taxpayer.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

A406 (Upgrading Contracts)

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects the contracts to upgrade the A406 at Sterling way and Fore street to be completed; and what steps he is taking to remedy the delays already announced on these contracts. [10677]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Andrew Love, dated 31 July 1997:

The Minister for Transport in London has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the improvements to the A406 at Sterling Way and Fore Street.

The contract to improve this part of the A406 is expected to be completed by late Spring of 1998. However, the completion of the underpass which will take the A406 under the existing Fore Street junction and Railtrack's Silver Street Station, should be completed 2 to 3 months prior to the completion of the full contract.

The delays have mainly been caused by the contractor encountering unexpected ground conditions during piling operations. The contractor is reducing the effect by increasing his resources and reviewing his construction methods. There are no plans to accelerate the main works to achieve an earlier completion date, because it would be costly. The Contractor is already working 7am to 7pm and extending those hours would create unacceptable disturbance. Other constraints on the sequence of work are imposed by lane closures and fitting out the tunnel.

Smoky Vehicle Hotline

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many complaints have been received by the Vehicle Inspectorate's smoky vehicle hotline in each of the last five years; and how many prosecutions have resulted from complaints in each year. [11466]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the chief executive of the Vehicle Inspectorate agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ron Oliver to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 31 July 1997:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question concerning the number of complaints received by the Vehicle Inspectorate's Smoky Vehicle Hotline in each of the last 5 years; and how many prosecutions have resulted from complaints in each year.

The total number of reports received via the Hotline for each of the past 5 years is as follows:

1992/93: 2,481

1993/94: 2,887

1994/95: 8,113

1996/97: 11,622

We do not have details of the number of prosecutions arising from these reports. Vehicle operators are initially asked to supply written evidence that the vehicle reported on complies with emissions limits. In cases where there is evidence of non-compliance, details are added to the maintenance data held on the vehicle operator (which includes previous Hotline reports). The information is used by the Inspectorate on a cumulative basis to target enforcement action against operators with apparent unsatisfactory maintenance standards. Follow-up action may result in prosecutions and/or action by Traffic Commissioners against a vehicle operators' licence.

Freight Grants

Ms Dari Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he intends to publish revised guidance on freight grants; and if he will make a statement. [12076]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My Department is currently preparing a revised guide. It will be published shortly.

Birmingham Northern Relief Road

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the costs of discretionary blight payments to people in homes near the Birmingham northern relief road; and what contribution to these costs will be paid by Midland Expressway Ltd. [12260]

Dr. Strang: The total cost attributable to discretionary purchase under sections 246(2)(a)/(b) and 248 of the Highways Act 1980 is some £1.5 million. The full cost of acquiring all land and property for the Birmingham northern relief road and compensation payments will be met by Midland Expressway Ltd.

Dr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what controls he will have on the level of tolls on the Birmingham northern relief road and the rates charged for heavy goods vehicles relative to those for other vehicles. [12259]

Dr. Strang: The level of tolls and their applications to different classes of vehicle will under the legislation be matters for the concessionaire.

Dr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he has made a cost-benefit analysis of the long-term economic advantages of the Birmingham northern relief road. [12257]

Dr. Strang: A cost benefit analysis carried out in 1991 showed the scheme proposed by Midland Expressway Ltd. having a benefit:cost ratio of more than 2:1.

Dr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many subcontractors to Midland Expressway Ltd. for the Birmingham northern relief road project are companies in the (a) Kvaerner Group and (b) Autostrada Group. [12256]

Dr. Strang: The construction of the Birmingham northern relief road will be controlled by companies associated with the Kvaerner and Autostrada Groups. The work to be subcontracted will be specified at a later stage.

Dr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what forecasts his Department has made of the effect of the Birmingham northern relief road on the percentage change in traffic levels on motorways in the west midlands. [12258]

Dr. Strang: The Birmingham northern relief road will provide a high-quality free-flowing route for through traffic to bypass the very heavily congested section of the M6 between junctions 4 and 11. The M6 will remain a high-standard route through the west midlands conurbation and is expected to be used to the full extent of its available capacity. Removal of through traffic from the M6 will enable traffic from lower standard local roads and trunk roads to use the M6, thereby easing traffic flows on those routes. As a consequence, M6 traffic levels are not forecast to reduce to a significant extent.

Dr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish the details of the penalty clause in the contract between the Government and Midland Expressway Ltd. in relation to the Birmingham northern relief road, including the compensation which would be payable (a) to Midland Expressway Ltd. and (b) to other parties and subcontractors if the Birmingham northern relief road did not go ahead. [12255]

Dr. Strang: The BNRR concession agreement includes a number of detailed provisions for compensation payable by either party if the agreement is terminated under various possible circumstances. Under those provisions, the risk that the public inquiry outcome did not allow the scheme to proceed rests wholly with the concessionaire.

I will write to my hon. Friend with further details on this matter.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will place in the Library a copy of the concession agreement covering the Birmingham northern relief road. [12229]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I will arrange for a copy of the concession statement that was put before the public inquiry to be placed in the Library, and will consider further with the concessionaire what further material can be provided.

Dr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will issue planning guidance to restrict development along the Birmingham northern relief road corridor. [12261]

Angela Eagle: Any proposals for such development would be assessed against existing planning policy guidance and policies in regional planning guidance and development plans. In particular, local planning authorities would need to assess any proposals along most of the length of the relief road against the policies in planning policy guidance note 2 on green belts. PPG2 maintains the presumption against inappropriate development within green belts and requires very special circumstances to justify inappropriate development.

M25 (Noise Alleviation Measures)

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he proposes to implement the previously proposed noise alleviation measures to the M25 between junctions 12 and 15 independently of the outcome of the review of the proposals for widening the motorway within its existing curtailage between these junctions. [11714]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Phillip Hammond, dated 31 July 1997:

The Minister for Transport in London has asked me to reply to your recent question about noise alleviation measures on the M25 between junctions 12 and 15.

I understand the concerns raised about noise levels by busy roads and it is an issue that the Highways Agency takes very seriously. In this case the previously proposed noise alleviation measures are related to the predicted increase in noise resulting from the widening of M25. These noise reduction measures are an integral part of the widening scheme between junctions 12 and 15 and will not be implemented independently from that scheme.

Minicabs (London)

Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will consult over the Government's commitment to regulate London's minicabs; and if he will make a statement. [12270]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have today published a consultation paper on how best to regulate London's minicabs. I have arranged for copies to be deposited in the Library. Comments are invited by 15 September.

I will arrange for the right hon. Member to see the results of the consultation before the Private Hire Vehicles (London) Bill is published.

National Roads Programme

Mr. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to publish the study undertaken by his Department into the total and cumulative environmental impact of the national roads programme. [12267]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Under the previous Administration, my Department commissioned the Transport Research laboratory to carry out a feasibility study into this subject. I have now received the study report, copies of which have been placed in the Library. The report highlights a number of practical difficulties about the way in which the total environmental impact can be defined and measured. As recommended, we are now seeking the views of interested statutory bodies and others. We will consider how best to proceed in light of those consultations, taking account of the strategic roads review which my right hon. Friend the Minister of Transport announced on 19 June.

Aircraft Safety

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the number of passenger journeys on airlines covered by "Airworthiness Notice 64" which will take place between 1 June and 30 September this year. [11366]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Airworthiness notice 64 applies to all passenger aircraft on the UK register which have a maximum weight in excess of 5,700 kg or capable of carrying more than 20 passengers. No estimate has been made of the number of passenger journeys which will be carried out by such aircraft this summer.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, (1) pursuant to his answer of 22 July, Official Report, columns 493–94, concerning minimum space for seated passengers, what assessment he has made of the safety risk posed to this portion of the population which falls outside the normal design extremes covered in "Airworthiness Notice 64 (March 1989)"; and if he will make a statement. [11365]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 22 July, Official Report, columns 493–94, concerning minimum space for seated passengers, if he will update "Airworthiness Notice 64 (March 1989)" to take account of the latest anthropometric data. [11364]

Ms Jackson: It is not practicable for the design criteria for aircraft seats to cover both extremes of body size. The anthropometric range used in airworthiness notice no. 64 represents a practical standard for the design and installation of aircraft seats. There is no reason why an individual who falls outside the anthropometric range used by the Civil Aviation Authority should be at greater risk during an emergency evacuation.

There has been no significant change in the anthropometric data since 1989 and the CAA has no proposals to review this standard.

Central Line (Drivers' Cabs)

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what factors underlie the decision to install air conditioning in drivers' cabs on the Central line; what has been the cost (a) per cab and (b) in total of the installation of air conditioning; and if he will make a statement. [11941]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The scope of investment projects is a matter for London Underground Ltd. However, I understand that air conditioning in drivers' cabs was installed for health and safety reasons, as operators would be subject to excessive temperatures during hot weather—for safety reasons, there are no opening cab windows and it would not be possible to open cab doors in transit. The total cost of installing air conditioning is estimated at £3.5 million or around £20,000 per cab. This is less than 1 per cent. of the total cost of the trains.

Motorway Service Areas

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to review guidance to local authorities and planning inspectors on the distance between motorway service areas. [11721]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Policy on the spacing of motorway services areas is set out in roads circular 1/94 which states that they should not generally be less than 15 miles apart. My right hon. Friend has no immediate plans to amend that guidance though, in common with other aspects of land use planning and transport policy, it is an area we are keeping under review.

Radioactive Material Transport

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to review the safety standards for the transport of radioactive material. [11727]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker), Official Report, 23 June, columns 381–82.

Aircraft Movements (Heathrow)

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to review the Cranford agreement on aircraft movements at Heathrow. [11847]

Ms Glenda Jackson: A reconsideration of the Cranford agreement forms one aspect of the further work commissioned in 1995 to assess the capacity and environmental implications of the proposals in the runway capacity enhancement study report. We do not expect the final stage of this work to begin before the autumn.

Bus Transport (Fuel Costs)

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of (a) the cost to public transport bus operators resulting from the increase in fuel costs announced in the recent Budget and (b) its effect on the cost of travel by bus. [11616]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My Department estimates that the total cost to bus operators—in England, Scotland and Wales—of the increase in fuel duty announced in the Budget is likely to be about £40 million per year. The effect if any on the fares charged will vary from operator to operator. However, fuel duty is a relatively small part of the total cost of bus operation and the proportion of the duty rebated by my Department to operators of local bus services remains at over 60 per cent.

Roads Expenditure

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will list for each of the last five financial years the expenditure on motorways and trunk roads in respect of (a) reconstruction, (b) overlay, (c) resurfacing and (d) surface dressing; and what are the forecast outturns for 1997; [11707]

(2) if he will list the bridges carrying motorways and trunks roads which are awaiting strengthening works to comply with the EU plan to permit 40-tonne trucks, indicating the target date for the work to be undertaken; [11709]

(3) if he will list for each of the last five financial years the total lane kilometres of trunk road and motorway subject to (a) reconstruction, (b) overlay, (c) resurfacing and (d) surface dressing and what is his forecast for (a) to (d) for 1997–98; [11708]

(4) which bridges carrying motorways and trunk roads are (a) currently and (b) expected to be subject to width or weight restrictions. [11710]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I will write to my hon Friend and will place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Highways Agency (Quality of Service Indicators)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the Highways Agency will be publishing its quality of service indicators for safety, average journey times and the extent of congestion on trunk roads and motorways. [11706]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The latest information on accidents and casualties on trunk roads and motorways in England is contained in "Road Accident Statistics in English Regions: 1995". Average speeds on the various road classes in the network are in "Traffic Speeds on English Trunk Roads: 1995". Both these documents are published by the Government statistical service. The Highways Agency will be publishing congestion monitoring information later this year. The agency is currently developing a more comprehensive set of indicators for the quality of service on trunk roads.

Traffic Problems (Salisbury)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are the terms of reference for his study into alternative solutions to traffic problems in the Salisbury area; when it will (a) start and (b) finish; and if there will be public consultation. [11839]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The study will be led by the Government office for the south-west, which will seek to agree terms of reference with a wide range of interested parties over the next two months. The time scale for the study will depend on the terms of reference and on the amount of additional information that will need to be collected. It is intended to be an inclusive process and emerging ideas will be shared with the local communities.

Car Accidents (Young Drivers)

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many car accidents involved drivers between 17 and 21 years of age in the last year for which figures are available; how many of these resulted in (a) personal injury and (b) death; and in how many of these accidents the driver was alone. [11790]

Ms Glenda Jackson: In 1996, there were 41,989 injury accidents involving car drivers between 17 and 21 years of age in which there were 718 fatalities and 66,072 casualties. It is not possible to distinguish from reported accident data whether a driver was alone.

London Underground (Safety Measures)

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what has been the result of the Health and Safety Executive's monitoring of London Underground's progress in developing (a) barriers between adjacent carriages to stop persons falling in the gap between them, (b) the provision in the driver's cab of television pictures of the platforms as the train approaches and as it is leaving, (c) modifications to the on-train passenger emergency devices so that they stop the train if one is operated as the train leaves a platform but warns the driver thereafter and (d) selective provision of platform attendants with an emergency button to stop a train. [11942]

Ms Glenda Jackson: London Underground Ltd. is primarily responsible for safety on the underground, and is either testing or implementing these four measures, which are intended to improve safety on platforms. I understand that the Health and Safety Executive is continuing actively to monitor the way in which London Underground Ltd. is proceeding with each of these measures.

Bradford-Cumbria DBFO Scheme

Mr. Curry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much compensation will be paid to each of the four consortiums bidding for the Bradford-Cumbria design, build, finance and operate scheme as a result of the deferment of a decision whether to proceed. [11996]

Ms Glenda Jackson: It will be for the tenderers to submit claims to the Highways Agency with full supporting evidence for the sum they believe due. The agency will process those claims after any necessary clarification with tenderers.

A31 (Pedestrian-cycleway)

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what was the cost of constructing the pedestrian-cycleway on the A31 between Ashley Heath and Ringwood; [12253]

(2) what is the estimated cost of signing the pedestrian-cycleway which has been constructed between Ashley Heath and Ringwood; [12254]

(3) when he plans to carry out the signing of the pedestrian-cycleway which has been constructed between Ashley Heath and Ringwood. [12252]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Christopher Chope, dated 31 July 1997:

The Minister for Transport in London has asked me to reply to your recent questions about the cost of constructing the pedestrian-cycleway on the A31 between Ashley Heath and Ringwood, the cost of signing the pedestrian-cycleway and when the signing of the pedestrian-cycleway will be carried out.

The cost of constructing the pedestrian-cycleway was £22,000, and the estimated cost of signing approximately £16,000–£18,000. At this stage I am unable to confirm precisely when we will be able to start the signing work, although a bid will be submitted for its inclusion in the Network Enhancement Project budget for implementation in 1998–99. However, I should point out that this scheme will be in competition with other safety improvement schemes on the network, and will also be subject to Hampshire County Council modifying the No Entry Order at West Street to a Prohibited Driving Order with a cycle exemption.

M25 (Widening)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will order a public inquiry into the scheme for a 10 to 12-lane M25 between junctions 12 and 15 as part of the Government's further review of the scheme. [12183]

Ms Glenda Jackson: No. The statutory processes regarding the publish proposals for this scheme were completed when the decision on the environmental impact statement was made.

Bicycles (Lights)

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his assessment of the potential safety benefits of fitting lights to all bicycles; what is his policy on the fitting of lights to all bicycles; and what representations he has had from the cycle industry and from groups representing cyclists. [12228]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Under the road vehicles lighting regulations, the fitting and use of lights on pedal cycles is already mandatory between sunset and sunrise.

Since a large proportion of pedal cycles are never used in darkness and would receive no benefit from the fitment of lights, the costs of retrospectively requiring all cycles to have lights fitted would be difficult to justify.

Views expressed by cycling interest groups and the bicycle industry on these issues have been mixed. Those in favour of the fitment of lights to cycles at the point of sale have maintained that the user's choice to subsequently remove them, either permanently or temporarily, should be preserved.

Business Aviation

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will make a statement about his policy on business aviation; [12233]

(2) if it is his policy to maintain access for business aviation to the widest possible network of United Kingdom airfields. [12234]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government recognise the importance of business aviation. Guidance to planning authorities on their approach to air transport, including business and general aviation, along with the impact of airports on the environment, will be part of the wide-ranging review of policy leading to the White Paper on integrated transport strategy.

A406 Widening (Compulsory Purchases)

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what stage negotiations with the London borough of Enfield has reached regarding compensation for the removal from Pymmes park, N18, of a cedar tree as part of the compulsory purchase of license land relating to the widening of the A406; when these negotiations are expected to be concluded; and if he will make a statement. [12250]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Andrew Love, dated 31 July 1997:

The Minister for Transport in London has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about negotiations with the London Borough of Enfield over the removal of the cedar tree in Pymmes Park.

In April 1996 we wrote to the London Borough of Enfield's Principal Corporate Solicitor, reiterating an offer first made in February 1995 to replace the cedar tree with two mature cedar trees.

This letter also reflected our view that we were not liable for any compensation other than that negotiated with the District Valuer for the land needed for the A406 improvement. I enclose a copy of our letter for your information. To date, we have not received a response from the Council.

Following is the letter:

We spoke last week about your letter of 25 March and I promised to set out our views on this.

Looking back over the papers, I see that we had told you that we expected to take entry into the park before the end of March 1995. We had also written to you on 28 February to say that we could find no way of saving the tree and to offer to provide two replacement trees. That letter also offered a meeting, an offer which received no response.

We wrote to you on 27 April to explain further why we could not save the tree; the offer to provide replacement trees stands, but I do not see that we are liable to provide any compensation other than the negotiated with the District Valuer for the land.

Thames Water (Discharges)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent reports he has received concerning radioactive discharges relating to Thames Water. [9847]

Angela Eagle: All radioactive discharges in England and Wales must be authorised by the Environment Agency under the Radioactive Substances Act 1993. Limits for discharges of radioactivity are set by the Environment Agency in accordance with national and international standards, and the potential cumulative effects of discharges are carefully considered. Levels of actual radioactive discharges reported to the Environment Agency are placed on the public registers.

The Environment Agency also monitors levels of radioactivity in the waters and sediments of the River Thames. The results of this monitoring programme demonstrate that levels of radioactivity in the River Thames are low and consistently below World Health Organisation guidelines for drinking water. MAFF undertakes a separate monitoring programme, which includes levels of radioactivity in certain fish, plants and sediments of the River Thames.

Both the Environment Agency and MAFF produce annual reports of their monitoring programmes. Although I received no such report recently, I understand that the next agency report is expected to be issued during the summer, and the next MAFF report, the title of which is "Radioactivity in Food and the Environment" at the end of September.

In addition, information on radioactive discharges from, and levels of radioactivity recorded at, various sites in the UK, including some on the River Thames, is included in the "Digest of Environmental Statistics" No. 19 1997, which was published on 11 July.

I am investigating what information is available on historic discharges into the River Thames from the principle sites involved, and I will write to the hon. Member.

Employment Advertisements

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how often since 1992 his Department or its predecessor Departments have been responsible for employment advertisements which contained age restrictions upon those who could apply. [9511]

Angela Eagle [pursuant to her reply, 24 July, c. 694]: Employment advertisements placed by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions have not carried age restrictions for some years. This Department believes that older workers have a great deal to offer in the way of skills and experience and we welcome applications from people irrespective of their age. However, certain advertisements placed by its agencies have reflected age criteria appropriate for specific jobs. A lower age limit of 25 is imposed on the Vehicle Inspectorate's traffic examiners and the Driving Standards Authority's driving examiners. The Coastguard Agency used to recruit watch officers only between the ages of 27 and 50, but this restriction ceased in 1995. In 1996 the planning inspectorate advertised for inspectors who could offer 10 years' service prior to the normal retirement age.

Drinking Water

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to provide guidance to the Office of Water Services on the implementation of legislation to improve the quality of drinking water and the environment as part of the 1999 periodic review of water pricing. [10649]

Angela Eagle: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, together with the Secretary of State for Wales, will issue public guidance in 1998 to the Director General of Water Services on the extent and timing of the water quality and environmental obligations likely to be placed on water and sewerage companies during the review period. In providing this guidance, the Government will draw on advice from the Environment Agency and the drinking water inspectorate on quality requirements, and advice from the Director General of Water Services on the investment likely to be required to meet quality standards and the price implications for customers. It is then for the director general to take account of that guidance in setting price limits in the 1999 periodic review.

My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade, announced an inter-departmental review of the regulation of the utility industries on 30 June, Official Report, columns 20–21. When issuing guidance to the Director General of Water Services, the Government will take into account the conclusions of that review.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the purity of English drinking water by region; and how that compares with the purity of drinking water in other EU countries. [12167]

Angela Eagle: The drinking water inspectorate publishes an annual report on the quality of water supplied by the 29 water companies in England and Wales. The report for 1996 was published on 8 July and is available in the House Library. It confirms that the quality of drinking water in England and Wales remains very high. In excess of 3 million samples were tested in 1996 and of these 99.7 per cent. complied with the standards. Comparable data for the quality of drinking water in other EU member states are not generally available.

Director General of Water Services

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the statutory duties of the Director General of Water Services which relate to the periodic review of water pricing. [10650]

Angela Eagle: Condition B of the instrument of appointment of the water undertakers, made under section 6 of the Water Industry Act 1991, sets out the formula for calculating price limits. It provides for a review of all price limits by the director at 10-yearly intervals, or after five years at the request of the companies of the director.

The Director General of Water Services, under section 2 of the Water Industry Act 1991, must exercise and perform his powers and duties in a manner best calculated to ensure that water and sewerage companies can carry out and finance their functions under that Act, in particular by securing a reasonable rate of return on their capital. Subject to that, he has to protect customers and promote economy and efficiency.

Under section 3 of the Act, the director general, so far as is consistent with his duties under section 2, has general environmental and recreational duties, including a duty to further the conservation and enhancement of natural beauty and the conservation of flora, fauna and geological or physiographical features of special interest and a duty to have regard to the preservation of public amenities such as freedom of access to the countryside and seaside.

My right hon. Friend, the President of the Board of Trade, announced an inter-departmental review of the regulation of the utility industries on 30 June, Official Report, columns 20–21. The Government's objective for the review is to set a long-term stable framework for utility regulation which is seen as fair by all the interest groups involved, particularly by consumers

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his estimate of total departmental expenditure on computer-related current and capital work for (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98, (d) 1998–99 and (e) 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [11384]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 29 July 1997]: The table sets out total estimated departmental payments—£ million—on computer-related current and capital work for the years requested:

Year	Current and capital work £ million
1995–96	55.5
1996–97	55.7
1997–98	64.1
1998–99	62.2
1999–2000	59.3

Regional Development Agencies

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to bring forward legislation to create regional development agencies. [11704]

Angela Eagle: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Houghton and Washington East (Mr. Kemp) on 24 June 1997, Official Report, column 478.

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has in respect of membership of the boards of the proposed regional development agencies; if there will be representation allocated to the co-operative and mutual sector; and if he will make a statement. [12226]

Angela Eagle: On 11 June, the Government launched a wide ranging consultation on our proposals for regional development agencies. We will make our detailed decisions in the light of that consultation

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the boundaries in England for the proposed regional development agencies will be the same as those proposed for regional lists for elections to the European Parliament. [12079]

Angela Eagle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given today by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department.

Office Refurbishment

Mr. Terry Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has for the refurbishment of ministerial offices in his Department; and what is the estimated cost of the works and date of completion. [11873]

Angela Eagle: We have no plans for refurbishment of ministerial offices.

Community Land Schemes

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will review community land schemes. [11585]

Mr. Raynsford: If my hon. Friend would let me know those aspects of current arrangements which he believes should be reviewed, I would be pleased to give the matter my careful attention.

Departmental Merger

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the cost to public funds, including the cost of management initiatives, hardware, software and retraining, of changing to common form the differing installations and practices developed by the former Departments of the Environment and of Transport for their internal financial and other information systems, staff records and pay and grading systems. [11944]

Angela Eagle: Final decisions have not yet been taken on the future of all these systems. It is expected that over time the merger will result in overall reductions in the running costs of the new Department.

Mr. Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions by what proportions and with what direct full-year consequences in annual cost to public funds, the aggregate staff expressed in full-time equivalents of the former Departments of the Environment and of Transport have been reduced in 1995–96 and 1996–97; and what are the estimated figures for (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99. [11945]

Angela Eagle: The most recent published information is contained in the respective 1997 annual reports of the former departments of the Environment and of Transport, which show that staff numbers and the associated running costs were as follows:

	1995–96 (outturn)	1996–97 (estimated)	1997–98 (planned)	1998–99 (planned)
Department of Environment
Aggregate staff (FTE)	4,527	3,846	3,755	3,667
Year on year percentage change	—	–15	–2	–2
Associated running costs (£ million)	226	229	204	198
Year on year percentage change	—	+1	–11	–3
Department of Transport
Aggregate staff (FTE)	8,532	7,704	7,649	7,550
Year on year percentage change	—	–10	–1	–1
Associated running costs (£ million)	395	401	373	354
Year on year percentage change	—	+2	–7	–5

Mr. Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was his initial estimate of the cost to public funds of reintegrating the former Departments of the Environment and of Transport. [11882]

Angela Eagle: The estimated costs of the merger are still being prepared. These will depend on decisions regarding the systems to be adopted and the structure of the new Department. It is expected that over time the merger will result in overall reductions to running costs.

Mr. Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the initial estimate of costs at current prices of separating a Department of Transport from the Department of the Environment in 1976. [11883]

Angela Eagle: At this distance in time the information required to answer the question is no longer available.

Business Rates

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many business organisations and individual businesses he intends to consult in his review of business rates. [11787]

Mr. Raynsford: We shall be consulting the business community as widely as possible. We are currently considering the best way of involving representatives of the business community in the work of the review. Any proposals for change will be the subject of a full public consultation exercise allowing all business organisations and businesses to comment.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many hon. Members have requested meetings with Ministers of his Department since 1 May in relations to issues of compulsory competitive tendering; how many such requests have been refused; and how many remain outstanding as of 24 July. [11221]

Mr. Raynsford: Since 1 May, there have been three requests from hon. Members for meetings with Ministers about compulsory competitive tendering. Two of these requests were declined and the third is under consideration.

Computer (Century Date Change)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what funding is presently committed from his departmental budget for (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000 to resolve the year 2000 computer problem; and if he will make a statement. [11898]

Angela Eagle: To date, committed resources primarily relate to internal staff working in line with CCTA guidance to produce detailed, costed plans by October 1997. These plans will inform decisions on budgetary commitments necessary to meet target dates for corrective work. It is expected that costs will be met from existing public expenditure survey provision.

New Homes

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the accuracy of the previous Government's projections for the number of new homes required by 2011; and if he will make a statement. [11595]

Mr. Raynsford: The most recent household projections have been subject to considerable public scrutiny since their publication in March 1995, in particular by the Environment Select Committee in evidence for its report on housing need in 1996. I am satisfied that they were the best that could be made with the available data and that they accurately reflect recent trends.

While generally endorsing the projections, the Committee recommended that the Department continue to examine the extent to which household formation is affected by economic and social factors. This is currently being addressed by the department of applied economics, Cambridge university, as part of a wider research project for the Department on the modelling of the need for social housing. The project has been extended beyond its original completion date and should now be finalised by the autumn.

Last year, the Department also commissioned Heriot-Watt university to undertake a detailed literature review on household formation, with particular emphasis on evaluating the available evidence on the extent to which economic factors affect the propensity for new households to form. This work has recently been completed and the report will be released on Monday, 4 August. Copies will be placed in the House Libraries.

Leisure Development, South Yorkshire

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what decision he has made concerning planning application reference R96/684P for a leisure development at Catcliffe, South Yorkshire; and if he will make a statement. [11600]

Mr. Raynsford: The Secretary of State has been waiting for further information from Rotherham metropolitan borough council. This has recently been received and he expects to make a decision soon on whether or not to call in this application.

Green Ministers

Mr. Terry Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what decisions Green Ministers took at their meeting, on 30 July. [11881]

Mr. Meacher: At our first meeting, we agreed to establish a programme of work to support the strategic decisions taken by the new Cabinet Committee on the Environment. We considered ways of building sustainable development into policy formulation at the highest level and looked at ways of ensuring that Departments consider sustainable development and the environment in implementing their policies and programmes.

As background to our work, we are today publishing the results of a consultancy study by KPMG that the last Administration commissioned to gauge how far it was meeting its commitment to assess the potential environmental impact of new policy proposals. The study shows that while Departments had begun to take better account of environmental impacts, much more needed to be done to ensure that policies were systematically considered. Copies of the study will be placed in the Libraries of the House.

To address the shortcomings some of the practical measures we are introducing immediately are:

(i) a new sustainable development unit in the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions to support all Departments and to produce an aide-memoire for policy advisers, reminding them of the need to incorporate environmental considerations into policy appraisals for those policies where environmental impacts might be significant, and setting out the steps that ought to be taken in doing so. It will also provide a central contact point for Departments.

(ii) DETR economists, in consultation with other Departments represented on the Inter Departmental Group on Environmental Costs and Benefits, will provide more technical guidance to those who are frequently involved in > the environmental aspects of policy appraisal. When available this guidance and the aide-memoirs will replace "Policy Appraisal and the Environment".

We agreed to undertake regular collective reviews of the quality and scope of such assessments.

We also asked officials to consider further targets and policies for ensuring that Departments and their agencies are operated sustainably, for example in energy and water saving, waste minimisation, procurement and staff commuting plans.

We are concerned to keep Parliament and the public informed of progress and issues under debate and will be publicising the outcome of our meetings.

Property Improvement Grants

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the rules governing qualification for an improvement grant where the property is used for both residential and commercial purposes; and what plans he has to change the rules for qualification. [11912]

Mr. Raynsford: Under part I of the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 renovation grants are available for the improvement or repair of a dwelling, which is defined as a building or part of a building which is occupied as a separate dwelling. We have no plans to change this provision.

Out-of-town Developments

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to revise planning policy guidance in respect of the development of out-of-town stores. [11921]

Mr. Raynsford: We have no current plans to revise PPG6.

Green-field Sites

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will seek an urgent meeting with the relevant planning authorities in Suffolk in respect of his policy towards releasing more green-field sites for development in Suffolk. [11619]

Mr. Raynsford: No. The Suffolk structure plan makes provision for 54,690 dwellings until 2006 and green-field site specific issues are mostly resolved within the local plans framework introduced by schedule 54a to the Town and Country Planning Act 1991.

Green Belt

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has to revise legislation relating to planning guidance in respect of the protection of the green belt. [11712]

Mr. Raynsford: We have no current plans to revise planning policy guidance note 2 which sets out the Government's policy on this issue.

Car Boot Sales

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to restrict the number of days during the calendar year when car boot sales may be held without planning permission; and if he will make a statement regarding permitted development rights in so far as they affect car boot sales. [12240]

Mr. Raynsford: Part 4 of the Town and Country Planning (General Permitted Development) Order 1995 grants a general planning permission for the temporary use of land for up to 28 days in any calendar year. However, the general permission for car boot sales is limited to 14 days, in recognition that they may, in some locations, cause problems such as parking, litter and noise. We are considering whether further controls over such markets are necessary.

Population and Household Changes

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of (a) population and (b) household changes in (i) Birmingham and (ii) Worcestershire over the next 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [12194]

Mr. Raynsford: Population estimates and projections are the responsibility of the Office for National Statistics—formerly the Office for Population Censuses and Surveys. The projections of the numbers of the households, which uses this information are the responsibility of my Department.

Populations and household projections for Worcestershire alone are not available as it was not a separate county at the time the most recent projections were made. The population and household projections over the next 10 years for both the metropolitan district of Birmingham and the county of Hereford and Worcester are as follows:

	1996	2001	2006
Population[1] (thousands)
Birmingham	1,008	1,006	1,002
Hereford and Worcester	708	731	751
Households[2] (thousands)
Birmingham	402	408	416
Hereford and Worcester	285	301	317

Business Start-up Scheme

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many unemployed people have qualified for assistance on the business start-up scheme since its incorporation into the single regeneration budget in each region and for England as a whole; what was the annual expenditure; and which training and enterprise councils have taken part in each year. [12171]

Angela Eagle: Information in the form requested is not available.

The single regeneration budget provides support to local partnerships for schemes which promote the wider regeneration of their chosen area. Under the first two rounds of the challenge fund, 238 schemes have included plans to assist business start ups. Over their lifetime of up to seven years, and subject to satisfactory progress on delivery plans, these schemes stand to receive some £1.7 billion in challenge fund support towards a wide range of economic, environmental and social measures including an estimated 80,000 new business start ups. Training and enterprise councils are involved with the vast majority of the 238 schemes. Further support for new business start ups will also be provided under rounds 3 and 4 of the challenge fund.

Information on the number of new business start ups supported under the challenge fund in 1995–96 and 1996–97 for each of the 10 Government offices for the regions and for England is as follows:

	Number of new business start ups
Region	1995–96 (actual)	1996–97 (provisional)
Eastern	440	739
East Midlands	463	943
London	1,858	2,236
Merseyside	577	1,747
North-east	1,740	2,232
North-west	1,283	1,869
South-east	123	375
South-west	571	1,042
West Midlands	1,993	2,476
Yorkshire and Humber	1,410	2,702
England	10,458	16,361

Global Temperatures

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the global average temperature was relative to the 51 to 80 average in (a) June and (b) the period from January to May. [12243]

Angela Eagle: Climate monitoring carried out at the Met Office's Hadley centre, supported by my Department, shows provisionally that the global average temperature—relative to the 1951–1980 average—was +0.44°C in June 1997 and +0.37°C for the period January to May 1997.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what prediction the Government have made of global average temperature relative to the 51 to 80 average in each month from July to November of this year. [12244]

Angela Eagle: Climate monitoring is carried out at the Met Office's Hadley centre, supported by my Department. However, data for July are not yet completed and the Government make no such predictions of global average temperature.

Regional Boundaries

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make the Local Government Boundary Commission responsible for regional boundaries in England. [12099]

Mr. Caborn: I announced on 11 June that we intend the boundaries of regional development agencies to be the same as the administrative areas of the Government offices for the regions, except that there will be a single agency for the north-west region including Merseyside.

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the effect on the powers and responsibilities in respect of planning and development in their geographical areas of those bodies which straddle borders between Government regions of his proposals in respect of the regions, with particular reference to the Peak District national park. [12110]

Mr. Raynsford: Government offices and the various regional planning bodies already liaise on cross boundary regional planning matters. We envisage that the regional development agencies which we are proposing to set up will be able to cooperate with one another in developing and implementing economic strategies for the regions.

Rural Poverty

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what plans he has for the future role of the Rural Development Commission in respect of rural poverty. [12107]

(2) what measures the Government are taking to combat rural poverty; [12108]

Angela Eagle: The Government recognise the special needs of people who live and work in rural areas and of the need to tackle poverty. My Department is responsible for the Rural Development Commission which operates a number of economic and community support programmes, designed to promote regeneration and tackle disadvantage in the countryside. We have been discussing with the Commission its draft 1997 corporate plan which sets out the Commission's future expenditure proposals. The Commission expects to publish its plan later this summer.

We are currently considering how the proposed new regional development agencies might promote economic regeneration in rural areas. We are in the process of consulting interested parties in the regions to hear what they have to say about our proposals.

A number of programmes in my Department and others may impact on rural poverty. The policies and programmes of my Department are being reviewed as part of the comprehensive spending review, in order to consider how far we are meeting the aims of enhancing opportunity, fairness and sustainable development, while promoting employment and investment for sound economic growth.

Local Self-government

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which clauses of the Council of Europe's charter of local self-government the Government plan to sign up to during the ratification stage. [12195]

Mr. Raynsford: These are matters to be decided when, as we intend, we come to ratify the charter. It is the Government's belief, however, that this country's domestic legislation on local government conforms with the charter as a whole.

Council Tax Bandings

Mr. Salter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to review the current council tax bandings with particular reference to mobile home owners who live in properties worth less than the lowest banding threshold. [12021]

Mr. Raynsford: I have asked officials to undertake a review of the council tax. This review will consider, among other things, the current council tax valuation bands.

Water Metering

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what discussions she has had with the water companies concerning the metering of places of worship; [12095]

(2) what discussions he has had with religious leaders regarding the water metering of places of worship; [12096]

(3) what steps he is taking to exempt churches, mosques and temples from the compulsory installation of water meters. [12097]

Angela Eagle: This Government have not taken part in any discussions on the basis of charging places of worship for water and sewerage services. This issue will fall within the scope of the Government review of the system of charging for water announced by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment in a written answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike) on 25 June 1997, Official Report, column 514. My Department has written to interested bodies inviting comments and in reply has received representations from religious bodies on the issues raised in the review, including the basis of charging for religious and community premises. The Government will consider all the representations before making proposals on charging. There will then be a period of formal consultation. The Government have made clear their opposition to compulsory metering for essential domestic use.

Gipsy Sites

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will consider, for local authorities that have provided adequate and well-maintained gipsy sites, providing financial assistance for emergency transit sites for other gipsies visiting their area. [11998]

Mr. Raynsford: Exchequer grant at 100 per cent. was available for some 16 years for local authorities to provide both permanent, and transit, gipsy sites with a life of at least 10 years, and for temporary sites with a life of at least three years. Gipsy sites grant was never available for emergency stopping places which are often no more than redundant pieces of land with basic sanitary facilities for short overnight stops. Advice that local authorities should consider providing such sites in their areas, as a means for dealing with short-term unauthorised camping, was first enshrined in departmental circulars issued in 1977 and 1978.

We have no plans at present to reintroduce Exchequer grant aid for local authorities to provide gipsy caravan sites.

Local Government Finance

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will ensure that local authorities receive their full management and maintenance allowance for council-owned homes. [11997]

Mr. Raynsford: In calculating each authority's entitlement to housing revenue account subsidy, the allowance made for expenditure on management takes account of a target management and maintenance score determined annually for each authority based on a number of indicators including the characteristics of its stock. Allowances for individual authorities are calculated to move gradually towards the target figures thus ensuring no dramatic changes in subsidy entitlement from one year to the next.

We will be making proposals later this year on HRA subsidy for 1998–99. We shall consult local authorities on the draft HRA subsidy determination in the normal way.

We are considering all aspects of the financing of local authority housing as part of the comprehensive spending review. It will see that taxpayers' money is being spent effectively in order to fulfil the Government's manifesto commitments.

Planning Applications

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many planning applications in England were referred to his Department (a) under directions made under the Town and County Planning Acts, (b) voluntarily by local planning authorities and (c) voluntarily by interested individuals or bodies; and how many applications in each category were in fact called in, in each of the last five years. [12109]

Mr. Raynsford: As I explained in my answer to the hon. Member on 28 July, Official Report, column 42, the information is not available in the form requested.

Bioregional Network Production

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what studies his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into Bioregional Network Production, and what estimate he has made of the number of (i) jobs which would be created and (ii) road miles which would be saved by promoting Bioregional Network Production models. [11993]

Angela Eagle: I will write to the hon. Member.

Houses in Multiple Occupation

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which local authorities have applied for the special control provisions to deal with problem houses in multiple occupation contained in the Housing Act 1996; and with which local authorities his Department is having discussions about such provisions. [11983]

Mr. Raynsford: A registration scheme for houses in multiple occupation containing special control provisions has been confirmed, under the powers introduced by part II of the Housing Act 1996, for Portsmouth city council and will come into force on 1 September. My Department has held discussions about the possibility of introducing such schemes with two other authorities; Bournemouth borough council and Thanet district council.

Rent Rises

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the real rises in rents for (a) council, (b) housing association and (c) private sector dwellings between 1979 and the latest date available. [12198]

Mr. Raynsford: The average weekly rent for local authority tenants in England increased from £6.49 to £40.05 between 1979–80 and 1996–97, which represents a 135 per cent. increase in real terms after adjusting for inflation as measured by the GDP market price deflator. The closest comparison that can be made for average private sector rents is between 1978 and 1996–97 when rents rose from £6.70 to £76.49, a 263 per cent. increase in real terms. These average private sector rents are estimates from the 1978 private renters survey and the 1996–97 survey of English housing and are subject to sampling variability. No data on overall average housing association rents are available before 1984.

Housebuilding (Birmingham)

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make it his policy to take full account of issues of sustainability in considering the patterns of new housebuilding in and around Birmingham; and if he will make a statement. [12193]

Mr. Raynsford: We are considering advice provided by the west midlands regional forum of local authorities on housing provision in the west midlands region up to the year 2011. They have taken into account national planning policies on sustainability in formulating their advice, and we have those policies very much in mind in considering our response.

Performing Animals

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the health and safety inspection arrangements at travelling zoos and circuses involving performing animals. [12085]

Angela Eagle: Arrangements for inspections of health and safety at travelling zoos and circuses are a matter for local authorities who are the enforcing authority under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 for these types of activity. The Health and Safety Commission has issued guidance to local authorities on enforcement.

Shopping Centres

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will publish the Government's response to the Environment Committee's report on shopping centres, fourth report, Session 1996–97 HC210; and if he will make a statement. [12317]

Mr. Caborn: The Government have today laid before Parliament their response to the Environment Committee's report on shopping centres which was published in March 1997.

The Government, in responding to the Committee's report, reaffirm the objectives of the current planning policy guidance in PPG6: "Town Centres and Retail Developments". This guidance seeks to sustain and enhance the vitality and viability of our existing city, town and district centres. The Government are strongly committed to ensuring that such centres act as the focus for investment, particularly in retail, office, leisure and other appropriate developments, so as to provide easy access to a wide range of facilities and services by a choice of means of transport.

This does not represent a change in Government policy, but rather continues the policies already established. I think that this will be seen as good news by the development industry and by others seeking planning permission, who will welcome the reassurance that continuity of policy provides.

Gas Power

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment his Department has made of the impact of the Rio 2 treaty on United Kingdom policy towards gas power. [11102]

Mr. Battle: I have been asked to reply.

The United Nations General Assembly special session on 23 to 27 June 1997 did not result in any treaty commitments. However, in considering applications for gas-fired and other forms of power stations, we will ensure consistency with the wide objectives of secure, diverse and sustainable supplies of energy at competitive prices and meeting environmental targets.

Waste Minimisation

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will make a statement on existing targets set to minimise waste within his Department; [11527]

(2) what plans he has to introduce a waste minimisation strategy for his Department. [11526]

Angela Eagle: The former Department of the Environment and the Department of Transport set targets, respectively, for a 15 and 20 per cent. reduction in waste from their headquarter buildings by March 1998. An appropriate waste minimisation target and strategy for the new Department is being considered.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the amount, and proportion, of paper recycled by his Department in each of the last five years. [11528]

Angela Eagle: The amount of paper recycled for the Department's headquarters buildings is as follows:

Year	Total paper recycled in DETR HQ buildings (Tonnes)
1992–1993	202
1993–1994	220
1994–1995	198
1995–1996	146
1996–1997	119
Total 1992–97	885

HOME DEPARTMENT

Shiji Lapite (Unlawful Killing)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action the Metropolitan police intend to take in respect of the unlawful killing of Shiji Lapite; and if he will make a statement. [11283]

Mr. Michael: The matter is now in the hands of the Director of Public Prosecutions to review the decision not to institute criminal proceedings. The Police Complaints Authority will review its decision not to pursue a disciplinary charge in this case, but cannot do so until the outcome of the DPP's review of the papers. The Metropolitan police have undertaken to co-operate fully.

Animal Experimentation

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the report of the National Anti-Vivisection society, "Access Denied", a copy of which has been sent to him. [11280]

Mr. George Howarth: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave yesterday to the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock), Official Report, column 258.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Newark (Ms Jones) of 24 July, Official Report, column 681, if all the animals he lists as being at Huntingdon Life Sciences are currently being used in experiments. [11618]

Mr. Howarth: The figures given in that answer were estimates of the number of animals currently held by the establishment. A large majority of these animals will be undergoing regulated procedures.

Under section 15 of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986, where a protected animal has been subjected to regulated procedures and where, at the conclusion of the procedures, the animal is suffering or is likely to suffer adverse effects, it must be killed by an approved method.

More precise figures for the number of animals which would need to be killed could be established only at disproportionate cost.

Asylum Seekers

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many applicants for asylum before August 1993 are (a) awaiting a decision on their application and (b) awaiting an appeal hearing against refusal of asylum; [11514]

(2) how many appeals against refusal of asylum, listed by nationality of applicant and by date of application, are awaiting decision; [11513]

(3) how many applications for asylum made to his Department, listed by nationality of applicant and by year of application, are awaiting decision. [11512]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Information on the number of applications awaiting an initial decision in the asylum directorate, as at the end of June 1997, is given in the tables. Of the total, 53.025, it is estimated that 11,300 were applications made prior to August 1993.

As at the end of June 1997, there were approximately 24,000 asylum appeals yet to be determined. I regret that the breakdowns requested, by nationality and year of application, are not available.

Assaults on Police

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each police force in England and Wales and for each year since 1992 (a) the total number of sickness days taken due to assault, (b) the average number of days lost per police officer due to assault and (c) the total cost to each police force. [11505]

Mr. Michael: The information requested is shown in the table. Information on the total cost of the days lost as a result of assaults on police officers is not held centrally.

Police Overtime

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were (a) the total and (b) the average overtime payments for police officers in each police force in England and Wales for each year since 1992–93. [11506]

Mr. Michael: The following tables show overtime costs, where available, for each police force in years 1992–93 to 1995–96. Figures for 1996–97 are not held centrally. The information for years up to, and including, 1994–95 is taken from the police grant claim forms. The format of this changed in 1995–96, when police authorities were no longer required to submit detailed expenditure information. The figures for 1995–96 are therefore taken from returns submitted by police forces to Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary's matrix of indicators. However, that return also changed in 1996–97, since when information on overtime costs has no longer been available. Nor are details of overtime costs included in the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy statistics of actual police expenditure from 1994–95 onwards. The average overtime payment has been calculated by dividing the total cost of overtime for the force by its recorded police strength as at 31 March in the year in question.

Prisons (Education)

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what percentage of prisons and young offender institutions reduced their education provision in 1996–97; and what percentage plan to do so in 1997–98; [11508]

(2) what was the average weekly number of hours spent in education per prisoner in (a) June and (b) December in (i) 1995, (ii) 1996 and (iii) 1997 to date. [11510]

Ms Quin: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many hours of education were provided at (a) Holloway, (b) Highpoint, (c) Albany and (d) Wandsworth prisons in (i) 1995–96 and (ii) 1996–97; and what is the planned number in 1997–98. [11509]

Ms Quin: Hours of education—defined as daytime education, vocational training courses, construction industry training courses and evening education—at these establishments were:

	Hours
Holloway
1995–96 (actual)	90,200
1996–97 (actual)	87,500
1997–98 (planned)	130,000
Highpoint
1995–96 (actual)	194,600
1996–97 (actual)	97,000
1997–98 (planned)	313,000

	Hours
Albany
1995–96 (actual)	100,600
1996–97 (actual)	56,400
1997–98 (planned)	57,000
Wandsworth
1995–96 (actual)	118,500
1996–97 (actual)	57,400
1997–98 (planned)	38,176

Prisoners (Cells)

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average time per day which prisoners spent in their cells in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97 and (c) each month since April 1997. [11511]

Ms Quin: The Prison Service monitors the time that is available for prisoners to spend out of their cell, based on normal prison routine, rather than the actual time that prisoners spend in their cell.

The average time available for prisoners to spend out of their cell for 1995–96, 1996–97 and each month since April 1997 was:

1995–96: 11.4 hours

1996–97: 11.2 hours

April 1997: 11.0 hours

May 1997: 11.1 hours

June 1997: 11.0 hours

The data for the current financial year are subject to final validation.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of prisoners were held in their cells for more than (a) 10, (b) 12 hours per day in (i) 1995–96 and (ii) 1996–97 and (iii) each month since April 1997. [11825]

Ms Quin: The Prison Service monitors the time that is available for prisoners to spend out of their cell, based on normal prison routine, rather than the actual time that prisoners spend in their cell.

The table details the average proportion of prisoners held in prisons where the average time available for prisoners to spend out of their cell was (a) more than 10 hours and (b) more than 12 hours.

Percentage of prisoners unlocking for:	1995–96	1996–97	April 1997	May 1997	June 1997
More than ten hours	70	63	57	59	60
More than twelve hours	28	24	23	22	20

The data for the current financial year are subject to final validation.

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average daily time spent out of cells by prisoners in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97 and (c) each month since April 1997. [11952]

Ms Quin: The Prison Service monitors the time that is available for prisoners to spend out of their cell, based on normal prison routines, rather than the actual time that prisoners spend out of their cell.

The average time available for prisoners to spend out of their cell for 1995–96, 1996–97 and each month since April 1997 was:

1995–96: 11.4 hours

1996–97: 11.2 hours

April 1997: 11.0 hours

May 1997: 11.1 hours

June 1997: 11.0 hours

The data for the current financial year are subject to final validation.

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of prisoners were out of their cells for (a) more than 10 hours per day and (b) more than 12 hours per day in (i) 1995–96 and (ii) 1996–97. [11951]

Ms Quin: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Sir Peter Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners are currently accommodated two to a cell designed for one person. [12222]

Ms Quin: I will write to the right hon. Member.

Prisoners (Constructive Activity)

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average weekly number of hours spent in constructive activity by (a) all prisoners, (b) remand prisoners and (c) sentenced prisoners in (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97 and (iii) each month since April 1997 (1) nationally and (2) in each London prison. [11950]

Ms Quin: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Republican Prisoners (Transfers)

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many republican prisoners have submitted applications to be transferred from his jurisdiction to penal institutions in the Republic of Ireland; what is the average length of time for such an application to be processed; and if he will make a statement; [11084]

(2) what plans he has to authorise the transfer of republican prisoners to penal institutions in the Republic of Ireland under the European convention on the transfer of sentenced prisoners; and if he will make a statement. [11083]

Ms Quin [holding answers 30 July 1997]: Any prisoner may apply for repatriation to the Republic of Ireland. All such applications are considered under the terms of the convention and, in accordance with this country's long-standing policy, which is normally not to repatriate prisoners where there would likely to be a substantial reduction in time to serve as a result.

To date, 24 prisoners convicted of terrorist-related offences and held in prisons in England and Wales have applied to be repatriated to the Republic of Ireland.

Of eight such applications which have been resolved to date, six were processed in an average period of a little over 10 months from date of application for repatriation to date of final decision; two were withdrawn by the prisoners concerned 19 months after date of first application.

The date of application is taken as being either the date on which the prisoner submitted the request, or 1 November 1995—the date on which the Republic brought the convention into force there—whichever is the later.

Cardiff Prison (Disciplinary Hearings)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the outcome of disciplinary hearings instituted at Cardiff prison following the death of Geoffrey Thomas. [11938]

Ms Quin: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave to him on 24 July Official Report, column 683. It has come to my attention that dates given in my previous answer were incorrect, for which I apologise.

Disciplinary proceedings were instituted against five members of staff at Cardiff prison following the death of Mr. Geoffrey Thomas. Three of the cases have been concluded. Proceedings against two others have been adjourned at the request of the Prison Governors Association.

The first hearing took place on 21 and 22 May, and not 19 May as previously stated. The adjournment of two cases took place on 23 May and not 22 May.

The Prison Governors Association has questioned the impartiality of the governor hearing the case, and not the legality of the actions of the governor investigating the incident, as stated in my previous answer.

Hearings will be reconvened at the earliest available date.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. Malcom Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what funding is presently committed from his departmental budget for (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000 to resolve the year 2000 computer problem; and if he will make a statement. [11890]

Mr. Straw: Each business area within the Home Office is responsible for ensuring that computer systems in their area are year 2000 compliant. The Department is following guidance published by the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency. The business areas are currently preparing costed plans for this work and these plans should be completed by end of October this year, which is the target date recommended by the central information technology unit. Until these costed plans are available, it is not possible to estimate the cost of year 2000 remedial work and at this stage no funds are committed. The business areas are aware that my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has said that costs will have to be met from existing public expenditure survey provision.

Prisoners (Mental Disorder)

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what access to the NHS is available to mentally disordered prisoners; what information is collated by the Prison Service about mentally disordered prisoners' medical history; what information is passed on to the NHS after release; and if he will make a statement. [11910]

Ms Quin: Prisoners who are mentally disordered in accordance with the criteria in the Mental Health Act 1983 for detention as in-patients for medical treatment can be transferred to psychiatric hospital. Prisoners with mental health problems who do not meet those criteria receive care and treatment in prison, often under the supervision of a qualified psychiatrist as occurs in the community.

On their first reception into prison, all prisoners receive a physical and mental health examination which includes a psychiatric history. Prison staff may, with the prisoner's agreement, request individual records or other medical reports from the national health service in cases where that is considered necessary.

Where there is a need for continuing treatment after release, medical information is transferred from the prison doctor to the prisoner's general practitioner or other responsible agency in the community. Where a prisoner does not consent to such disclosure, but his or her mental ill health places them or others in the community at significant risk, such information would be disclosed to an appropriate person or agency and the prisoner informed accordingly. The Prison Service plans to issue a new health care standard on "Continuity of Health Care" which will give additional advice to establishments on exchanges of information about health care matters between the Prison Service and other agencies.

Primary Purpose Rule

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in implementing changes in the primary purpose rule. [11919]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: My right hon. Friend announced the abolition of the primary purpose rule in an answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) on 5 June, Official Report, column 218. An amendment to the immigration rules was laid which came into effect the same day. Outstanding appeals involving primary purpose are being reviewed. In cases where the refusal was on the ground of primary purpose alone, instructions are being issued to grant entry clearance.

Prisons (Security)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the Government policy towards the outstanding recommendations made in the Learmont report into prison security. [11932]

Ms Quin: One hundred and twelve of the recommendations have been implemented. Of the remaining 15, 11 are the subject of a cost-benefit analysis to determine their operational effectiveness and value for money, and four are still being reviewed or evaluated through pilot schemes.

Volunteers (Screening)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress he has made with the proposal in the Cullen report for the screening of volunteers; and if he will make a statement. [11598]

Mr. Michael: The recommendation for the vetting and supervision of adults working with children and young people, including paid workers and volunteers, is under consideration by the Government.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to introduce a legal obligation on individuals and organisations to have all their (a) existing and (b) new volunteers screened; and what estimate he has made of the average cost of that procedure. [11599]

Mr. Michael: There is no legal requirement for individuals or organisations to screen existing or new volunteers. Depending on the level of check, the cost of such checks has been estimated at between £5 and £10. We are currently considering the implementation of part V of the Police Act 1997 and will honour an undertaking to consult voluntary organisations before reaching a decision.

Sutton Police Station

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to bring forward the date of the private finance initiative for building a new police station in Sutton. [11830]

Mr. Michael: The Metropolitan police propose to seek tenders for provision of services for a package which includes replacement of divisional police stations in Sutton, Bromley and Lewisham.

The receiver for the Metropolitan police district hopes to advertise for expressions of interest in the Official Journal of the European Communities by September.

European Union

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on justice and home affairs matters currently under discussion within the European Union. [11922]

Ms Quin: In securing its major policy objectives in the Amsterdam treaty, the Government ensured that the United Kingdom would continue to play a leading role in European Union co-operation to fight crime, drugs and terrorism.

During its current presidency of the European Union, Luxembourg proposes to give priority to the implementation of the Dublin convention on asylum; to undertake further work on a draft Eurodac convention; and to work towards further measures to tackle illegal immigration. Attention will also be given to issues relating to the implementation of the Europol convention; work to counter a range of organised criminal activities; and aspects of the illegal production and trafficking of drugs.

In general, Luxembourg's work programme has a strong practical emphasis, which the Government welcome, and on which we intend to build during the United Kingdom presidency in 1998.

A full explanatory note on Luxembourg's proposed work programmes was made available for parliamentary scrutiny earlier this month under explanatory note reference 9378/97.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has, pursuant to article K.2 of the Amsterdam treaty for (a) operational co-operation of law enforcement bodies, (b) training and secondment of staff, (c) shared use of equipment and forensics and (d) common evaluation of investigative techniques. [11402]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 30 July 1997]: Support for operational co-operation, training and secondments, equipment and forensic science, and relevant investigative techniques are all matters which are already discussed under title VI of the present treaty on European Union. It is for future consideration exactly how they will be taken forward when the Amsterdam treaty is in force, but this will not require radical changes.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what operational guidelines will be issued on the protection of personal data while law enforcement bodies operate under article K.2 of the Amsterdam treaty. [11403]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 30 July 1997]: We have no current plans to issue guidelines of this sort. The law enforcement agencies of member states will continue to operate in accordance with national law. The Europol convention already contains data protection provisions relating to Europol, and data protection issues will be considered fully in the development of any new initiatives at European Union level.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on (a) the independent operational capacity of Europol following the Amsterdam treaty and (b) Europol's proposed research, documentation and statistical network on cross-border crime. [11404]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 30 July 1997]: Article K.2 of the Amsterdam treaty sets out the future role of Europol in supporting operational activity by law enforcement agencies of member states. Europol will have no independent operational capacity. The reference to a research documentation and statistical network is consistent with the tasks already set out in the Europol convention. It will be for consideration, once the Amsterdam treaty and the Europol convention have been ratified, whether Europol's role in this area should be developed further.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the impact of the asylum protocol of the Amsterdam treaty on the formulation of (a) a common asylum policy and (b) a common asylum system for the European Union. [11411]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 30 July 1997]: The asylum protocol of the draft Amsterdam treaty concerns the handling of claims for asylum from nationals of European Union member states in other member states. As such, it will apply to a relatively small number of cases.

The position of the United Kingdom in relation to other measures which might be adopted under the new title in the treaty of the European Communities concerning free movement of persons, asylum and immigration, is guaranteed by protocol Y of the draft Amsterdam treaty. This provides that such measures shall not be binding on or applicable in the United Kingdom and Ireland unless either or both states wish to take part.

Probation Service

Ms Beverely Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of prisons and young offender institutions reduced their number of probation staff in the financial year 1996–97. [11635]

Ms Quin: Thirty-eight per cent. of the total number of establishments in use during 1996–97 reduced their numbers of seconded probation staff. In some, the reduction was in terms of the number of hours worked by probation staff, rather than full-time posts. Some establishments have increased their numbers of probation staff since the beginning of the current financial year.

Ms Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many seconded probation officers there were in (i) June 1995, (ii) January 1996, (iii) June 1996, (iv) January 1997 and (v) June 1997; and what is the estimated national number in 1999; and nationally in (a) Manchester, (b) Leeds, (c) Birmingham and (d) each of the six London prisons. [11636]

Ms Quin: The numbers of probation officers working in prisons on 30 June and 31 December each year from 1995 to 31 December 1996, the latest date for which figures are as yet available, are as follows:

Seconded probation officers working in prisons (whole-time equivalents)

	Number
30 June 1995	645
31 December 1995	639
30 June 1996	586
31 December 1996	543

Information on probation officers seconded to individual prisons is not held centrally, but I will write as soon as possible to my hon. Friend with the details she requests.

The number of probation officers seconded to the Prison Service in future years will depend on the outcome of the comprehensive spending review and of discussions between governors and chief probation officers about what staff in what grades can most efficiently meet the services' joint responsibilities to provide good through care under the national through care framework published in 1993, a copy of which is in the Library.

Restorative Justice

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is his Department's policy towards restorative justice; and what guidance is given to (a) police forces and (b) magistrates on the operation of restorative justice; [11834]

(2) what plans he has to review the operation of restorative justice in United Kingdom police forces. [11833]

Mr. Michael: I have recently met representatives of the National Council for Social Concern to discuss their proposals to promote restorative justice in England and Wales. Our long-standing commitment to introduce a reparation order demonstrates the Government's wish to restore a proper balance of rights and responsibilities which will be taken forward in the Crime and Disorder Bill later this year. The concept of "restorative justice", like the concept of "relational justice" developed by the Jubilee centre in Cambridge, provide useful tools for understanding crime and disorder when combined with a careful analysis of local problems and an objective assessment of "what works".

Immigration

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what conditions a foreign national who has married a resident of the United Kingdom, in the United Kingdom, may have the unlimited right to remain in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [11905]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: A person who enters the United Kingdom with an entry clearance for the purpose of marriage, or who is in the United Kingdom for a purpose other than marriage and subsequently marries a British citizen or a person settled here, may be granted an initial probationary period of 12 months leave to enter or remain in the United Kingdom provided that person meets the requirements of the immigration rules. On completion of the 12-month probationary period, they may be granted indefinite leave to remain provided the marriage still subsists and the other requirements of the immigration rules are met.

Prison Staff (Early Retirement and Severance)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison staff members have accepted offers of early retirement or severance under the voluntary early retirement and severance scheme. [11837]

Ms Quin: One thousand, one hundred and thirty-four members of staff accepted offers of early retirement or severance under the Prison Service voluntary early retirement and severance scheme.

Caution Plus

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment his Department has made of the operation of caution plus by the Thames Valley police force; and what plans he has to encourage other forces to adopt caution plus. [11782]

Mr. Michael: The operation of caution plus schemes in a number of areas has demonstrated the value of early, positive intervention with young offenders. I have been impressed by a number of initiatives such as the retail theft initiative in Milton Keynes which show the value of the police working with local authorities and the community—including the business community—to tackle crime and to "nip things in the bud".

We are studying "best practice" in the Thames Valley and elsewhere in working towards implementation of our proposed final warning for young offenders and the intervention which will be associated with it. Our first consideration is how best to see "what works" in order to prevent crime and reduce reoffending.

Political Parties

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy towards the state funding of political parties. [11649]

Mr. George Howarth: We have no plans to introduce state funding of political parties.

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy on the disclosure by political parties of their financiers and donations. [11648]

Mr. Howarth: We are committed to obliging parties to declare the source of all donations above a minimum figure.

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his policy is on the compulsory registration by political parties of their membership. [11650]

Mr. Howarth: We have no plans to introduce compulsory registration by political parties of their membership.

Programme Development Unit

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the objectives of the Home Office programme development unit; what performance indicators will be used to monitor its work; and if he will make a statement. [11914]

Mr. Michael: The primary objective of the Home Office programme development unit is to contribute to the development of policy and practice in the area of crime and criminal justice through experimental initiatives from which general lessons can be drawn. It identifies, initiates, encourages, develops and manages innovative local projects to test out in practice ideas stemming from research and practice. It ensures projects are properly monitored and independently evaluated and disseminates the results. It offers help with the replication of similar programmes where appropriate.

The work of the programme development unit is assessed by the contribution that its work makes to informing policy and practice; the extent to which projects found to be successful are continued beyond the period of Home Office funding, either through attracting funding from other sources or through being mainstreamed into the activities of other bodies such as local authorities; and the extent to which they are replicated.

The work of the programme development unit is regarded as an essential component in the armoury to tackle and prevent crime.

European Convention on Human Rights

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 21 July, Official Report, column 385, if he will list those who responded to the consultation document "Bringing Rights Home", published in December 1996; and what further discussions on the incorporation of the European convention on human rights have been held since. [11937]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We received responses to "Bringing Rights Home" from the following persons and organisations:

Charter 88
Churches Commission for Racial Justice
Data Protection Registrar
Director of Human Rights, Council of Europe
Martin Doherty
Editor of the "European Human Rights Law Review"
Avril Fox
Guild of Editors
Sir Basil Hall
Human Rights Incorporation Project
Institute for Public Policy Research
Joseph Jaconelli
Justice
Martin Kenny
Law Society
David Lepper
Liberty
Karen Maloney
Frank McManus
Councillor N. Perrott
Public Law Project
Royal National Institute for Deaf People
Rabinder Singh
Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights
Dr. Robert Wintemute
Enid Wistrich.

Home Office Ministers have had meetings to discuss incorporation of the convention with Charter 88, the Human Rights Incorporation Project, the Institute for Public Policy Research, Sir Kenneth Keith, Liberty, my noble Friend the Lord Lester of Herne Hill and Justice.

Country Watch

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the success of schemes of policing for rural areas with particular reference to country watch. [11785]

Mr. Michael: The Government recognise that the most effective response to rural crime is a partnership between the police and the local community, but no specific assessment has been made of country watch. We encourage crime prevention schemes that enable members of the public—with the support of the local police—to do something positive in the fight against crime.

In accordance with this, we intend to introduce new statutory duties for local authorities and the police to work together and with the local community to analyse and identify local problems of crime and disorder and then together to draw up and implement strategies for tackling such problems. That will apply in both rural and urban areas.

Schemes like country watch will continue to play a role in this partnership. The support which such schemes attract from the local community can make a significant impact on crime in the countryside.

Special Constabulary

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to issue the consultation paper on compensation arrangements for special constables; who is being consulted; what is the deadline for consultation; and when he plans to bring forward legislation. [11724]

Mr. Michael: We intend to issue the consultation paper in September, and shall invite the police representative bodies, the Local Government Association, and the working group on the special constabulary to submit comments by the end of October. Subject to these consultations, our aim is to introduce these new arrangements as part of a revised and consolidated set of regulations for special constables, to be made next year under the Police Act 1996.

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many special constables there have been in post in each year since 1979. [11354]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 29 July 1997]: The number of special constables in post in England and Wales since 1979 are given in the table.

Year	Number
1979	15,960
1980	15,108
1981	14,978
1982	15,160
1983	15,331
1984	16,012
1985	16,161
1986	16,070
1987	16,209
1988	15,788
1989	15,589
1990	15,881
1991	18,073
1992	19,243
1993	20,566
1994	20,096
1995	20,026
1996	19,736
1997[1]	19,836

[1] The figure for 1997 is provisional. The figures from 1979 to 1994 were recorded as at 31 December of those years. From 1995, the figures were recorded as at 31 March.

Prisons (Staff)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the ratio of prison staff to prisoners in each year from 1993 to 1997. [11838]

Ms Quin: The information requested is listed.

Year	Staff: prisoner ratio
1993	1:1.17
1994	1:1.24
1995	1:1.26
1996	1:1.33
1997[1]	1:1.50

[1] Figures as at 30 June 1997.

Perjury

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons found guilty of perjury since 1979 served custodial sentences in an open prison; and what percentage this represents of the total. [10010]

Ms Quin: The information available centrally combines the offences of perjury, libel and perverting the course of justice. Information for 1991 to 1996 is contained in the table. From court proceedings statistics for the years 1991 to 1995, it is known that around one in nine of these offenders will have served sentences for perjury. It is not possible to provide the information in this form prior to 1991 as information held centrally before that date combined perjury with a much larger group of offences.

Prisoners released from open prisons having served a custodial sentence for perjury, libel, or perverting the course of justice

Year	Number of discharges	Percentage of all discharges from open prisons	Percentage of all discharges from all prisons	Percentage of all discharges for perjury, libel, and perverting the course of justice
1991	40	0.5	0.1	30.5
1992	66	1.0	0.2	34.7
1993	59	0.7	0.1	26.1
1994	76	1.0	0.1	24.5
1995	102	1.1	0.2	21.2
1996	156	1.4	0.2	27.8

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average length of time spent in prison by prisoners who were released in each year since 1992 having served a custodial sentence for perjury. [10009]

Ms Quin: The information available centrally combines the offences of perjury, libel and perverting the course of justice. The available information is contained in the table.

In the information held centrally about prisoners, the offence of perjury cannot be separately distinguished from among this group of offences. From court proceedings statistics for the years 1992 to 1995, it is known that around one in nine offenders given custodial sentences for perjury, libel or perverting the course of justice were guilty of the offence of perjury.

Average length of time served for prisoners released, having served a custodial sentence for perjury, libel, or perverting the course of justice.

	Average time served (months)
1992	3.7
1993	4.3
1994	3.8
1995	3.5
1996	3.6

Operation Quantum

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the (a) cost and (b) number of consultants hired to advise Operation Quantum. [10099]

Ms Quin: Since the inception of the project in April 1996, seven consultancy firms have been employed by the Prison Service to provide specialist advice on legal issues, corporate finance, procurement procedures and specification processes. The need for consultants has been steadily reduced as skills transfer into the service has taken place. The service now retains four consultancy firms.

To date, the Prison Service has spent £2.5 million on consultancy fees. The costs of the whole procurement process, including consultancy fees, are expected to be recovered from the net savings generated by implementation of the project.

Prisoners (Diet and Behaviour)

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research his Department commissioned (a) before and (b) after 1 May to consider the effect of diet on prisoners' behaviour. [11936]

Ms Quin: The Prison Service has not commissioned such research. However, as previously stated to the hon. Member, it has agreed to facilitate the nutritional rehabilitation project being run by Natural Justice Ltd. in Aylesbury young offender institution which started in 1996. This is expected to finish this year.

Police Scientific Development Branch

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in which scientific journals and other publications staff from the police scientific development branch, Sandridge, have published papers since 1990; and if he will list the date of publication in each case. [11963]

Mr. Michael: A list is being compiled in order to be able to respond fully to the hon. Member.

As soon as the list is complete, I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the (a) published and (b) internal reports the police scientific development branch, Sandridge, produces outlining its activities. [11966]

Mr. Michael: The information is as follows:

(a) Published reports

There are a number of published reports which outline the police scientific development branch activities:

(i) Home Office annual report

(ii) Home Office memorandum on the prior options review of PSDB—1997, in the Library;

(iii) Technical papers included in conference proceedings—both in the United Kingdom and overseas;

(iv) Technical papers in scientific and technical publications;

(v) Office of Science and Technology forward look of Government-funded science, engineering and technology;

(vi) Annual review of government research and development.

(b) Internal reports

PSDB internal reports, which are sent out to specific customer contacts include:

(i) two-page PSDB overview, by director PSDB;

(ii) PSDB annual report;

(iii) PSDB technical reports and standards.

Departmental Savings

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the savings planned in his departmental budget for (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99 in order to allow for the higher than planned expenditure on the Prison Service announced in his statement of 24 July; and if he will make a statement. [11518]

Mr. Straw: It is too early for me to be able to identify the savings in the Home Office budget which might cover the extra spending on the Prison Service. For both 1997–98 and 1998–99, I will be looking rigorously at my whole programme to find offsetting savings. I expect this process to take several months.

Waste Minimisation

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the amount, and proportion, of paper recycled by his Department in each of the last five years. [11543]

Mr. Straw: The Home Office takes its responsibilities to the environment seriously and increasingly participates in local paper recycling schemes. For example, the Department has been operating the Westminster city council's "Green Bin" scheme very successfully for almost two years in its central London headquarters buildings. However, no central record is kept of the amount of paper utilised or recycled.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce a waste minimisation strategy for his Department. [11541]

Mr. Straw: The Home Office is committed to seeking improvements to its green housekeeping and is currently revising its energy and environmental strategy and will address waste minimisation as part of this. A draft of the new strategy and accompanying guidance material will be discussed at a property managers seminar to be held on 15 September. The expectation is that the new strategy will be adopted as Home Office policy and receive its official launch by the end of the year.

In the meantime, the current Home Office green housekeeping strategy, published in August 1993, requires that property managers carry out an annual audit against environmental objectives which include waste minimisation. Specific reference is made to the continued need for attention to the efficient use of all resources, to the effective and economic use of paper and to extending the recycling of other departmental waste, such as glass, plastics, cans and batteries. The Department has also promulgated all the central guidance on waste minimisation and can claim considerable success with its recycling of paper, bottles and toner cartridges and most recently with reuse of its computers and printers.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on existing targets set to minimise waste in his Department. [11542]

Mr. Straw: My Department is strongly committed to minimising waste. In encouraging its local property managers to make the most effective use of the limited effort they are able to devote to green housekeeping, the Home Office has sought their full co-operation with local and central environmental initiatives for improving waste management in preference to their administering the setting up and monitoring of specific waste minimisation targets. Once a year, the local property managers are asked to report progress against their action plans under the terms of the 1993 Home Office green housekeeping strategy. The Department is in the process of revising its energy and environmental strategy and, in line with the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions' recommendations, will be giving due consideration to the appropriateness of future waste minimisation targets.

Office Refurbishment

Mr. Terry Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for the refurbishment of ministerial offices in his Department; and what is the estimated cost of the works and date of completion. [11874]

Mr. Straw: I have no current firm plans for the refurbishment of ministerial offices, but decoration and window glazing work estimated at £8,500 may be carried out later this year.

Firearms Consultative Committee

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the names of the new members of the Firearms Consultative Committee. [11943]

Mr. Michael: There have been three new members since the committee last reported in July 1996.

They are:

Mr. J. D. Hoare: Secretary of the National Small-bore Rifle Association

Mr. B. Hughes: Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. V. Clayton: Home Office

Wormwood Scrubs Prison

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when repairs to the roof at Wormwood Scrubs will be completed. [11953]

Ms Quin: A bid has been made for repairs to be carried out to the roof at Wormwood Scrubs in the financial year 1998–99.

UK Passport Agency

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for the development of the UK Passport Agency. [11586]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I have recently approved the UK Passport Agency's plans for the introduction of a new, more secure British passport from the end of next year. The agency has awarded two contracts under the public-private partnership arrangements to the private sector. Siemens Business Services will undertake the receipt of passport applications, and the collection, storage and transmission of the data needed or the new passport. The Stationery Office Ltd. will undertake the printing and issuing of the new passport. The enhanced security features will include digitised photographs and signatures.

The UK Passport Agency is not being privatised. It will retain its core function of establishing eligibility for a British passport, and will continue to operate from its six existing regional offices. There will be a reduction in the agency's staffing, but there should be no need for compulsory redundancies for permanent staff.

Traffic Wardens

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will extend the powers of traffic wardens to the enforcement of a range of moving traffic offences; and if he will make a statement. [11228]

Mr. Michael: The Department is keen to encourage the police service to make the most efficient use of its traffic warden resources.

There are no plans at present to extend the functions of traffic wardens, but we are considering a proposal from the Association of Chief Police Officers that wardens should be given the power to stop vehicles so that they can assist the Vehicle Inspectorate and other enforcement agencies with the conduct of road checks.

Special Secure Units

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the prisons which contain special secure units; how many places are available in each; and what is the annual cost of maintaining (a) a prisoner in a special secure unit and (b) a category A prisoner. [11105]

Ms Quin: Those prisons which are equipped with special secure units and the places available in each are as follows: Belmarsh, 48 places; Full Sutton, eight places; and Whitemoor, 14 places. There are currently 40 prisoners held in special secure units.

The average cost per prisoner place in a special secure unit is estimated to be approximately £61,000 per annum[1]. Convicted category A prisoners are held in one of five dispersal prisons. The average cost per prisoner place in a dispersal prison is £33,000 per annum[1].

[1] Costs are based on figures obtained for the financial year ending 31 March 1997 and represent the cost per accommodation place certified to hold prisoners in an establishment.

Closed Circuit Television

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 19 June, Official Report, column 247, what plans he has to fund new CCTV projects in 1998–99; what plans he has to extend the CCTV challenge competition; when new bids for CCTV will be considered; and if he will make a statement. [12232]

Mr. Michael: As I indicated in my reply to a question from the right hon. Member for South-West Surrey (Mrs. Bottomley) on 19 June, Official Report, column 247, we are considering whether there should be another round of the closed circuit television challenge competition in 1998–99 as part of our review of spending programmes. An announcement will be made later in the summer.

Sentencing

Sir Peter Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the average length of prison sentence passed on adult males by Crown courts in (a) 1992, (b) 1995 and (c) 1996 for (i) violent offences, (ii) sexual offences, (iii) burglary, (iv) robbery, (v) theft and handling, (vi) drugs offences and (vii) motoring offences; [12224]

(2) what proportion of offenders sentenced for indictable offences were sentenced to custody (a) at all courts, (b) at Crown courts and (c) in magistrates courts, in each year from 1992 to 1996 and in each month of 1997. [12223]

Mr. Michael: The information is published in the Home Office statistical bulletin issue 16/97 "Cautions, Court Proceedings and Sentencing England and Wales 1996". This was published on 16 July 1997 and tables 9 and 7 refer.

The 1996 data are "estimated", with final figures becoming available in the autumn. 1997 data will not be available until mid-1998.

Copies of the bulletin are available in the Library.

Immigration Detainees (Medical Services)

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what revised specification for provision of medical services has been prepared for immigration detainees in Campsfield house; and if he will make a statement. [12007]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Earlier this year, advice was sought from the director of public health in the Oxfordshire health authority in preparing a revised specification for the provision of medical services at Campsfield house. This included enhanced attendance by a doctor, additional nursing staff, including the appointment of a registered mental nurse, stress management clinics, and the availability of a female doctor for those detainees who specifically requested one. Effecting these enhancements commenced on 15 January and they were fully in place by 1 March 1997.

I am assured that the health services at Campsfied house are comparable with those provided for Oxfordshire residents by a general practitioner. A detainee who wishes to see a specialist will, if the medical circumstances of his case warrant it, be referred to a specialist and any such decision will be taken by the doctor treating him.

CS Gas

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what evaluation of the medical effects of the CS gas solvent, methyl isobutyl ketone, has been made by officials of his Department and the police scientific development branch since 1990; how many published or internal reports have been written by his Department on this subject since 1990; and how many of these reports are currently unclassified. [12180]

Mr. Michael: The Home Office police scientific development branch, together with the Department of Health and the Ministry of Defence, fully evaluated all scientific data relating to methyl isobutyl ketone, MIBK, before police trials of CS spray canisters containing this solvent were conducted last year. The Home Office has not produced any reports, either internally or published, about MIBK.

The ideal solvent for use in CS spray will present no risk to health—in particular, the eyes—and will evaporate as soon as it has done the job of delivering the CS irritant to the target. I am told that MIBK is the solvent which comes closest to achieving this. It occurs naturally in oranges, grapes and vinegar. It has many applications, including use as a food additive. It has been used in CS sprays in France for many years without serious difficulty: in particular, extensive research there has shown that it has a low toxicity to the eyes. Its only drawback is that it has a relatively low volatility, which means that it remains on the skin of someone sprayed for a short time before evaporating and may cause de-fatting and blistering.

Regional Boundaries

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a boundary commission responsible for regional boundaries in England. [12098]

Mr. George Howarth: It is our intention that the Parliamentary Boundary Commission for England should be given the responsibility of making recommendations as to the regional boundaries to be used in England for the 1999 elections to the European Parliament.

Highgrove (Policing)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department by whom the cost of policing in and around Highgrove, Tetbury, on Friday 18 July was met; and if he will make a statement. [12231]

Mr. Michael: The cost of policing in and around Highgrove on 18 July was met by Gloucestershire constabulary in the normal way.

Prisons (Unit Costs)

Sir Peter Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the percentage change in prisons unit costs between 1995–96 and 1996–97; and what is the planned percentage reduction in each of the next three years. [12221]

Ms Quin: The unit cost used by the Prison Service is net current expenditure per uncrowded prisoner place—the total certified normal accommodation of all prisons. To ensure comparability between years, adjustments are made to exclude payments to local authorities under section 53 of the Young Persons and Children's Act 1933, and to allow for transfers of work to or from the Service. Payments for prisons designed, constructed, managed and financed by the private sector are also excluded, as are the places so provided.

On this basis, the percentage change in unit costs in real terms between 1995–96 and 1996–97 is minus 3 per cent. This is based on forecast outturn for 1996–97.

The planned percentage reductions in real terms over the next three years are:

1997–98[1]: –1.1 per cent.

1998–99[2]: –2.3 per cent.

1999–2000[2]: 0.4 per cent.

These figures are subject to revision in the light of my right hon. Friend's reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Luton, North (Mr. Hopkins) on 24 July, Official Report, column 682, that the service will be allowed to spend £43 million extra this year and next to increase capacity to meet the rise in prisoner numbers. Changes in inflation assumptions would also affect the figures.

[1] Compared to previous year forecast outturn.

[2] Compared to previous year provision.

Prison Service

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his latest cash estimate of expenditure on the Prison Service in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99; and how these figures differ from those implied by the departmental spending plans set out in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1997–98"; and if he will make a statement. [11247]

Ms Quin [holding answer 29 July 1997]: The "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1997–98" did not set a separate figure for Prison Service expenditure.

The expenditure plans of the Prison Service were set out in table 1 of the audit of Prison Service resources which we published on 25 July. That table gives details of transfers between the Prison Service and the Home Office and other Departments made since the conclusion of the 1996 public expenditure survey.

The expenditure plans set out in the audit have been increased as a result of my right hon. Friend's announcement on 24 July of increased funding for the Prison Service this year and next year, to help meet the pressure arising from prisoner population. The effect of those changes is to increase planned expenditure to:

1997–98: £1,774.5 million

1998–99: £1,733.3 million

Metropolitan Police (Sick Leave)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Metropolitan police officers have been on paid sick leave for (a) three months, (b) six months, (c) one year, (d) two years, (e) three years, (f) four years and (g) five years. [12015]

Mr. Michael: The management of sick leave has been devolved within the Metropolitan police service and the detailed breakdown of the information requested is not immediately available. I shall write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible with a full response to his question.

Speed Cameras (Fines)

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the value of fines collected as a result of the evidence of highway speed cameras (a) over the most recent months for which information is available and (b) over the 12 months preceding that. [11630]

Mr. Michael: The information requested is not available centrally.

Some estimate of the revenue received can be made from the fact that there were 36,916 prosecutions for speeding offences detected by automatic cameras in England and Wales in 1995, the latest year for which figures are available, and 20,630 in 1994. The average amount of fine imposed for all speeding offences in 1995 was £107—£113 in 1994. Not all fines will have been paid.

The majority of speeding offences detected by automatic cameras are dealt with by fixed penalty, 170,014 in 1995 and 95,510 in 1994, the current charge being £40.

Offences against the Person

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to implement the recommendations of Law Commission report No. 218 "Offences Against the Person and General Principles". [12215]

Mr. Straw: The Law Commission's report No. 218, published in November 1993, is a major contribution to the development of the criminal law. It was warmly welcomed by many involved with the criminal justice system as creating a clearer and more coherent statement of the law of violence against the person. The Government have considered the Law Commission's recommendations with great care, and accept the principle of its proposals for reform of those offences contained mainly in the Offences Against the Person Act 1861.

This is a complex and difficult area of the law, and case law has evolved since the Law Commission's report was first published. It is important that any proposals to reform offences that come before the courts so frequently, and have been in existence for 136 years, are robust, well thought through and well supported. Following a detailed consideration of their report, done in close collaboration with the Law Commission, we have decided to publish a draft Bill in a consultation paper later this year. This will set out our initial proposals for reforming the law in this area, based on the Law Commission's report, and seek views on some of the difficult issues around the technical legal changes proposed by the Law Commission, such as definitions of intent, recklessness and intoxication or whether the intentional transmission of disease should be included in the Bill. The proposals will apply to England and Wales.

In accepting the principle of reforming the Offences Against the Person Act 1861, the Government do not plan to take forward all the Law Commission's proposals at this juncture. In particular, the Law Commission made recommendations for setting out general defences of duress and the justifiable use of force in statute. We recognise the importance of these proposals, which are not directly related to the reform of the 1861 Act, but they raise some very difficult questions which should be considered separately and over a longer time scale.

Electoral Register

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what provision for electoral registration will be made for voters permanently resident in hospitals who are unable to register under the hospital's address. [12082]

Mr. George Howarth: The electoral registration officer is required by law to register all those who are resident in his or her area who appear to him or her to be eligible to vote. Only those who are patients in mental hospitals, whether voluntary or detained, are prevented by law from using, for the purposes of electoral registration, the address of the hospital in which they are resident.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what provisions he will make for the registration of homeless voters for forthcoming by-elections and referendums. [12083]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Guidance issued to electoral registration officers makes it clear that no one should be denied the right to register simply because he or she is homeless. Although an elector must be registered at an address at which he or she is resident, that address need not be a conventional one. Any person who may have been missed off the register can make a claim to be added to it after publication, and it is for EROs to determine on the facts of each case whether an individual is eligible to register.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he plans to take to ensure that disabled voters have equal opportunities to register and vote in forthcoming by-elections and referendums. [12081]

Mr. O'Brien: It is the statutory duty of each electoral registration officer to include on the register for the area in which he acts the names of all those who appear to him to be eligible. Any eligible elector who may have been missed off the register can make a claim to be added to it after publication. District and London borough councils are statutorily required to designate as polling places, so far as is reasonable and practicable, only places which are accessible to the disabled. Acting returning officers may also apply to the Home Office or the Scottish Office for grants towards the cost of providing temporary ramps and polling screens adapted for use by the disabled which may be used at elections and referendums. There is no cap on the number of applications which the acting returning officer may make for grant assistance.

Intrusive Surveillance Code

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will confirm the arrangements for the public consultation exercise on the intrusive surveillance code of practice required under part III of the Police Act 1997. [12320]

Mr. Michael: Further to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Newark (Ms Jones) on 16 July, Official Report, column 176. I have now decided that the public consultation exercise should begin on 12 August.

Stephen Lawrence

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will establish an inquiry into the death of Stephen Lawrence on 22 April 1993. [12275]

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to make an announcement on the actions to be taken by his Department towards the murder of Stephen Lawrence; and if he will make a statement. [12277]

Mr. Straw: I have decided to establish an inquiry under section 49 of the Police Act 1996. The terms of reference of that inquiry will be:

> to inquire into the matters arising from the death of Stephen Lawrence on 22 April 1993 to date, in order particularly to identify the lessons to be learned for the investigation and prosecution of racially motivated crimes.

I have appointed Sir William MacPherson of Cluny, formerly High Court judge of the Queen's Bench, to conduct this inquiry. He will be supported in carrying out this inquiry by Mr. Thomas Cook, former deputy chief constable of West Yorkshire, the Right Reverend John Sentamu, Bishop of Stepney, and Dr. Richard Stone, chairman of the Jewish Council for Racial Equality. Under section 49, the inquiry will have the powers to summon any person to give evidence, to require the production of documents and to take evidence on oath.

The handling of this case by the Metropolitan police is the subject of complaints made by the Lawrence family which are currently under investigation in accordance with police complaints procedures. That investigation is being supervised by the Police Complaints Authority. The authority expects the investigation to be completed in September and to report the outcome in October. Under section 97(2) of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984, the authority may make a report to the Secretary of State on any matters coming to its notice to which it considers that his attention should be drawn by reason of their gravity or of other exceptional circumstances. The authority intends to produce a report on this case under that special provision. Under section 97(5) of the 1984 Act, that report must be laid before Parliament and published.

The inquiry under the Police Act will begin when the Police Complaints Authority report has been completed. That will allow the inquiry to consider any issues emerging from the investigation supervised by the Police Complaints Authority. The inquiry's statutory powers will also allow it to require the production of any evidence gathered during the course of the Police Complaints Authority investigation. My right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General has also confirmed that the full co-operation of the Crown Prosecution Service will be given to the inquiry.

I believe that the establishment of this inquiry following the completion of the investigation supervised by the Police Complaints Authority will allow the concerns of the Lawrence family and others to be fully addressed, and will identify the lessons to be learned from this tragic case which will be relevant to the future handling by the criminal justice system of racially motivated crimes.

Drugs

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the "Tackling Drugs Together" initiative. [11909]

Mrs. Anne Taylor: I have been asked to reply.

The Government are continuing to implement the "Tackling Drugs Together" strategy for England initiated by the previous Administration. The UK anti-drugs co-ordinator will review progress, on appointment, and submit proposals for a new strategy.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Market Testing

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of state for Social Security what plans she has to stop further market testing of services within her Department. [4609]

Mr. Field: Market testing, part of the competing for quality initiative introduced under the previous Administration, is one of several ways the Department of Social Security has assessed the value of involving the private sector in the delivery of services.

I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given today by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to my hon. Friend the Member for Bradford, North (Mr. Rooney).

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. McWilliam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list the PFI projects currently being undertaken by her Department, indicating in each case (a) the expected savings, (b) the savings to date, (c) the cost to date, (d) whether the projects are on target or delayed, (e) the extent of any delay, (f) whether the delay is due to the civil service or agency or the private partner and (g) the projected total cost. [6246]

Mr. Field: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given today by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State to my hon. Friend the Member for Bradford, North (Mr. Rooney).

We currently have two PFI contracts—the automation of benefit payments through Post Office outlets—BA POCL—and a replacement for the national insurance recording system NIRS2:

NIRS2

The contract was signed in May 1995, allowing for a phased delivery between February 1997 and April 1999. It is expected to cost some 60 per cent. less than a public sector development. Although there are no operational savings thus far, there will also be no payment to the service provider until NIRS1 is replaced in April 1998.

Under the original contract, NIRS1 was to be replaced in February 1997. In fact, it will not be decommissioned until April 1998. However, the first release of NIRS2 was delivered as planned in February 1997 and the whole development phase remains on schedule for completion in April 1999. The revised implementation date was at the request of the service provider.

The contractor charge will be volume driven, but, over the life of the contract, it is estimated to be some £45 million.

BA POCL

The project is at an early stage. Implementation of the benefit payment card began in October 1996 with a trial involving child benefit recipients. Other benefits will be added to the system over the next few years. The project is expected to be cost-neutral in administrative terms, but, over its life, savings are expected of some £1,200 million from reduced fraud losses.

Benefits Agency

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his policy on whether to increase the proportion of Benefits Agency staff on casual or fixed-term contract basis; and what assessment has been made of the consequent impact on morale and staff quality. [7988]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Modernising the social security system is a key priority of the Government, We will streamline services to provide better, simpler, more efficient services to clients. The staffing of the Benefits Agency is a matter for Peter Mathison, its chief executive, I have asked him to write the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Mark Todd, dated 31 July 1997:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what is the policy on increasing the proportion of Benefit Agency (BA) staff on casual or fixed term contract basis; and what assessment has been made of the consequent impact on morale and staff quality.

The use of casual and fixed term appointments (FTA) has always been an integral part of our staff planning to allow managers to cater for fluctuations in workloads and to staff short term projects.

Although no formal assessment has been made of the impact of these measures, the Agency recognises that some FTA and casual staff may feel insecure. The Agency has to strike a balance between the needs of the business and those of the workforce. Both FTA and casual staff are given comprehensive training equivalent to that provided for permanent staff. They are also included in the Agency's performance appraisal arrangements to ensure that they remain motivated, that their development needs are identified and that their potential is maximised.

Widow's Benefits

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will introduce measures to ensure that women in polygamous marriages are not denied widow's benefits; and if she will estimate the cost to public funds of paying benefit. [10292]

Mr. Denham: The concept of marriage under British law is fundamentally monogamous. It would, therefore be inappropriate to pay widow's benefit to widows who, at the time of the death of their husbands, were in a polygamous marriage.

Information is not available on the cost to public funds of paying benefit in all such cases.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average order for payment made by the Child Support Agency in respect of absent parents who are (a) employed and (b) self-employed. [10526]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The Government believe that children are entitled to the support of both parents. The child support scheme is designed to provide levels of maintenance which absent parents can realistically afford.

The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Mrs. Faith Boardman to Mr. Peter Bradley, dated 30 July 1997:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about maintenance assessments.

The latest figures available show that as at 28 February 1997, the average full maintenance assessment for employed absent parents was £39.02; for those who were self employed the average full maintenance assessment was £23.72.

The difference in the value of the assessments is due to the level of net income of absent parents who are employees and those who are self employed. The average net income for an employed absent parent was £191.83; for an absent parent who was self employed the figure was £150.00.

I hope this is helpful.

Lone Parents

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many lone parents are currently receiving income support; and what estimate she has made of the number of lone parents likely to be in receipt of income support in each of the next five financial years. [10771]

Mr. Keith Bradley: It is estimated that as at August 1996, the latest date for which information is available, there were 1,061,000 lone parents receiving income support in Great Britain. Available estimates of the number of lone parents likely to be in receipt of income support in the future are in the table. New estimates of the number of lone parents in receipt of income support, taking into account the new deal for lone parents, will be available in October.

Lone parents in receipt of income support

1996–97: 1,057,000

1997–98: 1,054,000

1998–99: 1,044,000

1999–00: 1,054,000

Notes:

1. Figures are consistent with those given in tables 6 and 7 in the 1997 Social Security departmental report, published before the new deal was announced, and are rounded to the nearest thousand.
2. Figures are based on a 5 per cent. sample and as such are subject to a degree of sampling variation.

Waste Minimisation

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if she will list the amount, and proportion, of paper recycled by her Department in each of the last five years; [11564]

(2) what plans she has to introduce a waste minimisation strategy for her Department; [11562]

(3) if she will make a statement on existing targets set to minimise waste within her department. [11563]

Mr. Denham: One of our key aims is to promote policies that sustain the environment.

No record is kept of the amount of paper recycled. However, waste paper is sorted in all social security offices into two categories, "Confidential/Restricted" and "Other". All "Confidential/Restricted" waste is recycled and other paper is subject to best practices which includes reusing paper and the disposal of paper in green bins.

The Department has produced a green guide for use locally throughout its estate which includes guidance on the recycling of paper, drinks cans, glass, plastic, printer toner cartridges and batteries. In addition contacts have been appointed in each DSS business unit/agency who are responsible for promoting green issues.

There are no targets set to minimise waste. However, a benchmarking exercise to baseline current volumes and costs is scheduled to be completed early next year and we will be considering introducing targets when the accommodation and services contracts are re-let.

Private Pensions (Regulation)

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what regulatory reform the Government propose in respect of private pension provision. [11823]

Mr. Denham: On 17 July, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced a wide-ranging review of pensions. One of the pension challenges to which my right hon. Friend referred was the need to get the regulation of pensions right. The personal pensions mis-selling scandal illustrates too clearly what can go wrong when pensions are not properly regulated. Appropriate regulation provides security for members, minimises the scope for abuse and does not impose an undue burden on providers.

As part of the review, we are taking stock of the way the recent pension reforms are being implemented, and we have already begun consultation with interested parties, including employers, employees, the pensions industry, the regulatory authorities and others.

We will also consult fully on our plans to develop new stakeholder pensions to offer secure, flexible, value-for-money second pensions, particularly to those who cannot join an employer's occupational scheme and whose pay is low or who have intermittent wages; and a framework of citizenship pensions for those who assume responsibility as carers and who cannot build up a second pension scheme in their own right.

The review will enable the Government to publish an initial framework for change in the first part of 1998. There will then be a period of further consultation before firm proposals for legislation are developed.

Income Support (Earnings Disregard)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate she has made of the cost of increasing the earnings disregard for income support to (a) £30 and (b) £50 per week. [11580]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Our objective is to reduce poverty and welfare dependency and to promote work incentives. We will develop a system that supports work, savings and honesty. Our first steps are to focus on helping people off welfare and into work and to review the central areas of insecurity for older people.

The information is in the table.

Increase in earnings disregard on income support	Estimated cost
Increase to £30	Between £45 million and £55 million
Increase to £50	Between £65 million and £110 million

1. Estimates are based on the 1994–95 "Family Resource Survey", and the May 1996 "Quarterly Statistical Enquiry", uprated to 1997–98 levels of prices and benefit levels. Numbers of income support cases with earnings have been uprated to be in line with caseload forecasts underlying the 1997 departmental report.

2. The range reflects uncertainty as to whether new claimants will be in receipt of income support or income-related jobseeker's allowance. The cost excludes the cost of families, in receipt of family credit, with a partner working between 16 and 24 hours who would become better off on income support, as it has been assumed that they would claim income-related jobseeker's allowance.

Disabled Claimants

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the cost to date of implementing the benefits integrity programme for disabled claimants; and what savings are estimated to be achieved in the first year of operation. [11977]

Mr. Denham: One of our key aims is rebuilding integrity in, and public support for the social security system. The administration of this programme is a matter for Peter Mathison, chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Bob Blizzard, dated 31 July 1997:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the cost and savings of the Benefit Integrity Programme.

The cost of implementing the Benefit Integrity Project is £1,099,440 for the period 28 April 1997 to 30 June 1997. These are the latest available.

The estimated programme expenditure savings attributed to the Benefit Integrity Project for the current year is £27m.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

War Pensions

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the list of regional consultants and their specialties held by the War Pensions Agency is available to the public; and whether claimants have the right to see reports written by regional consultants relating to their case. [12186]

Mr. Denham: Queries on operational matters concerning the War Pensions Agency are for its chief executive Mr. Kevin Caldwell. I have asked him to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from K. C. Caldwell to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 31 July 1997:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the availability of the list of regional consultants used by the War Pensions Agency.

The list of regional consultants and their specialities held by this Agency is available to members of the public on request. A copy of a regional consultant report is sent to a War Pension claimant on request provided that we are sure its disclosure would not harm the health or welfare of the claimant.

I hope you find my reply helpful.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate the gross and net cost of changing the assessment of housing benefit to a fixed six-monthly assessment in the manner of family credit. [12196]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information requested is not available.

Housing benefit is being reviewed as part of a joint housing review with my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister. In addition Mr. Martin Taylor has been asked by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer to examine the interaction of the tax and benefits systems so that they can be streamlined and modernised, so as to fulfil our objectives of promoting work incentives, reducing poverty and welfare dependency and strengthening family and community life.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to support new housing benefit claimants whose rent includes an element for social care costs, following the recent court judgment indicating that such costs are not covered by the housing benefit system. [11613]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Following the recent court judgment on the scope of housing benefit my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced, on the same day, a package of interim measures designed to:

Continue the vast majority of Housing benefit expenditure on support services in existing housing provision; and introduce a compensation scheme to protect the position of claimants in existing supported housing by compensating landlords whose tenants lose income as a result of the changes.

We are consulting the Social Security Advisory Committee and local authority associations on draft legislation to enable housing benefit, which is designed to meet housing costs rather than to make general social provision for the protection of vulnerable people in their homes, to meet the majority of charges for general support services in supported accommodation. We hope to legislate as soon as possible.

These measures will apply to current and future tenants of existing supported housing. They will last until we develop and implement a coherent and rational long-term funding arrangement for supported housing.

Appeal Tribunals

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what estimate she has made of the savings from presenting officers no longer attending tribunals; [12100]

(2) what steps she is taking to ensure the continued independence of the tribunal system following the alterations regarding the attendance of presenting officers. [12101]

Mr. Keith Bradley: It is our policy that presenting officers should attend oral hearings of tribunals. The non-attendance of presenting officers in the Huddersfield area is being investigated and I will write to my hon. Friend in due course.

Claims (Backdating)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what estimate she has made of the cost effect of removing the discretion of adjudication officers with regard to the backdating of claims; [12078]

(2) what steps her Department is taking to ensure that genuine claimants are not penalised by the removal of discretion for adjudication officers with regard to backdated claims. [12077]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The changes to the backdating rules in April removed the administratively onerous good cause provision and replaced it with special reasons set out in regulations. These special reasons apply to income related benefits which are meant to meet immediate needs. It is, therefore, reasonable to limit the range of situations which count as a special reason for a late claim and it underlines the importance of claimants making their claims promptly.

Claims for non-income related benefits, such as retirement pension and child benefit, can receive backdating automatically without the need to show that there was a special reason for the delay.

We are committed to modernising and streamlining the structure and delivery of social security to make the system simpler for the public to understand and more straightforward for staff to administer. These changes went some way to simplify the complex rules for backdating benefits.

Disability Appeals Tribunals

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to her answer of 24 July, Official Report, column 747, in what proportion of appeals to (a) social security and (b) disability appeal tribunals an oral hearing is requested by (i) an adjudication officer and (ii) either of the parties; in each case how many (A) oral hearings (1) in the presence of the appellant or a representative and (2) in absence and (B) paper hearings took place in each month since 1 April; what were the success rates for appeals in each of these categories; and if she will place in the Library a report on the effects of the changes to the appeals system introduced on 21 October 1996. [12087]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Evaluation of the changes introduced to the appeal system on 21 October 1996 is underway. When the evaluation is complete, a report will be placed in the Library. Detailed assessments, such as the data requested, will not be available for some months. However, on investigation of the availability of this data, it has come to light that the information provided in my answer of 24 July may be incorrect, for which I apologise. I will write to the hon. Member with clarification in due course.

Mortgage Interest Benefit

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what assessment she has made of the effect on payments of mortgage interest benefit under income support arrangements of the lack of flexibility available to the Benefits Agency to match the payment cycles of lenders; [11990]

(2) what plans she has to permit flexibility in the payment of mortgage interest benefit in respect of lenders who do not follow a four week payment cycle. [11991]

Mr. Keith Bradley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 28 July, Official Report, column 19.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidance has been given to doctors employed by the Benefits Agency to determine whether claimants are entitled to continue receiving incapacity benefit. [11982]

Mr. Denham: The administration of the Benefits Agency medical services is a matter for Peter Mathison the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Bob Blizzard, dated 31 July 1997:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent parliamentary question asking what guidance has been given to doctors employed by the Benefits Agency to determine whether claimants are entitled to continue receiving incapacity Benefit (IB).

It may be helpful if I first explain that doctors employed by the Benefits Agency do not determine entitlement to IB. Entitlement to IB is decided by Adjudication Officers (AOs) who consider all the evidence available, including reports from medical examinations.

Doctors who conduct examinations in connection with IB are required to undergo a four day modular training course which can be tailored to meet individual needs. Elements of the course include the technical aspects of IB, the requirements for the content of the medical report form, selecting and justifying the choice of descriptors which specify the level of a customer's disability in each functional area, and mental health problems. The course includes elements of training on customer services and equal opportunities.

Following initial training, the first three assessments carried out by the Benefits Agency Medical Services (BAMS) doctor are monitored, and each must reach a satisfactory standard for the doctor to be approved to carry out future IB assessments. The work of all doctors is monitored subsequently by BAMS. This takes the form of random or targeted studies of completed reports, and is also carried out in response to any work returned by Adjudication Officers which is considered to be of an unsatisfactory standard. There is an ongoing training programme which ensures that doctors are kept informed of any developments in this areas of work.

In addition, all full time BAMS doctors have to undergo a two day residential course covering the clinical areas they are likely to encounter, such as back pain and psychiatric disorders, as well as those likely to cause particular difficulties, such as chronic fatigue states. Many of the sessions in these courses are conducted by internationally recognised experts in their fields.

In addition to the training, all doctors are issued with a copy of the "IB Handbook for Medical Services Doctors", which acts as an aide memoir. A copy of this publication is available in the Library of the House of Commons.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Poverty

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what role she plans for mutual, voluntary and co-operative organisations in her anti-poverty strategy; and if she will make a statement. [12220]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Our objective is to improve the living standards of the many, not just the few, and to provide educational and employment opportunities for all. The best way to tackle poverty is to help people into real jobs, and we have recently announced our new deal to move people into employment. We welcome any contributions made by mutual, voluntary and co-operative organisations towards achieving this aim. For example, we are working with Gingerbread and the National Council of One Parent Families on the new deal for lone parents, and we meet regularly with organisations such as Child Poverty Action Group and the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux.

Benefits Offices, Wales

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on the future of benefits offices in Wales. [11992]

Mr. Keith Bradley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Vale of Clwyd (Mr. Ruane) on 24 July 1997, Official Report, columns 748–49.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidelines have been issued concerning the assessment of claims for the jobseeker's allowance; what further guidelines she plans to publish; and if she will make a statement. [11918]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The chief adjudication officer, who has statutory responsibility for issuing guidance to adjudication officers, has revised the adjudication officers' guide to include guidance on the assessment of claims to jobseeker's allowance. The AOG is readily available to members of the public at social security offices and most major public libraries, and is regularly updated to reflect changes in legislation and decisions made by the social security commissioners.

The Government believe that work is the best form of welfare for people of working age. Our welfare-to-work objectives are to provide work incentives, to reduce poverty and welfare dependency and to strike a new balance between responsibilities and rights. A programme of monitoring and evaluation is under way to enable us to ensure that jobseeker's allowance contributes to achieving our objectives.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what plans she has to change the appeal and tribunal process relating to claims made for the jobseeker's allowance; and if she will make a statement; [11916]

(2) how many appeals have been made against decisions to (a) withdraw and (b) deny receipt of the jobseeker's allowance; how many hearings have been heard under the appeal system; how much notice is given of the date of a hearing; and if she will make a statement. [11904]

Mr. Bradley: On 9 July, we introduced the Social Security Bill which will modernise the delivery of social security. The Bill contains measures to provide a more streamlined, efficient and faster appeals system for social security benefits including jobseeker's allowance. We shall be setting and publishing demanding targets and reporting on the results.

The information regarding jobseeker's allowance appeals is not available in the format requested. The available information is as follows.

At the end of June, the independent tribunal service had received 24,802 appeals involving jobseeker's allowance. A total of 8,620 appeals have been cleared; 3,884 at hearings. Regulations require the ITS to provide a minimum of seven days notice of the date of a hearing. The ITS routinely provides more notice than this, however, and in many areas is currently giving three to four weeks' advance notification.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what funding is presently committed from her departmental budget for (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000 to resolve the year 2000 computer problem; and if she will make a statement. [11896]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Funding for the cost of preventive and remedial action on year 2000 in this Department is being met from existing budgets by making economies and by reprioritising existing work programmes. The initial broad estimate of the total cost is £30 million. Work is well advanced to refine this estimate and detailed and costed action plans will be available by the end of October 1997.

National Benefit Inquiry Line

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to restore the free phone national benefit inquiry line; and what assessment she has made of the impact of the withdrawal of the free phone national benefit inquiry line on the take-up of income-related benefits. [11112]

Mr. Keith Bradley [holding answer 29 July 1997]: We will streamline services to provide better, simpler more efficient services to claimants and other customers. There are no plans to restore the Benefits Agency freeline service. Queries on operational matters are for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Paul Burstow, dated 31 July 1997:

> The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question concerning the Benefits Agency Freeline service.
> There are no plans to restore the Benefits Agency Freeline. Advice and information about benefit entitlement is available through the Agency's network of local benefit offices. Benefit literature is readily available in local offices, post offices and numerous other outlets.
> As part of the changes required to deliver a modern service to the public we will look again at the availability of freephone and local rate telephone services.

Advice and information on benefits for the disabled, their representatives and carers is available from the Benefit Enquiry Line. The freephone number is 0800 882200.

There was no monitoring of the take up of income related benefits when the Freeline was open and there is no evidence to suggest that the closure of the service has had any material impact on the take up of these benefits.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Outsourcing Projects

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the outcome of her review of the outsourcing projects initiated by the previous Government. [12323]

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what criteria she has adopted in her considerations of transferring the ownership and management of her Department's property estate to the private sector. [11880]

(2) what assessment she has made of the employment implications of transferring the ownership and management of the Department's property estate to the private sector; [11926]

(3) what plans she has for transfer of the ownership and management of her Department's property estate to the private sector; and if she will make a statement. [11877]

Ms Harman: I can today announce how we intend to proceed on a number of projects designed to involve the private sector in the delivery of social security. The decisions we have taken on these projects, which were inherited from the previous Administration, are in support of our commitment to modernise the delivery of social security to make it simpler, better and more efficient.

The manifesto made it clear that:

this would be a government of ideas and ideals but not of outdated ideology, what counts is what works;

it would reject the dogmatic view that services must be privatised to be of high quality, but equally we see no reason why a service should be delivered directly if more efficient means are available;

We have reviewed the projects inherited against:

our objectives for modernising the social security system;

our commitment to work within the announced spending totals for the first two years of Government;

our aim of getting best value for public money and of reducing the burden on taxpayers; the scope to apply private sector expertise, discipline and economies of scale in procuring public services and the ability to secure increased investment from the private sector;

the need for continuing flexibility for government to make future changes to services;

the opportunities for improving the quality of service for customers; and the implications for staff.

We believe that there has been evidence in past privatisation of:

Cost cutting at the expense of concern for quality. In support of our clear commitment to a quality social security service we will establish a minimum quality of service threshold against which we will assess all bids from the private sector. If a supplier fails to reach this threshold, we will not expect to award them a contract no matter how low their price;

Insufficient priority to managing conformance to quality of service standards during the contract period. We will tackle this by strengthening the contract monitoring regime to include a stronger assessment of suppliers' performance on service quality. We will also require greater evaluation and feedback on performance against the new quality standards;

Insufficient attention to the concerns of staff. We have made clear our commitment to take account of the needs of staff in considering the involvement of the private sector. We will therefore place greater emphasis on management of people when evaluating contracts; we will carefully evaluate suppliers' management of past staff transfers; and we will issue new guidance to potential and current suppliers, making clear what we believe to be good employment practice;

The conclusions we have reached on the individual projects are as follows:

Estates and accommodation services (PRIME)

We propose to proceed with PRIME—private sector resource initiative for management of the estate—which will transfer the ownership and management of the DSS estate to the private sector. The project will bring specialist private sector expertise to the management of the estate, delivering reduced operating costs, increased flexibility to respond to the changing patterns of service delivery, and scope for additional investment in property improvements. The property transfer will enable us to secure full value for the large DSS estate and to share in gains from further property development, while retaining departmental control on the location of outlets.

As well as the PRIME project, we also propose to explore whether further private sector involvement could improve the delivery of associated office support services, mainly in the Benefits Agency. High-quality service to customers requires effective support to staff in services such as typing and reprographics. These services are currently delivered through a patchwork of public and private sector teams as a result of previous market tests. The current approach does not guarantee quality or efficiency and has not been flexible to changes in service delivery. The PRIME contract requires some reorganisation of office service arrangements and provides an opportunity to reorganise on more efficient lines. We now propose to start the process of testing what the in-house teams could do, under a more effective contracts regime, and what the private sector could offer. Before taking final decisions, we will ensure that any transfer to the private sector meets our new strengthened criteria on quality of service, evaluation of performance and concern for the staff issues.

Child benefit centre (PROSPECT)

PROSPECT was established by the previous Government to outsource child benefit and guardian allowance operations in Washington. The previous Government's proposals were driven by dogma and we will not proceed with them. We wish instead to see a proper examination of options other than full scale outsourcing.

There is a need to improve the quality of service at the child benefit centre, and we have asked officials to prepare an alternative approach based on our principles for a modern service. Options for involving the private sector will be considered in this context.

Benefits agency medical services

The IMPACT 97 project was established to transfer the delivery of Benefits Agency medical services—BAMS—to the private sector. The bulk of doctors who provide the medical advice and conduct medical examinations in support of benefit claims are independent contractors, not employed by the Department. The future of BAMS has been under discussion for several years now; the majority of non-medical support staff involved have chosen to transfer to an external company if the project goes ahead, and staff want an end to the uncertainty. There have also been extensive negotiations with contractors who are aware that a final announcement is imminent.

We have decided to proceed with this project, involving the private sector to bring enhanced management expertise to BAMS, with investment in new technology, delivering reduced running costs and service improvements. As a result of the outsourcing, we expect to see an improved quality of service to customers, covering areas such as the arrangements for making appointments for examinations, the process for delivering medical advice on benefit claims and the quality of the accommodation in medical examination centres.

We will now proceed to invite final bids from the contractors shortlisted. The final decision on award of contracts will feature further qualitative evaluation of potential suppliers' management capability for provision of the service and an evaluation of the arrangements for the transfer of staff affected.

BA area director partnerships (ADAPT)

The ADAPT project was established to deliver a two-phase approach to involvement of the private sector. The first phase entails a period of partnership between three private sector consortia and three BA area directorates which will explore, without payment from the taxpayer, whether external input can help our objectives to modernise the delivery of social security. The approach fits well with this Government's approach to public–private partnerships. It enables us to bring in external expertise to identify new ways of working and to test what the partners have to offer without commitment to any particular outcome. We have decided that the project should continue and the three partners will be announced shortly. If the first phase produces effective proposals for improving service delivery, we may proceed to a second stage and award contracts for delivery of services.

Contributions Agency competitive benchmarking

In addition to the series of outsourcing projects, we have also reviewed the project within the Contributions Agency to benchmark services against the private sector. The CA benchmarking programme assesses the scope to apply private sector expertise, discipline and economies of scale in procuring public services. The ongoing programme has so far tested the quality and scope for improvement of three areas of the Contributions Agency operations—international services, deferment of national insurance contributions, and insolvency services.

This benchmarking programme meets our criteria, adopting a non-dogmatic approach of judging things by what works; avoiding a single presumption that the private or the public sector is always the solution and assessing the best way forward against the scope for improvement by existing staff.

We have decided that Contributions Agency staff should continue to manage international services and deferment, bringing in improvements in service through in-house efficiency measures. On insolvency services, which handle national insurance debts of insolvent companies and bankrupt individuals, we have concluded that we should begin the testing of offers from external suppliers, applying our strengthened principles for involvement of the private sector. The early indications from the benchmarking programme confirm that there may be gains to be made from testing our service against the best in the private sector. We have decided that the competitive benchmarking process in the Contributions Agency should continue, extending to other areas of service.

Stand-alone support IT applications (SASA)

The Department has a major programme of IT change and we have decided that it should concentrate its expertise on the development and maintenance of key strategic mainframe systems. The development and management of stand-alone systems will be more effectively supported in the private sector, which has greater expertise in this area and will be able to deliver a better quality service at reduced costs. We have therefore decided to proceed with the transfer to the private sector of the development, support and maintenance of the Department's non-strategic, stand-alone, business support computer systems—SASA. The contract will cover around 740 systems ranging from those on a single PC to networked applications running up to 200 PCs, using a diverse range of software packages.

Conclusion

These decisions on the involvement of the private sector will help to deliver a modernised social security service. Where our modernisation strategy entails involvement of the private sector in the future, we will apply the criteria we have set out for the review of outsourcing, asking of every project, "Does it work? Is it fair—to customers, taxpayers and staff?".

A separate announcement will be made in respect of services in Northern Ireland. Further details on the individual projects will be announced in the very near future.

Benefit Review

Kali Mountford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she will publish the results of the recent benefit review of income support; and if she will make a statement. [12472]

Mr. Denham: This Government take fraud against our social security system very seriously and are determined to reduce the level of fraud and abuse. Fraud is anti-social behaviour; assisting in the fight against fraud is an expression of responsible citizenship.

We have inherited a significant problem and this research underlines the need to review and evaluate existing measures. Work is in hand to re-examine the strategic objectives governing counter-fraud work throughout the Department. This will ensure that there is coherence between counter-fraud objectives and other policy and operational strategic objectives, in particular those aimed at controlling loss of programme expenditure.

All plans for the future will be based on making sure that the social security system is based on honesty, fairness and responsibility. We will also move towards a more systematic process of assessing risks to ensure that resources are targeted for maximum effect.

The level of fraud and abuse represents a serious problem which we are determined to consider carefully and respond to fully.

In order to establish the size of the problem on an ongoing basis the Benefits Agency is undertaking a five-year programme of reviews. This programme covers all the major social security benefits to measure in a statistically valid way the level of incorrectness, including fraud within the benefit stream.

A review of income support was carried out through visits and interviews with a random sample of 4,350 customers in autumn 1996 when a review of their benefit entitlement was completed.

The results of this review show that the majority of customers—79 per cent.—are entitled to the benefit at the rate they are receiving.

However, fraud or a high suspicion of fraud was found in just over 11 per cent. of cases representing estimated annual potential expenditure losses of £1.77 billion on income support.

We will be hosting a fraud seminar in September. This will involve high-level representatives from both inside and outside of Government. Private sector expertise will be brought alongside those already involved to exchange and develop ideas and experience to ensure that we are tackling the problem in the most effective manner.

Domestic Fuel (VAT)

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate she has made of the impact on the uprating of the basic state weekly pension for (a) single person and (b) a couple of a 3 per cent. change in the value added tax rate on domestic fuel. [11789]

Mr. Denham: The change in the VAT rate on domestic fuel will have no impact on the real value of the basic state pension.

We are committed to uprating the basic state pension at least in line with prices and will consider the uprating of benefits at the normal time and in the normal way.

All pensioners will benefit from the reduction in their fuel bills following the reduction in the VAT rate on domestic fuel from 8 to 5 per cent.

Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to exempt claimants of the industrial injuries disablement benefit from her proposed restrictions on backdating; and what procedures will be introduced to protect disabled people whose conditions are not immediately diagnosed. [11583]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Clause 70 of the Social Security Bill provides for the alignment of the time limits for the backdating of claims to benefit with the one month currently allowed for reviews. This provision is an integral part of modernising and streamlining the social security system. It will make the system easier to operate and simpler for people to understand. It will also underline the importance of people making their claims promptly.

The Social Security Bill also provides for regulations to prescribe exceptions to the one-month time limit. We are currently giving careful consideration to what, if any, circumstances there might be in which exceptions ought to apply.

People who qualify for industrial injuries benefits already receive a substantial preference in that their benefits are non-contributory and tax-free and are payable on top of any mainstream incapacity and disablement benefits to which they may also be entitled.

SCOTLAND

Feudal System

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made by the Scottish Law Commission in its review of the feudal system. [12474]

Mr. Dewar: The Government gave a manifesto commitment to initiate a study into land ownership and management in Scotland, including the options for removing the rights of feudal superiors.

The feudal system is anachronistic and makes conveyancing more expensive than it need be. It also allows unscrupulous superiors to charge excessive amounts for granting consent to alterations or changes of use of property.

I am therefore delighted that the Scottish Law Commission will be able to submit a report on the abolition of feudal tenure, with draft legislation in 1998—one year earlier than expected. At the same time, the commission will issue a discussion paper on related questions of real burdens. It will report on those questions by the end of 1999.

The effect of the two reports will be to sweep away superiorities, replace the feudal system with a system based on absolute ownership, and reform the law on real burdens.

The Government are committed to the introduction of legislation to abolish the feudal system as soon as we can after the commission reports. It may be necessary to carry out further consultations following publication of the reports, but I very much hope that the legislation will be one of the first reforms to be enacted by the Scottish Parliament. It would be most fitting if Scotland entered the new millennium not only with a new Parliament but with a completely modernised system of land tenure.

Hunting

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will announce which officials will conduct the review of hunting on Forestry Commission land. [7916]

Mr. Chisholm: The review of hunting on Forestry Commission land is an internal review which is being carried out by the Forestry commissioners and commission officials as a normal part of their duties.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) for what reason a review of hunting on Forestry Commission land has been commenced; and when it will be conducted; [8837]

(2) who will be invited to give evidence to the Forestry Commissions review of hunting on Forestry Commission land; [8835]

(3) which officials will be involved in the review of hunting on Forestry Commission land; [8838]

(4) when he expects to publish the results of the review of hunting on Forestry Commission land; [8834]

(5) how much he estimates the review of hunting on Forestry Commission land will cost the Forestry Commission. [8836]

Mr. Chisholm [holding answer 22 July 1997]: Against the background of our manifesto commitment to allow a free vote on hunting, we have asked the Forestry commissioners to review their policy for hunting over commission land, and to advise us of their conclusions. This is an internal review which will not be published, but which will take full account of representations received. The review is being carried out by the Forestry commissioners and commission officials as a normal part of their duties and will not be costed separately. The commissioners aim to complete their review later this summer.

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what factors led him to carry out a review of hunting on Forestry Commission land; [10281]

(2) which officials will carry out a review of hunting on Forestry Commission land; [10282]

(3) who will give evidence to the review of hunting on Forestry Commission land. [10284]

Mr. Chisholm: Against the background of our manifesto commitment to allow a free vote on hunting, we have asked the forestry commissioners to review their policy for hunting over commission land, and to advise us of their conclusions. This internal review is being carried out by the forestry commissioners and commission officials and will take full account of representations received.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much he has budgeted for expenditure on refurbishing (a) official residences occupied by Scottish Office Ministers and (b) Scottish Office properties. [7745]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 14 July 1997]: Under current public expenditure plans, total provision for refurbishment work over the next three years is as follows:

(a) Bute house, which provides occasional accommodation for Ministers—£35,000. This budget is for replacing some of the furniture originally provided on loan by the National Trust for Scotland as these pieces will be recalled by the original owners later this year.

(b) Scottish Office properties—£6,515,300. The figure excludes the operational assets of the Scottish Prison Service, the Scottish Court Service and Historic Scotland. Most of the expenditure in fact relates to the refurbishment of St. Andrew's House—£6 million.

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the answer of 16 July, Official Report, column 220, if he will itemise the same expenditure plans including all changes announced since the publication of "Serving Scotland's Needs", including the itemised figures for each year from 1994–95 to 1999–2000 in cash and real terms at 1996–97 prices using the gross domestic product deflator; if he will set out the cumulative spending planned from 1997–98 to 1999–2000 under each item in real terms and the total cumulative spending, assuming that spending is maintained at 1996–97 real-term levels; and if he will indicate the difference between the two cumulative totals. [10271]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 25 July 1997]: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the House Library.

Government Expenditure and Revenue

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the date for publication of the new edition of "Government Expenditure and Revenue in Scotland". [7744]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 14 July 1997]: "Government Expenditure and Revenue in Scotland, 1995–96" will be published in the first half of November 1997.

Council House Repairs

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what sum has been spent by each local authority and its predecessor authorities on repairs and improvements to council houses in each of the last five years (a) in total and (b) per 100 homes managed by the council. [9610]

Mr. Chisholm: I shall write to the hon. Member and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the House Library.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost of the Scottish Office operation at Dover house in each of the last three years. [10172]

Mr. Dewar: The cost of the Scottish Office operation at Dover house in each of the last three years was £1,925,000, £1,745,000 and £1,740,000 in 1994–95, 1995–96 and 1996–97 respectively. These figures do not include the costs of Ministers or of staff who are based in Edinburgh but who travel to Dover house for part of the working week while Parliament is in session.

Literacy and Numeracy

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, (1) pursuant to his answer of 17 July, what data his Department holds on numeracy levels among 16 to 24-year-olds in Scotland; [10128]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 16 July, Official Report, column 220, what data his Department currently holds concerning literacy levels among 16 to 24-year-olds in Scotland. [10129]

Mr. Wilson: I shall write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the House Library.

Dance and Music Tuition

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with representatives of (a) Scottish local authorities, (b) Scottish parents and (c) Scottish teachers concerning the resources available for (i) dance and (ii) music tuition. [10374]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 28 July 1997]: My right hon. Friend has recently met representatives of the Friends of the Dance School of Scotland, at Knightswood secondary school, to discuss funding concerns. My right hon. Friend is still considering this issue.

Woodlands

Mr. Grieve: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much new woodland has been planted with Government incentives in each year since 1979. [10984]

Mr. Chisholm [holding answer 28 July 1997]: The area of new woodland planted in Great Britain with Government incentives since 1979 is set out in the table.

1980	8,302
1981	8,400
1982	12,462
1983	12,511
1984	16,673
1985	16,029
1986	19,019
1987	19,147
1988	23,821
1989	25,108
1990	15,406
1991	15,436
1992	14,147
1993	15,295
1994	15,897
1995	18,128
1996	14,975
1997	15,971

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what targets he plans to set in respect of the increase in the proportion of woodland areas in (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) Scotland by 2010. [11147]

Mr. Chisholm: Although we are committed to increasing the area of woodland in Britain, we have not set any specific targets.

Computer-related Expenditure

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of total departmental expenditure on computer-related current and capital work for (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98, (d) 1998–99 and (e) 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [11386]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 29 July 1997]: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the House Library.

A1

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the impact of daily return lorry journeys arising from the transport of rubbish from Edinburgh to Oxwellmains on traffic flows on the A1 road at Pencraig Hill. [11061]

Mr. Chisholm [holding answer 30 July 1997]: The road layout at Pencraig Hill can accommodate the anticipated additional 60 heavy goods vehicle movements per day which are forecast to be generated by the movement of land waste by road from Edinburgh to the new landfill site at Oxwellmains. These additional movements are not considered to have a significant impact on the A1.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will withdraw the consent for the transport of rubbish from Edinburgh to the new landfill site at Oxwellmains until the A1 road has been dualled between Haddington and Dunbar. [11062]

Mr. Chisholm [holding answer 30 July 1997]: Planning consent for the landfill site and conditions attached to that consent are a matter for East Lothian council.

Arable Area Payments

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many payments were made under the arable area payments scheme in 1996 at (a) £0 to £1,000, (b) £1,000 to £2,000, (c) £2,000 to £3,000, (d) £3,000 to £5,000, (e) £5,000 to £10,000, (f) £10,000 to £20,000, (g) £20,000 to £40,000, (h) £40,000 to £70,000; (i) £70,000 to £100,000, (j) £100,000 to £200,000, (k) £200,000 to £300,000 and (1) over £300,000. [11317]

Mr. Chisholm [holding answer 30 July 1997]: The information relating to payments made to farmers in Scotland under the 1996 arable area payments scheme is set out in the table:

	Number
(a) £0–£1,000	952
(b) £1,000–£2,000	968
(c) £2,000–£3,000	798
(d) £3,000–£5,000	2,016
(e) £5,000–£10,000	846
(f) £10,000–£20,000	1,523
(g) £20,000–£40,000	1,369
(h) £40,000–£70,000	653
(i) £70,000–£100,000	187
(j) £100,000–£200,000	124
(k) £200,000–£300,000	8
(l) over £300,000	3

Waste Minimisation

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on existing targets set to minimise waste within his Department. [11554]

Mr. Chisholm: The Scottish Office proposes to set waste minimisation targets throughout the Department once the necessary supporting information is collated and analysed. This action is in hand.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the amount, and proportion, of paper recycled by his Department in each of the last five years. [11555]

Mr. Chisholm: I shall write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the House Library.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to introduce a waste minimisation strategy for his Department. [11553]

Mr. Chisholm: The Scottish Office has recently developed a waste minimisation strategy for its main building at Victoria quay, Edinburgh, as part of an environmental management system. It is planned to introduce similar strategies through existing management structures in all other principal Scottish Office buildings.

Further Education

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what plans he has to establish a further education funding council; and if he will make a statement; [11213]

(2) if non-certificated courses will continue to be available in further education; and if he will make a statement; [11214]

(3) what plans he has to encourage the use of (a) private public partnership, (b) private finance initiative and (c) derivatives in meeting the capital needs of further education; and how his Department intends to support such initiatives; [11215]

(4) if he will make a statement on his strategy for further education in Scotland. [11216]

Mr. Wilson: I shall write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the House Library.

Local Government Elections

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will consider postponing the third statutory review of local government electoral arrangements; and if he will make a statement. [11217]

Mr. Chisholm: Parliament has required the Local Government Boundary Commission for Scotland to review the electoral arrangements for all local government areas as soon as practicable after 1 April 1996. The Secretary of State has no power to postpone that review. The Secretary of State will, however, be giving very careful consideration to the proposals which the Local Government Boundary Commission make as a result of that review.

Keelylang Site of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how long negotiations have been continuing between Scottish Natural Heritage and the owner of the land covering the Keelylang site of special scientific interest, Orkney, regarding the conclusion of a management agreement in respect of the site of special scientific interest. [11842]

Mr. Chisholm: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the House Library.

Scottish Parliament

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how he will ensure that legislation passed by the Scottish Parliament is compatible with European Union or other international obligations of the UK. [11808]

Mr. McLeish: The Government's proposals are set out in paragraphs 4.18–4.21 of "Scotland's Parliament"—Cm 3658—in respect of international obligations and in paragraph 5.8 in respect of European Union obligations.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the distinction between the specification of (a) devolved and (b) reserved powers for the Scottish Parliament. [11810]

Mr. McLeish: In order to ensure maximum clarity and stability, the Government have proposed that the legislation establishing the Scottish Parliament should list the matters to be reserved to the UK Parliament rather than specify devolved matters.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Ponsonby rule will be applied in the Scottish Parliament. [11807]

Mr. McLeish: The Ponsonby rule applies to the ratification of international treaties. Since under the Government's proposals international relations would be reserved to Westminster, the Ponsonby rule would not apply to the business of the Scottish Parliament.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make a statement on the role of the Lord Advocate in respect of advice given to (a) the Scottish Parliament and (b) the United Kingdom Parliament; [11798]

(2) if he will make a statement on the nature of the Lord Advocate's accountability to the Westminster Parliament following the introduction of a Scottish Parliament; [11799]

(3) if he will make a statement on the role and responsibilities of the Lord Advocate in respect of (a) law reform issues, (b) the Scottish prosecution service, (c) the administration of Scottish criminal matters in England and (d) the appointment of judges following the introduction of a Scottish Assembly. [11800]

Mr. McLeish: I shall write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the House Library.

EU Birds Directive

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he proposes to designate new special protection areas, declared under the EU birds directive, to protect (a) the hen harrier, (b) the golden plover and (c) the corncrake; and what percentage of the United Kingdom breeding population of each of these species is currently protected by special protection areas in Scotland. [11924]

Mr. Chisholm: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the House Library.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what funding is presently committed from his departmental budget for (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000 to resolve the year 2000 computer problem; and if he will make a statement. [11891]

Mr. Donald Dewar: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson) on 10 July, Official Report, column 546.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what are the actual or estimated totals for Scottish Natural Heritage's expenditure on the operation of the sites of special scientific interest system in Scotland in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98 and (d) 1998–99; and what proportion of Scottish Natural Heritage's total expenditure these sums represent; [11843]

(2) what are the actual or estimated totals for Scottish Natural Heritage's expenditure in relation to the designation and protection of sites notified under the birds directive and habitats and species directive in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98 and (d) 1998–99; and what proportion of Scottish Natural Heritage's total expenditure these sums represent; [11844]

(3) what was the actual or estimated expenditure by Scottish Natural Heritage on its statutorily required nature conservation functions in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98 and (d) 1998–99. [11923]

Mr. Chisholm: My noble Friend the Minister for Agriculture, the Environment and Fisheries will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussion his Department has had with Scottish Natural Heritage regarding the negotiation of a management agreement in respect of the Keelylang site of special scientific interest in Orkney; and if he will make a statement. [11841]

Mr. Chisholm: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the House Library.

European Issues

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what mechanism will be used to ensure agreement between United Kingdom and Scottish Executive departments in reaching a common negotiating position on European issues. [11809]

Mr. McLeish: The Government's proposals on the subject are set out in paragraphs 5.4 to 5.6 of the White Paper, "Scotland's Parliament", Cm3658.

Local Agenda 21

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to support Scottish local authority initiatives in respect of local agenda 21; and if he will make a statement. [11845]

Mr. Chisholm: Local agenda 21 is primarily a matter for local authorities to advance. The Scottish Office provides financial support to the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities to co-ordinate a strategic approach by Scottish local authorities to local agenda 21. My noble Friend the Minister for Agriculture, Environment and Fisheries in Scotland is meeting COSLA on 3 September to discuss the role of authorities in the promotion of sustainable development. Later this year, he plans to convene a conference on local agenda 21 for councillors and senior local authority staff.

Animal Exports

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what actions his Department is taking to proceed with (a) the export certified herds scheme and (b) the date-based scheme. [12200]

Mr. Malcolm Chisholm: The Government are pursuing both schemes with the EU Commission with equal vigour. Further clarification is to be provided on the date-based scheme. In line with the Florence agreement, the Commission will be putting both schemes to their scientific advisory committees.

Devolution (Interpretation)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will produce a video version of his proposals for Scottish devolution carrying subtitles and sign language interpretation; [12003]

(2) if he will ensure that all publicly broadcast information in relation to the forthcoming referendum in Scotland carries subtitles and sign language interpretation. [12000]

Mr. McLeish: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the House Library.

Mr. Brendan Callaghan

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress is being made with the review of the case of Mr. Brendan Callaghan; and if he will make a statement. [12102]

Mr. McLeish: We are presently conducting a detailed examination of the papers submitted on behalf of Mr. Callaghan and of other material that has been obtained in order to establish what issues require further investigation before a decision can be reached on his petition. Depending on the results of that examination, the Crown Office will be requested to conduct detailed investigation of the matter at issue.

Planning Applications

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will extend the time allowed for community councils and other community organisations to comment on the proposed changes in the procedures to notify neighbours of planning applications. [12086]

Mr. Chisholm: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the House Library.

Business Start-up Scheme

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many unemployed people have qualified for assistance under the business start-up scheme in each of the last five years; and what was the annual expenditure. [12170]

Mr. Wilson: I shall write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the House Library.

HEALTH

Nursing Homes (Negligence)

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provisions apply to enable individuals to pursue complaints of negligence against private sector nursing homes; and if he will make a statement. [7702]

Mr. Boateng: Any complaint about a nursing home, including complaints about the competence or negligence of nursing home staff, should be referred to and investigated by the local health authority in its capacity as registering authority of nursing homes under the Registered Homes Act 1984. The health authority will then decide what action to take.

Professions Supplementary to Medicine Act

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to seek to update the Professions Supplementary to Medicine Act 1960 in order to (a) protect consumers and (b) protect clinical titles; and if he will make a statement. [8739]

Mr. Milburn: The Government are committed to bringing forward, for consultation, proposals for legislation to replace the Professions Supplementary to Medicine Act 1960. A Bill advisory group is advising the United Kingdom Health Departments on the preparation of instructions on a draft Bill, which will be subject to a wide-ranging consultation process to enable all the issues to be debated.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many and what percentage of employees, in each payband, in the quangos for which his Department is responsible, are of (a) Asian origin and (b) Afro-Caribbean origin. [8953]

Ms Jowell: The information for all those public bodies which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has responsibility—NHS bodies[1]—health authorities, NHS trusts, special health authorities, executive and advisory[2] non-departmental public bodies and tribunals—has been placed in the Library.

[1] None of the Advisory NDPBs and tribunals which the Department of Health sponsors employ staff.

[2] Information on NHS bodies also includes two directly managed units—Northfield Services for Pld and Manchester College of Midwifery—whose staff are employed by Health Authorities and two organisations which employ NHS staff, information management centre and FHS computer unit.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce a mandatory requirement on all NHS bodies to undertake regular ethnic minority returns of staff. [11281]

Mr. Milburn: National health service employers are already required to return ethnic origin information about their employees to the NHS Executive as part of the Department of Health's annual medical and dental and non-medical work force censuses.

Dental Services

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the availability of national health service dentistry in the Vale of Evesham. [9193]

Mr. Milburn: There are problems with availability of national health service dentistry in the Vale of Evesham. It is the responsibility of health authorities to oversee the provision of NHS dental services in their locality. At the request of Worcestershire health authority, the Secretary of State authorised on 18 July a specific arrangement in Evesham designed to improve the availability of these services. The health authority is also seeking to employ a salaried dentist in Pershore and Kidderminister.

Preston General Hospital

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children from Chorley and South Ribble district were treated at Preston general hospital in the last year for which figures are available. [9856]

Mr. Milburn: The current basic unit for measuring hospital activity is the finished consultant episode. FCEs are not the same as the number of patients treated because a hospital spell can consist of more than one FCE, and patients discharged too early who are subsequently readmitted as emergencies count as another FCE. Furthermore, an FCE count cannot by itself serve as a valid measure of productivity since it is not standardised over time for any changes in the quality of treatment.

In 1993–94, the last year of the Chorley and South Ribble DHA, there were 5,667 such episodes for children aged up to 16 recorded for the acute unit of the former Preston health authority. The total for people of all ages was 28,236.

The former Chorley and South Ribble and West Lancashire district health authorities merged in 1994.

The most recent figures are for 1994–95, when 5,854 episodes for children aged up to 16 from the South Lancashire health authority area were recorded for Preston Acute Hospitals NHS Trust. The total for people of all ages was 28,535.

Chemical Support Services

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the oral statement of the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn), of 14 July, Official Report, column 81, what grades of NHS staff are included under the definition of clinical support services. [9691]

Mr. Milburn: There is no established definition of clinical support services. As part of the review of private finance initiative, officials will be considering what services may be included in PFI projects and are aiming to produce a list of these by the end of the year.

Fluoridation

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for the fluoridation of water supplies; and if he will introduce legislation to require water companies to follow the advice of health authorities on this issue. [9814]

Mr. Milburn: We are currently looking at many aspects of public health policy, including water fluoridation.

Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the causes of fluorosis in children; what links have been identified between fluorosis and the fluoridation of water supplies; and if he will make a statement. [5965]

Mr. Milburn [pursuant to his reply, 2 July 1997, c. 174]: I am now able to provide additional information. The full reply is as follows:

The Department of Health has not itself commissioned any research into causes of fluorosis in children. Extensive research over many decades undertaken independently of the Department has confirmed a link between water fluoridation and dental fluorosis, although at a level of one part per million in temperate climates it is considered to be of negligible importance.

Management Consultants

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are his estimates of the expenditure on all external consultants, including management consultants, for each year since 1992, in 1997 prices, for his Department and its agencies; and what estimate he has made of the quantified annual cost savings achieved by this. [10412]

Ms Jowell: Estimates for expenditure on all external consultants for the Department of Health and its agencies, in 1997 prices, are as follows:

Year	£ million
1992–93	24.194
1993–94	20.468
1994–95	21.926
1995–96	21.132
1996–97[1]	15.789

[1] Information for 1996–97 includes a figure of £2.194 million for NHS Regional Offices which were established in 1996–97.

The Department does not hold information centrally on savings which are a direct consequence of external consultants' activity.

Public Appointments

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many of the individuals appointed by his Department to public positions since 1 May were first identified by the public appointments unit. [10408]

Ms Jowell: The Department of Health has appointed one individual since 1 May 1997. This appointment was as a direct result of using the public appointments unit.

Non-NHS Staff

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many non-NHS staff have been employed by each health authority in each of the last five years. [10416]

Mr. Milburn: I will write to the hon. Member.

Young People (Care)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many young people in local authority care or subject to care orders absconded for more than a week for each local authority in the last three years. [10435]

Mr. Boateng: The figures which are available relate to the number of children looked after by local authorities in England who were recorded as absent from their agreed placement for more than one week. Although this will include children who absconded, it will also include children who were absent for other reasons. Figures for the latest three years available have been placed in the Library. Figures for the year ending 31 March 1996 are not yet available.

Non-urgent Elective Surgery

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average waiting time period specified by each health authority for providers of health services to carry out non-urgent elective surgery in (a) 1996–97 and (b) 1997–98. [10812]

Mr. Milburn: Health authorities contract for maximum, not average, waiting times for elective treatment. In most cases, they do not specify maximum waiting times for non-urgent, as opposed to urgent, elective treatment. Nor do they specify maximum waiting times for surgery as distinct from other in-patient treatment. Contracted maximum waiting times for admission to hospital for 1996–97 and 1997–98 are shown in the table. Where a range of times is shown, this indicates different maximum waiting times for different providers or specialties.

Contraceptive Advice

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans he has to introduce measures to raise the profile of family planning clinics and GP surgeries among older women as a source of contraceptive advice; [11329]

(2) if he will provide figures, by age, of the total numbers and the percentages of the age group of women attending family planning clinics and GP surgeries for contraceptive advice for each year from 1990 to the present. [11327]

Ms Jowell: The Department of Health has published a booklet "Your Health: A Guide to Services for Women". The booklet offers advice and information on a wide range of health issues, including family planning services and contraception. Copies have been placed in the Library.

The contraceptive education service is provided by the Family Planning Association under contract to the Department of Health. The CES aims to raise awareness and understanding among the general public including women of all ages about contraceptive methods and family planning services.

Local health authorities are responsible for providing family planning services that meet the needs of the population they serve. Services should be targeted to meet the needs of particular client groups, especially those among whom the take-up of family planning services is lowest. In meeting local need, commissioners and providers need to ensure that information on the full range of family planning services is readily available.

Information about women attending family planning clinics is contained in the Department's publication "Family Planning Clinic Services, Summary Information for 1995–96, England". Copies have been placed in the Library. Comparable information on women attending GP surgeries is not available.

Prescribed Drugs

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the value of drugs prescribed per general practitioner over the past five years, distinguishing between (a) those who have their own dispensing facilities and (b) those who use an independent pharmacist. [11232]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested is shown in the table.

Net ingredient cost of prescriptions dispensed by (a) dispensing doctors; (b) community pharmacists and appliance contractors; and (c) prescriptions submitted by prescribing doctors for items personally administered, 1992 to 1996.

England

	Net Ingredient cost (£ million)
	1992	1993	1994	1995	1996

Waste Minimisation

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to introduce a waste minimisation strategy for his Department. [11535]

Mr. Boateng: Waste minimisation is already part of this Department's current energy and environment plans for its buildings, with particular emphasis on paper, a major component of waste.

Facilities for the recycling of paper, cans and laser printer cartridges have been provided in the Department's main buildings for a number of years. Recent initiatives include reducing the amount of paper used and widening the range of recycling facilities to other materials.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the amount, and proportion, of paper recycled by his Department in each of the last five years. [11537]

Mr. Boateng: The Department of Health recycled approximately 120,000 kg of waste paper in London for the 1996–97 year.

Paper comes into the Department from many different sources and not all is currently measured. The proportion of paper sent for recycling cannot therefore be calculated.

Data were not collected for previous years.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on existing targets set to minimise waste within his Department. [11536]

Mr. Boateng: While recycling facilities have been available for a number of years in the Department's main buildings, volumes of materials sent for recycling have only been recorded since April 1996. Based on very limited data, an initial target was set to recycle 134,000 kg of waste paper in London during 1996–97, of which an estimated 120,000 kg was achieved.

Office Refurbishment

Mr. Terry Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for the refurbishment of ministerial offices in his Department; and what is the estimated cost of the works and date of completion. [11869]

Mr. Milburn: There are no plans to refurbish ministerial offices in the Department, but, as part of a plan to improve working conditions in Richmond house, comfort cooling is being installed throughout the building including three ministerial rooms at a cost of £17,178. The work is likely to be completed by the end of August.

Ministerial Responsibilities

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 25 July, Official Report, column 798, (1) if he will list all the areas of work currently being undertaken by his Department under each heading, broken down by ministerial responsibilities; [11961]

(2) what issues and areas of work to be undertaken are covered by the subjects listed as ministerial responsibilities in his Department; [11960]

(3) if he will make a statement listing for each Minister the (a) current areas of work, (b) three priority issues that will be dealt with over the next six months in each area and (c) relationship between (a) and (b) and his Department's overall responsibilities, giving such statistical data as are available; [11856]

(4) if he will list for himself and each of his Ministers the issues reflecting his Department's priorities, indicating the timetable by which they will be achieved. [11962]

Mr. Dobson: Later this year, my Department will be publishing White and Green Papers covering various aspects of health policy which will be intended to promote the health of the public and better meet the needs of patients.

Vitamin B6

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those published papers which were considered by the Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment and the Food Advisory Committee prior to their recommending a ban on higher dose vitamin B6 supplements. [11587]

Ms Jowell: Higher doses of vitamin B6 have not been banned. The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food's independent food advisory committee recommended, on the basis of advice from the Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment—COT—that the level of vitamin B6 in dietary supplements sold under food law should be limited to 10 mg per daily dose. In addition, on the basis of the COT's advice, the Medicines Control Agency's Committee on Safety of Medicines reviewed vitamin B6 medicinal products and recommended that those vitamin B6 preparations sold on the general sales list—that is, those freely available to the public—should be limited to 10 mg, while those above 10 mg but below 50 mg should be available under the supervision of a pharmacist. Those of 50 mg and above should be available under the supervision of a doctor as prescription-only medicines.

The Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment has considered the toxicity of vitamin B6 on two occasions. On the second occasion the COT considered submissions from industry and nutritional therapy/alternative medicine groups. Lists of the scientific papers considered by the committee have been lodged in the Library. The COT considered the totality of the literature on vitamin B6 toxicity, more than 100 papers, and its conclusions were passed to the Food Advisory Committee.

Mr. Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of published papers challenging the validity of the conclusions of studies undertaken by K. Dalton and M. J. T. Dalton in relation to vitamin B6 supplementation. [11588]

Ms Jowell: The Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment has considered the toxicity of vitamin B6 on two occasions. The COT's statement, which was published on 4 July 1997, was based on an overall assessment of the scientific literature on this topic, which included papers challenging the conclusions of the paper of Dalton K. and Dalton M. J. T. and also submissions from industry and nutritional therapy-alternative medicine groups. The COT considered the totality of the literature on vitamin B6 toxicity, more than 100 papers, and lists of published papers have been placed in the Library.

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the numbers of women who experience debilitation as a result of pre-menstrual tension; how many such women supplement their diet with higher-dose vitamin B6 supplements; and what research his Department has evaluated on (a) adverse reaction and (b) deaths in such women in the last 10 years. [11913]

Ms Jowell: The Department of Health has no information on either the numbers of women who experience debilitation as a result of pre-menstrual tension or the total number of women supplementing their diet with high-dose vitamin B6 preparations. Figures for prescribed medicines may be obtained, but the number of women using vitamin B6 products without a prescription is unknown.

In the years 1987 to 1996 the United Kingdom yellow card adverse drug reaction reporting scheme administered by the Medicines Control Agency has received a total of 42 reactions associated with products containing only vitamin B6. Of these, for five women the indication for vitamin B6 was pre-menstrual tension, none of whom received more than 100 mg per day. With the exception of one case of congenital malformation, all recovered.

Adverse reaction data from the UK's yellow card adverse drug reaction reporting scheme are provided voluntarily by doctors, dentists and pharmacists and indirectly by pharmaceutical companies. Adverse drug reaction reports relate to suspected adverse reactions associated with medicinal products. We have no information on the use of vitamin B6 as a food supplement. The inclusion of a reaction on the ADR database is not considered evidence that the medicine caused the reaction. Other factors such as the temporal relationship between medicine and reaction, any concomitant medication and the possibility of underlying disease should also be considered.

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he made of the published views of the gynaecology department of St. Thomas's hospital, London, about the effects of vitamin B6 supplementation prior to announcing his ban on such supplements. [11805]

Ms Jowell: Higher doses of vitamin B6 have not been banned. The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food's independent food advisory committee recommended, on the basis of advice from the Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment, that the level of vitamin B6 in dietary supplements sold under food law should be limited to 10 mg per daily dose. In addition, on the basis of the COT's advice, the Medicines Control Agency's committee on safety of medicines reviewed vitamin B6 medicinal products and recommended that those vitamin B6 preparations sold on the General Sales List—GSL; that is, those freely available to the public—should be limited to 10 mg, while those above 10 mg but below 50 mg should be available under the supervision of a pharmacist. Those of 50 mg and above should be available under the supervision of a doctor—prescription-only medicines.

The COT has considered the toxicity of vitamin B6 on two occasions. Before the second occasion, representatives of industry and nutritional therapy/alternative medicine groups were asked to submit information giving evidence of the safety of vitamin B6 for consideration. The published views of staff of the gynaecology department of St. Thomas's hospital were assessed by the COT as part of its review of the toxicity of vitamin B6.

Community Care

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to alter the obligation on local authorities to place 85 per cent. of community care services with private and voluntary sector providers. [12005]

Mr. Boateng: Decisions on the future of the special transitional grant independent sector condition will be made within the context of the Government's overall policies and manifesto commitments.

NHS Estates

Mr. Khabra: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the future of NHS Estates. [12353]

Mr. Milburn: National Health Service Estates plays a key role in helping the NHS to improve patient care through better use of the estate. The previous Government announced in December 1994 that it planned to privatise the non-core functions of NHS Estates. I have decided that the agency should retain its current status.

Private Finance Initiative

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the private finance initiative schemes that are currently under consideration in the regions covered by the Government offices for the south-east and the south-west which pertain to the health service and are not the subject of the first prioritisation of 3 July 1997. [11362]

Mr. Milburn: Those national health service trust schemes in the regions covered by the Government offices for the south-east and south-west that have outline business case approval and are currently testing for private finance are listed. All schemes listed have a capital value of £1 million or over. Information is not collected centrally on schemes with a capital value below £1 million. The list excludes those major acute private finance initiative schemes that were part of the recent prioritisation exercise.

Region/trust	Scheme
South-east
Chichester Priority Services NHS Trust	Graylingwell reprovision
Crawley Horsham NHS Trust	Patient administration scheme (PAS)
Hastings and Rother NHS Trust	Mental health reprovision
North Downs Community Health NHS Trust	Farnham Hospital development
North Downs Community Health NHS Trust	Aldershot Polyclinic development
Oxleas NHS Trust	Bexley Hospital reprovision
Queen Mary's Sidcup NHS Trust	Endoscopy and day surgery centre
Thanet Healthcare NHS Trust	Private Patient and Post graduate medical centre
North Kent Healthcare NHS Trust	Sheppey Community Hospital
South-west
Southampton University Hospitals NHS Trust	Neurosciences intensive treatment area
Southampton Community Health Services NHS Trust	Lymington Hospital reprovision
Plymouth Hospitals NHS Trust	Radiotherapy equipment
Portsmouth Healthcare NHS Trust	Mental health and learning disabilities
North Hampshire Hospitals NHS Trust	Alton Hospital
Salisbury Health Care NHS Trust	Inpatient mental health
Frenchay Healthcare NHS Trust	Brain Injury rehabilitation unit
Hampshire Ambulance Service NHS Trust	Replacement radio scheme
Poole Hospital NHS Trust	Parkstone House residential
Royal Bournemouth and Christchurch Hospitals NHS Trust	Opthalmic services

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many health service private finance initiative agreements (a) have been approved and (b) are ready to proceed. [11140]

Mr. Milburn: Following the enactment of the National Health Service (Private Finance) Bill which received Royal Assent on 15 July, the private finance initiative scheme at Dartford and Gravesham national health service trust achieved financial close on 30 July. Norfolk and Norwich Healthcare NHS trust has reached agreement to proceed to financial close.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 21 July, Official Report, column 414, on the private finance initiative, if he will place in the Library copies of each of the business case PFI bid documents for those NHS facilities that were recently listed as approved for further consideration. [10673]

Mr. Milburn: I will write to my hon. Friend.

NHS Trusts (Private Activities)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what procedures will be placed upon NHS trust private activities to ensure (a) that the income they generate is used for the benefit of the NHS and (b) that they do not interfere with the provision of health services to the community; [11141]

(2) by what means his Department monitors compliance with directions to NHS trusts in respect of the limits on their private activities; and what steps are taken in the event of non-compliance. [11142]

Mr. Milburn: Procedures are already in place. The National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 states that private practice must not interfere with the performance by a trust of any of its obligations under NHS contracts. Health authorities and general practitioner fundholders, backed up by regional offices of the Department, monitor the performance of trusts against contracts. Trusts are required to recover the costs of their private patient activity including an appropriate return on capital employed. Memorandum trading accounts are prepared and audited. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State retains powers to give directions to a trust about the exercise of their powers to provide accommodation or services to private patients and the trust has a duty to comply.

NHS Expenditure

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 16 July, Official Report, column 212, if he will make a statement on the term adverse operating variance. [11925]

Mr. Milburn: In line with generally accepted accounting practice, a National Health Service trust makes a charge against its income and expenditure account for the depreciation of its assets.

The prices a trust charges to its purchasers includes the depreciation charge, but changes in the value of a trust's assets may occur too late for the resulting change in depreciation to be reflected in the prices charged to purchasers.

Increases in depreciation will result in an increase in expenditure which is not matched by an increase in income from the trust's purchasers. In these circumstances, the trust may show a deficit in the income and expenditure account. This is not within the control of the trust's management; nor is it an indicator of financial problems. The operating variance is used to calculate the underlying financial position of the trust by adjusting its income and expenditure account for changes in depreciation caused by late changes in the trust's assets.

Where the variance is adverse, the underlying position will be investigated further.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the criteria that each NHS executive regional office uses to determine which health trusts and authorities are judged to have serious financial problems. [7759]

Mr. Milburn [pursuant to his reply, 16 July 1997, c. 212]: I am now able to provide additional information. The full reply is as follows:

The National Health Service Executive assesses the seriousness of financial problems by initially looking at the scale of the financial problem reported—that is, over £1 million deficit or, if lower, a deficit of 1 per cent. of turnover in health authorities; and adverse operating variance of either £0.5 million or, if lower, of 0.5 per cent. of turnover in trusts. The NHS executive will supplement this with an assessment of additional factors such as the robustness of recovery plans.

Prostate Cancer

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into prostate cancer; and if he will make a statement. [11934]

Mr. Boateng: The national health service research and development programme's health technology assessment programme has undertaken two studies into prostate cancer. These are:

a systematic review of detection, management and screening for prostatic carcinoma, at a cost of approximately £54,000;

a review of evidence on the cost-effectiveness of different strategies for detecting and managing prostatic carcinoma, at an approximate cost of £13,000.

These two studies have recently reported.

The next round of priorities for the HTA programme have been set and one of these is treatments for the spectrum of prostate cancers likely to be identified by a screening programme.

The Department's policy research programme is currently undertaking a systematic review of minimally invasive therapy for benign prostatic hyperplasia and cancer. The study is being undertaken at the university of Newcastle between 1 August 1996 and 31 July 1997 at a total estimated cost of £39,491.

Another study, a mortality study of cadmium exposed workers with particular reference to lung and prostatic cancer, was completed last year and has reported. The study was undertaken at Imperial college between 1 October 1994 and 31 May 1996 at a total cost of £32,070.

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much his Department has spent in the last year for which figures are available on the treatment and cure of prostate cancer. [11935]

Mr. Boateng: Expenditure on prostate cancer cannot be identified separately. Expenditure on cancer services generally is estimated to account for approximately 7 per cent. of national health service resources.

Breast Screening

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to extend routine breast screening to those over 65 years. [11609]

Mr. Boateng: Three pilot schemes are currently under way in Northern and Yorkshire, Trent and South Thames regions to evaluate the effectiveness of extending the routine call-recall breast screening programme to women up to the age of 69. These schemes will run for three years to enable an assessment of the likely uptake, effect on work load, and effectiveness in terms of cancer detected. We will base any change to current policy on the evidence from the results of these studies, which should be available from the end of 2000.

In the interim, women aged 65 and over can continue to be screened every three years free of charge on request. This has been publicised in leaflets available in general practitioners' surgeries and clinics, as well as in breast screening centres, and emphasised more recently by a leaflet and poster campaign jointly organised by the charity Age Concern and the breast screening programme.

Specialist Training Certificate

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 24 July, Official Report, column 729, how many of the doctors awaiting decisions on their applications for the certificate of completion of specialist training (a) are at present working in the NHS, (b) have previously worked in the NHS, (c) were trained at UK medical schools, (d) are at present employed as consultants in the NHS and (e) have waited more than three months for accreditation. [11711]

Mr. Milburn: The Specialist Training Authority currently has no outstanding applications from doctors who have been recommended for the award of a certificate of completion of specialist training by the medical royal colleges. Information on the status of applicants is a matter for the STA and is not held centrally.

Alternative Practitioners

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met representatives of alternative and complementary medical practitioners; what was discussed; and if he will make a statement. [11933]

Ms Jowell: I met representatives of the Faculty of Homoeopathy on 21 July. Their thoughts on the future of homoeopathy were discussed.

On 23 July, the Minister of State, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and I also met representatives of various organisations, including nutritional therapy interests, to listen to their views on the intended changes to the legislation controlling vitamin B6 contained in dietary supplements.

I plan to meet the Council for Complementary and Alternative Medicine, and other organisations representing alternative and complementary medical practitioners, later in the year.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funding is presently committed from his departmental budget for (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000 to resolve the year 2000 computer problem; and if he will make a statement. [11893]

Ms Jowell: The Department is committed to having all business critical systems fully year 2000 compliant by the central information technology unit recommended deadline and the costs of preventive and remedial action will be met from existing public expenditure survey provision. A detailed and costed action plan will be available in the autumn.

GP Fundholders (Anglia and Oxford)

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many GP fundholders there are within the Anglia and Oxford health authority region by county. [11728]

Mr. Milburn: General practitioner fundholder numbers are not collected by county. The number of GP fundholders by health authority in the Anglia and Oxford region as at 1 April 1997 is set out in the table.

Anglia and Oxford region fundholder numbers (Waves 1–7)—1 April 1997

Health authority	Total number of funds	Total number of practices	Total number of general practitioner fundholders
Bedfordshire	26	26	100
Berkshire	55	73	291
Buckinghamshire	56	63	270
Cambridge and Huntingdon	16	16	72
East Norfolk	36	39	187

Efficiency Task Force

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 10 July, Official Report, column 580, when he expects the NHS efficiency task force first to put forward its ideas to Ministers and officials. [11939]

Mr. Milburn: The ideas of task force members have been received and are under consideration.

Patients (NHS Hospitals)

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients have been treated in NHS hospitals for each year since 1979. [10910]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 28 July 1997]: The information in the table shows numbers of finished consultant episodes. FCEs are not the same as the number of patients treated because a hospital spell can consist of more than one FCE, and patients discharged too early who are subsequently readmitted as emergencies count as another FCE. Furthermore, an FCE count cannot by itself serve as a valid measure of productivity since it is not standardised over time for any changes in the quality of treatment.

Table: Number of general and acute cases in NHS hospitals in England for each year since 1979

Thousands

Year	Ordinary admissions	Day cases	Total FCEs
1979	4,529	570	5,099

1994–95	6,210	2,439	8,649
1995–96	6,396	2,813	9,209

Note: Prior to 1988–89 in-patient data were collected in terms of discharges and deaths rather than Finished Consultant Episodes. The figures above have been converted to FCEs using data from 1988–89, when data were collected on both bases.

NHS Staff

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) fully qualified nurses and (b) doctors were employed in the NHS in each year since 1979. [10909]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 28 July 1997]: The information requested is in the following table.

[2] General Medical Practitioners include: restricted principals, unrestricted principals, trainees and assistants.

[3] 1995 and 1996 figures for HCHS nursing and midwifery staff are not directly comparable with figures for earlier years because of a change in the way non-medical staff were classified from 1995.

[4] Figures for 1979 and 1980 are not comparable with those for later years because of a reduction in nurses standard working hours in 1980–81 from 40 to 37.5 hours per week.

NHS Staff (Patient Care)

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of NHS staff provided direct patient care in (a) 1979 and (b) 1996. [10900]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 28 July 1997]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave him on 22 July at column 736.

Estimates for national health service staff, which comprise hospital and community health services and general medical services as a whole, are not available before 1990.

Hospital Waiting Times

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information his Department has collated in respect of individual trusts' plans for hospital waiting times. [10421]

Mr. Milburn [pursuant to his reply, 29 July 1997, c. 124]: I am now able to provide additional information. The full reply is as follows:

Information is not collated by the Department on individual trust's plans for hospital waiting times. The Government have inherited a situation where 44 of 100 health authorities have contracted for longer maximum waiting times in 1997–98 than in 1996–97. Whereas only four have contracted for shorter maximum waiting times. The Government have made clear the priority that they attach to waiting lists, and to safeguarding emergency admissions.

School Nursing Service

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his Department's future plans for the development of the school nursing service in London. [9176]

Mr. Milburn: The Government are currently considering all health services for school-age children within the context of the response to the Health Select Committee report on children's services.

Child Sex Abuse (Recovered Memories Report)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with the Royal College of Psychiatrists over its decision not to publish the report by Professor Sydney Brandon into recovered memories of child sexual abuse; and if he will make a statement. [11145]

Ms Jowell: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has not had any discussions with the Royal College of Psychiatrists about the report of its working party on recovered memory chaired by Professor Sydney Brandon. The question whether it publishes his report is a matter for the royal college.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Livingtstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what work has been carried out by the Public Health Laboratory Service since 1990 to evaluate the health effects of the organism E. coli MRE 162; for what reasons and on whose behalf this work was conducted; when this work was conducted; what was the conclusion of the work; and in which publications, and when, this work was published. [12189]

Ms Jowell: The Public Health Laboratory Service's laboratory of enteric pathogens received E. coli MRE 162 from the chemical and biological defence establishment at Porton Down in March 1997. There was a request from CBDE to evaluate the organism with respect to the risk posed to human health.

The organism was fully identified as E. coli serotype 08:H9 and tested for a wide range of enteric virulence factors. All tests were negative and it was concluded that the strain was unlikely to cause diarrhoeal disease. A report was sent to CBDE on 22 April 1997. The work carried out has not been published in scientific journals.

Health Action Zones

Mr. Rammell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what role county, district and borough councils will have in planning and implementing health action zones. [12094]

Mr. Milburn: To set up and run a health action zone, a wide range of interests including local authorities will have to work in close partnership. We shall publish further details in due course.

Neonatal Injury

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps his Department is taking to eliminate the damage caused by (i) Erb's palsy and (ii) brachial plexus injuries during the birth process; [2885]

(2) if he will list the incidence of (a) Erb's palsy and (b) brachial plexus injuries over the past 20 years. [2886]

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he plans to take to raise national awareness of Erb's palsy. [2878]

106. Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce a programme (a) for the recording of every incidence of (i) Erb's palsy and (ii) brachial plexus injuries and (b) to raise the general awareness about Erb's palsy. [2930]

Ms Jowell [pursuant to her reply, 12 June 1997, c. 528–29]: I am now able to provide additional information. The full reply is as follows:

We are of course concerned about the damage to babies caused by Erb's palsy and brachial plexus injuries during birth. The safety of the mother and her unborn child are of paramount importance and childbirth is safer now than at any other time. Most cases of Erb's palsy and brachial plexus injuries arise spontaneously, but are also considered to be influenced by misplacement of the shoulders in the birth canal. In recognition of this problem, a working group under the auspices of the confidential inquiry into stillbirths and deaths in infancy, is currently preparing guidance on the management of shoulder dystocia—difficulty in delivering the shoulders during the birth. The guidance will provide advice on the early identification of cases where there may be a risk on coping with cases where shoulders dystocia occurs. The guidance is expected to be available later this year.

Information on the number of finished consultant episodes of those patients admitted to hospital with primary diagnosis Erb's palsy and brachial plexus injuries in NHS hospitals in England up to 1994–95 is available through hospital episode statistics data and is shown in the table. The definition of a consultant episode is the period that a patient spends under the continuous care of a specific consultant in a specific health care provider. A hospital provider spell can comprise one or more consultant episodes. However, episode statistics will therefore pick up cases where the diagnosis was not made at birth and the baby was subsequently readmitted. Information before 1989–90 recorded discharges and deaths and is therefore not directly comparable to hospital episode statistics data.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Advance Corporation Tax Credit

21. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the impact on the cash flow of small businesses of the Budget changes to ACT tax credit. [10046]

Mrs. Roche: The changes to ACT tax credit are part of a package of measures designed to create a better environment for growth and high-quality, long-term investment. Taking account of the cut in the small companies' corporation tax rate, and of increased first-year plant and machinery allowances for small and medium businesses, the small firms sector as a whole will receive a significant boost from the Chancellor's Budget.

Inward Investment

22. Mr, Olner: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what further steps her Department intends to take to promote inward investment in the United Kingdom. [10047]

Mr. Ian McCartney: My Department's Invest in Britain Bureau will continue to promote the attractions of the UK for mobile international investment to consolidate our position as the No. 1 location in Europe for inward investment. The Government will pursue economic policies which enhance those attractions, including macro-economic stability, an increase in the skills base, "flexibility plus" in labour markets and a positive approach to Europe.

Mr. David Heath: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate she has made of the number of foreign-owned companies, by country, which have established operations in the United Kingdom. [11210]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 30 July 1997]: According to information notified to my Department's Invest In Britain Bureau, the numbers of new projects by country of origin between 1979 and to date, are as follows:

	Number
Australia	24
Austria	4
Belgium	16
Brazil	1
Canada	69
Denmark	33
Finland	19
France	65
Germany	285
Hong Kong	21

United States	765

1. These figures are based on information on new projects provided by companies at the time of the announcement of the decision to invest and exclude expansions and mergers or acquisitions. There is no requirement to notify the Department and so the figures include only those projects where IBB and its regional partners were involved or which have come to their notice. They take no account of subsequent developments.

2. Data collected from 1977 onwards—when IBB was established.

Coalfield Areas

23. Mr. Skinner: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions she has had with coalfield representatives and local authorities regarding industrial development in the coalfield areas. [10048]

Mr. Battle: My colleagues and I have frequent discussions with those representing coalfield interests on a wide range of issues, including regeneration.

Deregulation

24. Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to make use of the deregulation procedures established by the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994. [10049]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I intend to use the deregulation order-making power to reduce or simplify the burdens imposed in two cases. These are:

the repeal of the check-off system of the Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992; and an amendment to the Patents Act 1977 to allow the filing fees for patent applications to be paid later than the filing date

Further proposals for use of the power are under consideration.

Child Labour

26. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals she has to control imports of goods produced by child labour. [10051]

Mrs. Roche: We are firmly committed to eliminating abusive labour practices, particularly child labour, around the world. We fully support initiatives to improve the welfare of children, including a new International Labour Organisation convention on child labour, and are increasing our financial support for international programmes working towards this end. We have also begun to discuss with business, unions and other organisations what further initiatives the Government might take, but we must ensure that these would not harm the very people we are trying to help.

Utility Regulation

27. Mr. Shepherd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she expects to announce the conclusions of her review of utility regulation. [10052]

Mrs. Beckett: The review team will advise Ministers before the end of the year. If the Government conclude that changes should be contemplated, a consultation document will be published. Final conclusions will be announced as soon as practicable.

Small Businesses (Information Technology)

28. Mr. Miller: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is her Department's policy towards improving access to information technology for small and medium businesses. [10053]

Mrs. Roche: I refer my hon. Friend to the replies I gave today to my hon. Friends the Members for Norwich, North (Dr. Gibson) and for Stourbridge, (Ms Shipley).

Ms Shipley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is her Department's policy towards improving access to information technology for small and medium businesses. [10039]

Mrs. Roche: Many recent studies have emphasised the crucial importance of new technologies to the competitiveness of smaller firms. Many people—in government, in business support organisations and in the private sector—have a role in getting this message across. Within government, we are pressing ahead with our support for the information society initiative programme for business, which places particular emphasis on offering access and awareness opportunities for SMEs at locations throughout the UK.

Defence Exports

29. Mr. Greenway: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures her Department is taking to support defence-related exports. [10054]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: The Ministry of Defence's export services organisation leads the Government effort on supporting defence-related exports. My Department maintains a close dialogue with the industry on the whole range of issues affecting competitiveness. The full range of Export Credits Guarantee Department's facilities are available for defence as well as for civil-related exports.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what arms and defence-related materials have been licensed for export by the United Kingdom to (a) Burundi, (b) Djibouti, (c) Eritrea, (d) Ethiopia, (e) Kenya, (f) Rwanda (g) Somalia, (h) Sudan, (i) Uganda and (j) Zaire in the period since 1990. [8998]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 23 July 1997]: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and place a copy of that letter in the Library.

Mr. Howard: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what contracts permitted by the previous Government she intends to prohibit in accordance with the criteria set out in the answer of the Foreign Secretary to the hon. Member for East Ham (Mr. Timms) of 28 July, Official Report, columns 26-29. [11887]

Mrs. Roche: I refer the right hon. and learned Member to the answer given to him by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs today.

Mr. Faber: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list, by year, those arms exports for which her Department has refused an export licence since 1987. [11058]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 28 July 1997]: I will write to the hon. Member shortly and place a copy in the Library of House.

India

30. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to develop Britain's trading relationship with India. [10055]

Mrs. Beckett: I have already made clear my strong commitment to strengthening the Indo-British partnership. A major trade exhibition—Towards 2000—is being held in October this year at the time of the state visit of HM the Queen and HRH the Duke of Edinburgh. I will be visiting India myself later in the year. A promotional campaign is also planned in the UK to raise awareness of the opportunities in India among small to medium companies. I am confident that this activity will contribute significantly to meeting the target of £5 billion that has been set for two-way trade by 2000.

Low Pay Commission

31. Mr. Cann: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she expects the Low Pay Commission to start its work. [10056]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Appointments to the Low Pay Commission were made by the Prime Minister and announced by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 25 July columns 808–09, in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Hull, West and Hessle (Mr. Johnson). The commission held its first meeting on Monday 28 July.

Telecommunications

32. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent discussions she has had with the cable industry on its investment programme and possible changes in the restrictions on BT. [10057]

Mrs. Roche: I met representatives of the cable industry on 23 June this year, and was briefed on a range of issues including the cable industry's investment plans. My officials also maintain regular and productive contact.

Internet Access

33. Mr. Timms: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to stimulate the development of Internet access services in the UK. [10058]

Mrs. Roche: The Department of Trade and Industry is fully committed to the development of the information society in the UK and is enthusiastically pushing forward the "Information Society Initiative—Programme for Business" which encourages the informed uptake of networked services by British business. The DTI will also be developing an enterprise zone. This will be an Internet-based service for small and medium companies, providing a "one stop access point" to key information and to sources of further support for SMEs. The Government are also working internationally to secure the right conditions for fostering the optimal use of the Internet through work on security, intellectual property rights and self-regulation, the latter based on existing law and the existing penalties. The market in the Uk is itself expanding very fast, with many active Internet service providers allowing users access to a wide variety of contents and applications.

World Trade Organisation

35. Mr. Rammell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the proposal for a human rights clause in the treaty relating to the World Trade Organisation. [10061]

Mrs. Beckett: The Government are firmly committed to ending abusive labour practices around the world. We are already pursuing this objective in the ILO and through other international forums. We are also exploring how work can be taken forward in the WTO. We see no conflict between our commitment to promote free trade and fight protectionism on the other hand and our determination to see abusive labour practices eliminated on the other.

Women Directors

36. Mrs. Ballard: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many women are (a) executive and (b) non-executive directors on plc boards. [10062]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Institute of Management's latest national management salary survey shows that women now represent 4.5 per cent. of directors on company boards, up from 3.3 per cent. last year.

Manufacturing Trade

38. Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate she has made of the change in the level of manufacturing trade over the next 12 months. [10064]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: In the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" published on 2 July 1997, the Chancellor of the Exchequer forecast the volume of manufactured exports to grow by 7.5 per cent. in 1997 and by a further 6 per cent. in 1998.

North-east Lancashire (Investment)

39. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps she is taking to promote inward investment into north-east Lancashire; and if she will make a statement. [10065]

Mr. Ian McCartney: My Department's Invest in Britain Bureau promotes the whole of the UK as the No. 1 location in Europe for overseas inward investors. In 1997–98, it will provide £1,393,000 to promote inward investment into the whole of the north-west region, including north-east Lancashire. It will also continue to offer the region the opportunity to bid for any new projects where it can meet investors' needs.

Utilities (Standing Charges)

Mr. Touhig: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has received from consumer organisations about standing charges made by utilities. [10035]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: Although my right hon. Friend has not received formal representations from consumer organisations, a number of hon. Members have conveyed the concerns of some of their constituents about this issue.

Konver Grants

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the allocation of Konver grants. [10059]

Mr. Battle: The UK secured the Commission's agreement to spend up to 50 per cent. of Konver funds in areas falling outside objective 1, 2 and 5b areas. This enabled us to spend Konver funds in both objectives areas and non-objective areas.

Appointments

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many political and personal appointments she has made; and at what cost to public funds. [1117]

Mrs. Beckett: I have appointed two paid advisers—Sheila Watson and Dan Corry. They are both paid within a range of £24,349 to £73,848. Their salaries are negotiated individually and are confidential within this range. Details of this and of previous salaries are not provided, in order to protect the privacy of the individuals concerned.

I have also appointed Lord Hollick as an unpaid adviser.

Utilities (Consumer Protection)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to conduct a review of consumer representation and protection in the utility industries. [4397]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: On 30 June, the President of the Board of Trade announced an interdepartmental review of utility regulation. The important issues of consumer representation and protection to which my hon. Friend refers will be covered in this review.

Nuclear Power

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many tonnes of spent oxide nuclear fuel have been (a) sheared and dissolved and (b) reprocessed to the thermal oxide reprocessing plant since (i) March 1994 and (ii) March 1997. [6550]

Mr. Battle: Since the thermal oxide reprocessing plant began operations in March 1994, some 680 tonnes of fuel have been sheared and dissolved to the year end, March 1997, the latest date for which figures are available. THORP remains on target to process 7,000 tonnes of fuel in its first 10 years of operation and to make at least £500 million profit for this period after decommissioning costs have been taken into account. Shearing and dissolving are an integral part of reprocessing.

International Port, Aden

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what facilities and advice are available to United Kingdom companies wishing to participate in the privatisation and development of Yemen's international port at Aden. [11291]

Mrs. Roche: Within the DTI, the Yemen country desk and the section in projects export promotion directorate with responsibility for ports actively monitor this project and alert UK companies with expertise in this sector to the business opportunities it presents.

The country desk, in conjunction with the British embassy in Yemen, has already organised a seminar on board Britannia, while it was in Aden in February, for British companies interested in the opportunities offered by the port development. Forthcoming opportunities include a DTI-supported trade mission led by HRH the Duke of Gloucester in September and October, another DTI-supported trade mission in February 1998, and a DTI-supported all-British trade fair in Sana'a in November 1997. The country desk and export promoter for Yemen are also organising a seminar on investment finance for Yemen in the UK in September 1997 with speakers from Yeminvest and the World bank.

The country desk will continue to work closely with the commercial section in the British embassy, Sana'a, including the second secretary, commercial, a new post that has been created to respond to the increase in commercial opportunities in Yemen, and in particular those offered by the developments in Aden.

Official Travel (Cost)

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total cost to her Department of the trips made by the Minister and officials to (a) Antwerp on 24 June and (b) Athens on 25 to 28 June. [9432]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 18 July 1997]: Before 1 May, a decision for officials to attend the International Travel Services Association Antwerp conference was taken. The total cost to the Department of the visit to Antwerp was £37,038.00. The DTI provided two stands at the ITSA conference which were staffed by a total of five officials; three other officials attended the conference as full delegates; I was accompanied by my private secretary. The total cost to the Department of the visit to the UK industry travel and tour conference in Athens was £3,238.00. I undertook a number of official engagements, meeting 20 UK exporters to Greece; and meetings with Greek Ministers.

Indonesia

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Richmond Park (Dr. Tonge) of 11 July, Official Report, columns 646–47, if she will list (a) the dates on which export licences for the export of Hawk aircraft to Indonesia were issued, (b) the number of aircraft specified in those licences, (c) the time during which the licences were intended to remain in force, (d) the branch of the Indonesian military or paramilitary forces specified as an end user and (e) whether (i) the licences distinguished between the trainer or ground attack variant of the aircraft and (ii) the licences specified the weapon systems or weapon system fittings which were to be supplied with the aircraft. [9589]

Mrs. Roche: I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible and place a copy of that letter in the Library of the House. Inquiries are being made as regards the release of the information under the non-statutory code of practice on access to Government information and, since confidential information is involved, the consent of the company is being sought for the disclosure of the information.

General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate she has made of the benefit to the United Kingdom to date of the 1994 GATT agreement to liberalise world trade. [11236]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 29 July 1997]: Work undertaken by the GATT secretariat suggests that, over the long term, the agreement on trade in goods alone could boost the real income of the EU as a whole by around 1.7 per cent. per annum. By 2005, this could amount to around $160 billion per annum for the EU. No separate estimates are available for the UK.

Employment Contracts

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if she will make a statement on her Department's policy in relation to the use of waiver clauses in employment contracts; [10593]

(2) what plans she has to review the operation of section 142 of the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Act 1993 in respect of the use of waiver clauses in employment contracts; and if she will make a statement. [10592]

Mrs. Beckett: The Government expect to consult on proposals for fairness at work later this year. We will consider the issue of waiver clauses in this context.

Export Licences

Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she expects to reach a decision on export licence application number 530904; and if she will make a statement. [10619]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 28 July 1997]: The licence was issued on 29 July 1997.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer of 21 July, Official Report, columns 452–53, concerning Manroy Engineering, how her officials were informed by the company that the Manroy L80 Manpack mist sprayer did not go into production; and how the information was verified. [12204]

Mrs. Roche: When my hon. Friend asked her previous question, the company was contacted by telephone by an official of the export control organisation of my Department. The company advised that it had not entered into production of the equipment in question and I am not aware of any reason to doubt that advice.

Waste Minimisation

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to introduce a waste minimisation strategy for her Department. [11550]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: The DTI, as part of the environment management strategy and good housekeeping, has already adopted a number of measures to minimise waste management, including:

Energy efficiency—to reduce the overall consumption of the Department over a three-year period on the baseline figure of 1995–96.

Waste paper—to increase the waste paper sent by the Department for recycling from 30 to 75 per cent. of paper purchased before the end of 1998;

Ink/toner cartridges and cans—to recycle all spent cartridges and drink cans.

The strategy is of a proactive waste management with the continued emphasis on minimisation of waste that would need to be sent to landfill sites.

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the amount, and proportion, of paper recycled by her Department in each of the last five years. [11552]

Mr. Griffiths: The figures are available only from July 1996. In that period, the Department sent around 77 tonnes of paper for recycling. This represents 30 per cent. of the paper purchased by the Department. It is the aim of the Department to increase this to 75 per cent. before the end of 1998.

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on existing targets set to minimise waste within her Department. [11551]

Mr. Griffiths: The targets set by the Department to minimise waste are:

Energy efficiency—to achieve a 5 per cent., or better, reduction in energy consumption over a three-year period on the base figure of 1995–96.

Waste paper—to increase the waste paper sent for recycling from 30 to 75 per cent. of the paper purchased before the end of 1998;

Ink/toner cartridges and cans—to recycle all spent cartridges and drink cans.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what is (a) remit and (b) time scale of the Government's review of renewable energy policies; [11455]

(2) which civil servants are dealing with her Department's review of renewable energy; [11457]

(3) which (a) Government Departments and (b) other organisations her Department is consulting in its review of renewable energy policies; [11456]

(4) how and when information from her Department's review of renewable energy policies will be made publicly available. [11458]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 30 July 1997]: I have established an interdepartmental review group, led by my director of the energy technologies directorate of the DTI, to report in the autumn on new and renewable energy policy options. The review will consider what would be necessary and practicable to achieve 10 per cent. of the UK's electricity needs from renewables by 2010 and how renewables can make an effective contribution to meeting requirements for future gas reduction commitments.

I am consulting colleagues in other Government Departments with interest in renewables, including the Scottish, Welsh and Northern Ireland Offices; the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Treasury. The review will provide an input to the comprehensive spending review and the UK's climate change programme. I will consider wider consultations with the renewable trade industry trade bodies and other interested bodies in the autumn in the light of options resulting from the review.

The outcome of the review will be published in 1998.

Technology-based Small Firms

Mr. Cotter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the responses to the Bank of England's report of October 1996 on the financing of technology-based small firms. [11786]

Mrs. Roche: The Government have welcomed the Bank of England report as a very useful contribution to pinpointing the issues associated with the financing of technology-based small firms. The Government are discussing with the Bank of England the recommendations for action in the report, taking account of the various responses to the report received by the bank.

Civil Service Pension Scheme

Mr. Cotter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the terms of reference of the competing for quality review of her Department's use of the principal civil service pension scheme; what is the time scale of the review; what consultation process is planned in respect of it; and if she will make a statement on the proposals for (a) any market testing and (b) contracting out this service. [10585]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 30 July 1997]: The DTI has no plans to conduct a competing for quality review of its principal civil service pension scheme administration at this stage. There are therefore no proposals at present to market test or contract out this work.

Retail Newsagents

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what representations she has received from retail newsagents on difficulties being faced due to unregulated competition; [10635]

(2) what proposals she has for regulation of the newspaper retail supply trade; [10636]

(3) what plans he has to introduce amendments to the Restrictive Trade Practices Acts in respect of retail newsagents. [10637]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 30 July 1997]: My right hon. Friend and I have received a number of representations from retail newsagents on the state of the newspaper distribution industry. I met Roger Clarke of the National Federation of Retail Newsagents on 22 July.

The Director General of Fair Trading is responsible for considering allegations of anti-competitive behaviour, abuse of monopoly power and restrictive trade practices. He is considering the most recent submission from the National Federation of Retail Newsagents, the main representative body for independent newsagents, arguing for the newspaper distribution industry to be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

The Government have no plans to regulate the newspaper retail supply trade, or to amend the Restrictive Trade Practices Acts specifically in respect of retail newsagents. Nor do we expect our proposals for the forthcoming Competition Bill to contain measures specifically in respect of retail newsagents.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if her forthcoming competition legislation will include measures to address the competitive position of independent newsagents. [11311]

Mr. Griffiths [holding answer 30 July 1997]: The competition Bill will introduce a prohibition of anti-competitive agreements and a prohibition of abuse of a dominant market position. These are measures to improve the effectiveness of competition law across the economy as a whole, rather than being targeted on individual sectors.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the situation facing independent newsagents. [11310]

Mr. Griffiths [holding answer 30 July 1997]: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Luff) on 21 July 1997, Official Report, columns 446–47.

Copywatch

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what relationship the Minister for Competition and Consumer Affairs has with Copywatch. [12173]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: None.

Mr. Page: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what advice the company Copywatch has provided to her Department; and what advice from the company she has accepted. [12174]

Mr. Bercow: To ask the president of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the advice provided by the company Copywatch to the Minister for Competition and Consumer Affairs. [12197]

Mr. Grifffiths: A report was submitted on 18 June from Copywatch. I have placed the Department's response in the Library of the House.

Employment Pacts

Ms Beverley Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which proposed territorial employment pacts the Government intend to nominate to the European Commission as pilot projects in the United Kingdom; and if she will make a statement. [12469]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The European Commission said in its interim progress report on the implementation of territorial pacts for employment that it expected 10 proposals from the United Kingdom to add to the 78 proposals from other parts of the European Union. The Government received 66 proposals from all parts of the UK and, following regional prioritisation, I have selected the proposals put forward by:

Barnsley Metropolitan Borough;

Birmingham City Council on behalf of Black Country Districts, Birmingham and Solihull;

Borough of St. Helens;

East Midlands 3-Cities (Nottingham, Derby and Leicester);

London Borough of Haringey/North London Leadership (Tottenham Partnership);

Northern Ireland Training and Employment Agency;

North Wales Economic Forum;

South Tyneside Metropolitan Borough Council;

West Cornwall Initiative; and Western Scotland Objective 2 partnership.

Although the Commission only invited the UK to nominate 10 pilot projects, the Government would also welcome similar pacts and local partnerships in other areas which could have a significant local impact and which could provide useful information and experience.

Minister for Trade and Competitiveness in Europe

Mr. Letwin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the topics which have been addressed by the Minister for Trade and Competitiveness in Europe within her Department since 1 July. [11641]

Mrs. Beckett: I refer the hon. Member to the list of ministerial responsibilities, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Mr. Letwin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on how many occasions the Minister for Trade and Competitiveness in Europe has held discussions with the gas regulator since 1 May. [11644]

Mrs. Beckett: None.

Mr. Letwin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the Minister for Trade and Competitiveness in Europe will be involved in meetings related to the review of utility regulatory regimes being carried out by her Department. [11643]

Mrs. Beckett: Within the DTI, the Minister for Science, Energy and Industry leads on this review. The Minister for Trade and Competitiveness in Europe will continue to deal with issues which fall within his portfolio of ministerial responsibilities, subject to the arrangements in place to ensure that no conflicts of interest can arise.

Mr. Letwin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the Minister for Trade and Competitiveness in Europe will continue to answer questions in another place on the review of utility regulatory regimes being carried out by her Department. [11642]

Mrs. Beckett: The Minister will continue to answer questions on a range of DTI issues in another place.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade who are the trustees of the blind trust established by the Minister for Trade and Competitiveness in Europe; and what instructions they have been given for the management of the portfolio. [11795]

Mrs. Beckett: The Minister for Trade and Competitiveness in Europe has made arrangements for his non-BP shareholdings to be placed in a blind trust in accordance with the guidance in "Questions of Procedure for Ministers". Further details of these arrangements are a private matter for the Minister.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood) of 23 July, Official Report, column 665, (1) what procedures exist to ensure compliance with "Questions of Procedure for Ministers" by the Minister for Trade and Competitiveness in Europe; and what mechanisms are in place to ensure that, from the date of his appointment, he has not seen any papers or attended any meetings formally or informally, which would have or would have had, a bearing on BP or its competitors; [11968]

(2) which Minister or civil servant takes the decision on whether a conflict of interests arises in respect of the Minister for Trade and Competitiveness in Europe. [11975]

Mrs. Beckett: The Minister decided at the outset that he would not be involved in discussions or decisions directly affecting BP, and civil servants dealing with issues falling within his ministerial responsibilities have acted accordingly since then. The Minister's private office has, in addition, ensured that he does not see papers or attend meetings that directly affect BP. In cases of doubt, the Minister and civil servants consult the permanent secretary for advice.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what dates and at what venues the Minister for Trade and Competitiveness in Europe's recent meetings or parties with BP personnel were held. [11633]

Mrs. Beckett: The Minister for Trade and Competitiveness in Europe met directors of BP on 9 May, 4 June and 4 July, at BP's offices in Finsbury circus and in a restaurant. The Minister also attended farewell social engagements hosted by BP on 4 June, 25 June and 3 July in a marquee at Finsbury square, at the Barbican and in Manchester square.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what the Minister for Trade and Competitiveness in Europe has now complied in full with paragraphs 109, 110, 111, 112 and 117 of "Questions of Procedure for Ministers". [11632]

Mrs. Beckett: The Minister has complied with the guidance in "Questions of Procedure for Ministers" in full since the day of his appointment.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether she took legal advice prior to the Minister for Trade and Competitiveness in Europe signing the explanatory memorandum on European Community document on gas liberalisation to ensure that the Government would not be open to legal challenge. [11634]

Mrs. Beckett: The Minister for Trade and Competitiveness in Europe has not signed any such memorandum; the gas liberalisation dossier is the responsibility of my hon. Friend the Minister for Science, Industry and Energy.

Minister of Competition and Consumer Affairs

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham (Mrs. Gillan) of 24 July, Official Report, column 732, where in Athens, and when, the social event took place, at which the Minister for Competition and Consumer Affairs met Mr. Haji-Iannou. [11920]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: At Vouliagmeni at 10am on 26 June.

Mrs. May: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the articles contributed to "Travel Weekly" by the Minister for Competition and Consumer Affairs, together with their publication dates since 5 May 1997. [11901]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: Two articles were submitted after 5 May: one appeared on 21 May. The second appeared on 25 June. An article submitted before my appointment as Minister appeared on 7 May.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she first heard and from whom that the Minister for Competition and Consumer Affairs was stepping down from the consideration of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission investigation of the travel trade. [9950]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 21 July 1997]: My hon. Friend the Minister for Competition and Consumer Affairs communicated his decision to me via official channels at the earliest practical opportunity after he had made his decision.

Competition Law

Gillian Merron: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on competition law reform. [12470]

Mrs. Beckett: I will shortly be publishing a consultation document and draft Bill which is intended to introduce a tougher competition regime. The Bill will introduce a prohibition approach to anti-competitive agreements, cartels and abuse of a dominant position similar to articles 85 and 86 of the treaty of Rome. There will be fines for breach of the prohibitions and rights for customers and competitors to seek compensation in the courts.

In addition, I am planning to establish a new body, a competition commission, which will take on the existing functions of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission and will also hear appeals against the decisions of the Director General of Fair Trading under the prohibition regime.

Commercial Debt

Mr. Öpik: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on her plans to improve the ability of small businesses to obtain money owed to them. [11915]

Mrs. Roche: Small businesses play a fundamental part in the economy of the UK. The Government are concerned therefore by any actions that unnecessarily hinder their competitiveness. The late payment of commercial debt is acknowledged by many in the business community to be a serious problem, particularly for small businesses which are least able to bear the additional costs resulting from payment delays. The Government are determined therefore to improve the payment culture in the UK.

The Government are pursuing a package of measures in partnership with business organisations.

The Government will introduce a statutory right to claim interest on late payment of commercial debt. Legislation will be transparent, so that all businesses are clear about their rights and obligations. A Green Paper, "Improving the Payment Culture: A Statutory Right to Claim Interest on Late Payment of Commercial Debt" was published on 28 July.

The Lord Chancellor announced, in June of this year, that, as part of the review of existing proposals for the reform of the civil justice system, consultation would proceed on proposed fast-track and multi-track procedures which will ensure realistic timetables and reduce the cost, delay and complexity of civil litigation.

The Government will publish league tables of the payment performance of Government Departments and agencies. They are working with others to produce league tables on the payment performance of public limited companies and their large private subsidiaries. The first set of tables is expected in summer 1998.

I am delighted to say that a number of leading business representative organisations have pledged to join the Government in tackling the problem of late payment. They include the British chambers of commerce, the Confederation of British Industry, the Federation of Small Businesses, the Forum of Private Business, the Institute of Directors, the Union of Independent Companies, the Country Landowners Association and the National Farmers Union. Over the next 12 months, we will work with them and others on a number of initiatives to tackle late payments and meet the needs of small businesses.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimates she has made of the cost of publishing league tables of payment performance of plcs and their subsidiaries. [11733]

Mrs. Roche: The Government are committed to working in partnership with the private sector to publish league tables of the payment performance of public limited companies and their large private subsidiaries.

The Companies Acts already require plcs and their large private subsidiaries to state the average time to pay their suppliers and to publish this figure annually in their director's report. The Federation of Small Businesses has offered to collate and publish this information in a league table format. These tables will provide small businesses with information on how quickly they can expect to be paid when dealing with larger business, at no cost to the public purse.

The publication of league tables is another important step in promoting a more ethical payment culture in the UK.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the closing date for representations on the consultation paper, "Improving the Payment Culture." [11730]

Mrs. Roche: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Maidenhead (Mrs. May) on 22 July 1997, Official Report, column 507.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the organisations and individuals who have been sent the consultation paper, "Improving the Payment Culture." [11729]

Mrs. Roche: To date, some 3,500 copies of the Green Paper "Improving the Payment Culture: A Statutory Right to Claim Interest on Late Payment of Commercial Debt" have been sent to organisations and individuals. Recipients include individual businesses, trade associations, legal, accountancy and financial bodies, business representative organisations, business links, training and enterprise councils, chambers of commerce, local authorities and NHS trusts.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Pond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list in domestic currency the statutory national minimum wage, or the lowest minimum wage established on the basis of legally binding sectoral or industry agreements, in each European Union state and in the United States of America, Japan, Australia, New Zealand and Canada; and if she will list the equivalent of each of these amounts as an hourly rate in pounds sterling (a) on the basis of current exchange rages and (b) at purchasing power parity exchange rates. [12214]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The information requested about wages is not routinely collected by my Department; all the latest figures available to me are set out in the table below.

Country	Minimum wage in national currency	Hourly rate[3] in Sterling at
		Current exchange rate[1]	PPP exchange rate[2]
Belgium	44165 BFr Monthly	4.20	4.76
Canada	C$5 Hourly	2.17	2.75
France	6406 FFr Monthly	3.75	3.94
Greece	5746 Dr Daily	1.52	2.19
Japan	Y 4969 Daily	3.19	2.43
Luxembourg	46275 LFr Monthly	4.25	4.53
Netherlands	2244 Fl Monthly	3.96	4.44
New Zealand	NZ$6.25 Hourly	2.45	2.78
Portugal	58883 Es Monthly	1.09	1.80
Spain	2279 Pta Daily	1.19	1.62
USA	$4.75 Hourly	2.85	3.19

[1] Current Rates as at 25 July 1996.

[2] PPP exchange rates for 1996 from OECD Main Economic Indicators July 1997.

[3] Converted to hourly rates using results from the European Labour Force Survey 1995 published by Eurostat, except Japan were results from ILO "Conditions of Work Digest" are used.

Employees' Rights

Mr. Stunell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures she proposes to transfer the legal responsibility enforcing terms and conditions of employment from employees to employers; and if she will make a statement. [11092]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Generally, terms and conditions of employment are a matter for agreement between employer and employee. Where one party breaches the contract, it is for the other party to seek enforcement.

Direct Rail Services

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the trial train service being run by BNFL's Direct Rail Services subsidiary from Penrith to Cricklewood receives public subsidy. [11783]

Mr. Battle: This service does not receive any public subsidy. Operational details are a matter for Direct Rail Services.

Security Equipment

Ann Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how information given to her officials by manufacturers and suppliers of military, security and police equipment is (a) verified and (b) evaluated; and if she will place copies of the evaluation and verification procedures in the Library. [12203]

Mrs. Roche: The way in which officials verify and evaluate such information depends on the nature of the information requested. In some circumstances, we do verify information provided by applicants for export licences, for example the intended end-user, but in others we do not, for example where a company states that it has not produced a particular item of equipment and there is no reason to doubt that statement.

Holocaust Victims (Funds)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps her Department has taken to investigate claims that the British Government failed to return confiscated funds deposited by victims of the holocaust in British banks; and if she will make a statement. [11284]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: The Government take very seriously the concerns expressed in the Israeli Knesset and in the media about the confiscation of property from nationals and residents of enemy countries during the second world war. The DTI is working closely with the FCO to identify the relevant papers—many of which are already at the Public Record Office. The results of that work will be made public when it is completed. Both Departments are also co-operating with the Holocaust Educational Trust and other interested individuals and organisations.

Fuel Agreement

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many beneficiaries of the national concessionary fuel agreement there are, broken down by those in receipt of (a) coal, (b) smokeless fuel and (c) cash in lieu of fuel. [11988]

Mr. Battle: At June 1997, the breakdown of national concessionary fuel agreement beneficiaries—that is, not including British Association of Colliery Management beneficiaries—under my Department's liability was as follows: (a) 14,477 in receipt of coal; (b) 88,977 in receipt of smokeless fuel; (c) 63,242 in receipt of cash in lieu of fuel.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many concessionary fuel beneficiaries have a statutory entitlement which pre-dates the national concessionary fuel agreement. [11989]

Mr. Battle: At 7 July 1997, there were 793 beneficiaries receiving concessionary fuel under statutory entitlement—that is, under the Coal Industry Nationalisation Act 1946.

Coal Production

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total United Kingdom coal production for the last complete year for which figures are available; and how much was (a) opencast coal and (b) deep-mined coal. [11986]

Mr. Battle: Coal production in the United Kingdom in 1996 is set out in the table.

	Thousand tonnes
Total production[1]	50,197
Of which:
Deep-mined	32,223
Opencast	16,315

Note:

[1] Total production for 1996 comprises deep-mined, opencast and other production. Other production of 1,658,000 tonnes is an estimate for slurry and so on recovered from dumps, ponds, rivers.

Source:

Digest of United Kingdom Energy Statistics.

Opencast Coal

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of opencast coal mined in the United Kingdom for the last complete year in which figures are available was (a) used for sweetening purposes and (b) went to the power station market. [11987]

Mr. Battle: Of 16,315,000 tonnes of total opencast production in 1996, over half went to the power stations market. The proportion of opencast coal used in the United Kingdom for sweetening purposes is not available.

Radio Advertising (Wealth Warnings)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will remove the requirement for wealth warnings on radio advertising. [11621]

Mrs. Beckett: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham (Mrs. Gillan) on 29 July 1997, Official Report, column 223.

Information Society

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps she is taking to monitor and assess the United Kingdom's progress towards the information society relative to other countries. [12467]

Mrs. Roche: The Department of Trade and Industry commissioned Spectrum Strategy Consultants, as part of the information society initiative, to undertake primary research to assess the UK's progress towards the information society. The aims of the research were to measure levels of ownership and usage of information technology, electronics and communications products by both companies and consumers in the UK, US, Germany, France and Japan. In addition, the study compares attitudes and levels of awareness, and analyses drivers and barriers to change. This builds on a pilot benchmarking study undertaken for DTI in 1996, the publication of which was announced on 25 October 1996 in a written answer to the hon. Member for Bournmouth, East (Mr. Atkinson) Official Report, column 16.

The latest study, entitled "Moving into the Information Society—An International Benchmarking Study" will be published on 4 August and a copy will be placed in the Library of the House. Further copies are available by calling the ISI business infoline on 0345 15 2000, by e-mailing info@isi.gov.uk, or through the ISI website at http://www.isi.gov.uk/isi/mitis.htm.

Advisers

Mr. Flight: To ask the President of the Board of Trade pursuant to her answer to the right hon. Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood) of 24 July, Official Report, column 733, if she has placed any restrictions on her Department's Ministers having outside advisers additional to those listed in her answer. [12251]

Mrs. Beckett: Additional special advisers to DTI Ministers would need my agreement and that of the Prime Minister.

Mr. Hammond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer of 24 July, Official Report, column 733, on advisers, which director of Copywatch has now been appointed an adviser to the Minister for Competition and Consumer Affairs; and if she will make a statement. [12212]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: I am not aware of such claims.

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Gale: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to make internal guidance manuals relating to regional selective assistance available to local authorities and potential inward investors. [12017]

Mrs. Roche: I have no plans to make the internal regional selective assistance guidelines available to local authorities and potential inward investors. The guidelines provide detailed advice for officials operating the scheme and cover sensitive aspects of appraisal and monitoring.

The RSA brochure, which is freely available from Govnerment offices and business links, provides details about the scheme and guidance on how to apply for grants.

Power Stations

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will provide a list of outstanding applications under section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989 for the building of combined-cycle gas turbine power stations currently under consideration by her Department; when she expects each application to be determined; and if she will make a statement. [11608]

Mr. Battle: Applications for combined-cycle gas turbine power stations at the following locations are currently under consideration:

Baglan Bay, Port Talbot (1,200 megawatts)
Capenhurst, Cheshire (65 MW)
Carrington, Greater Manchester (380 MW)
Croydon (80 MW)
Elland, Halifax (56 MW)
Ellesmere Port, Cheshire (65 MW)
Enderby, Leicester (1,125 MW)
Fawley, Hampshire (130 MW)
Great Yarmouth (350 MW)
King's Lynn Phase II, Norfolk (820 MW)
Newcastle (350 MW)
Port Talbot (200 MW)
Rosgoch, Isle of Anglesey (880 MW)
Runcorn, Cheshire (140 MW)
Saltend, Hull (1,200 MW)
Sandbach, Cheshire (58 MW)
Shotton Paper Mill, North Wales (240 MW)
Snodland Paper Mill, Kent (60 MW)
Spalding, Lincolnshire (800 MW)
Swansea (185 MW).

Each application is considered on its merits and I cannot therefore say when the decision on each application will be taken.

Directors and Company Secretaries (Report)

Mr. Healy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many responses she has received to the consultative document, "Disclosure of Directors' and Company Secretaries' particulars"; and when she expects to publish the Government's conclusions. [10935]

Mr. Ian McCartney: To date, my Department has received just over 250 responses. I expect the Government's conclusions to be published later this year.

Teaching Company Scheme

Mr. Stringer: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will respond to the recommendations of the panel which carried out the 1996 quinquennial review of the teaching company scheme; and if she will make a statement. [12468]

Mr. Battle: The report of the 1996 quinquennial review panel of TCS, under the chairmanship of Sir Robin Nicholson, chairman of Pilkington Optronics and former chief scientific adviser to the Government, was submitted in October 1996. Since then, the five Departments of State and four research council which funded TCS at that time have been actively considering the findings of the review panel and its many recommendations.

This review has shown that with a Government investment of £1 million TCS produces net benefits of 58 jobs, £3.6 million worth of value added, £3 million worth of exports, and £13.3 million of additional turnover, as well as increases in research and development expenditure, in participating companies. These are substantial achievements by any standards.

Following the recommendations of the review panel, the Government have decided to extend the scope of TCS to enable organisations in the science, engineering and technology base as well as universities to participate with effect from 1 September 1997. This will allow our firms to make full use of the technological skills and experience that are available throughout the country.

Copies of Sir Robin's report and the Government response are being placed today in the Libraries of both Houses.

Sickness Dismissals

Mr. Stunell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many dismissals on the grounds of sickness have been notified to her Department in each year from 1987. [11089]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Department is not notified of individual dismissals.

Unfair Dismissals

Mr. Stunell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to reduce the qualifying period for eligibility to pursue a case for unfair dismissal; and if she will make a statement. [11090]

Mr. McCartney: The Government have no plans to change the qualifying period for unfair dismissal. The House of Lords has referred to the European Court of Justice questions relating to whether the qualifying period for unfair dismissal is indirectly discriminatory against women. However, the Government are committed to providing fair minimum standards for people at work and expects to consult on proposals for fairness at work later this year.

Civil Servants

Mr. Woodward: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many civil servants are working in each Minister's private office; and how many civil servants in which offices have transferred out of private offices since 1 May. [11940]

Mrs. Beckett: The number of civil servants working in DTI Ministers' offices is not materially different from the number which worked there under the previous Government. Movement of staff in and out of Ministers' offices continues, as it did before 1 May.

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the outcome of her review of her Department's policy towards tackling the problem of the failure of the majority of computer systems to recognise the year 2000. [12022]

Mrs. Roche: I am working closely with Taskforce 2000 on the serious problem facing businesses large and small. Many businesses are aware of the problem, but too few are taking action with the necessary urgency. We are shifting the emphasis of the campaign from general awareness to stimulating action, through many channels of communications, including financial auditors, banks and supply chains. We will be looking at progress in key sectors of the economy, and consulting on what more needs to be done.

On 22 July, I hosted the millennium information technology skills summit, which addressed the growing shortage of skills, which will be aggravated by the century date problem. I have asked participants to bring forward proposals for new initiatives and to make a report to me in September.

37. Mr. Colman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action is being taken by her Department in respect of the millennium compliance of computers. [10063]

Mrs. Roche: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Bradford, West, (Mr. Singh).

Investment Agreement

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment her Department has made of the impact of the multilateral agreement on investment on the Government's plans for corporate taxation, with particular reference to the windfall tax on privatised utilities. [12248]

Mrs. Roche: We do not expect that the multilateral agreement on investment will impact on the Government's plans for corporate taxation, including the windfall tax on privatised utilities.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment her Department has made of the impact of the multilateral agreement on investment on Her Majesty's Government's ability (a) to restrict foreign investment in sensitive sectors and (b) to discriminate in favour of high value-added investments. [12246]

Mrs. Roche: The multilateral agreement on investment will provide for sectoral restrictions on foreign investment. These restrictions must be notified in advance. The UK's list is short, reflecting the liberal approach we take to foreign investment. We would not expect the multilateral agreement on investment to impair the UK's ability to attract high value-added investments.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment her Department has made of the likely impact of the multilateral agreement on investment on the British Government's existing obligations in relation to health, environmental and labour regulations. [12249]

Mrs. Roche: The multilateral agreement on investment is essentially about the non-discriminatory application of regulations as between foreign and domestic investors. Since the UK regulations are generally applied in a non-discriminatory way, they will not be undermined by the agreement.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment her Department has made of the impact of the multilateral agreement on investment on the Government's ability to promote local community development programmes through (a) laws requiring banks to invest in economically deprived areas, (b) development funds marked for local businesses, (c) tax breaks for local companies and (d) other measures. [12247]

Mrs. Roche: The multilateral agreement on investment should not conflict with local community development programmes.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment her Department has made of the impact of the multilateral agreement on investment on the Government's ability to ensure that transnational corporations receiving public funds in assisted areas are required to meet specific performance objectives. [12245]

Mrs. Roche: The multilateral agreement on investment's rules on performance requirements are still under negotiation. The Government's approach is to ensure that such rules are consistent with regional development policies so that it would remain possible to obtain certain commitments as a condition for receiving public funds.

Correspondence

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade pursuant to her oral answer to the right hon. Member for Wokingham, (Mr. Redwood), Official Report, 3 July, column 406, when she (a) wrote and (b) dispatched the letter to the right hon. Member. [7409]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 9 July 1997]: The letter was written on Friday 4 July and was faxed to the right hon. Gentleman's home on Saturday 5 July.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she expects to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Easington, dated 23 May, concerning the surplus in the mineworkers' pension scheme. [8650]

Mr. Battle: I replied to my hon. Friend on 15 July 1997.

Written Answers

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham will receive a substantive answer to each question for which she has received a holding reply. [11836]

Mrs. Beckett: The hon. Member has received substantive answers, including this one, to the 70 questions that she has tabled since 14 May.

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the total cost to public funds of answering the written questions tabled by the hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham (Mrs. Gillan) to her Department in the current Session. [12471]

Mrs. Beckett: The hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham (Mrs. Gillan) has to date tabled 70 questions to my Department. This has cost at least £7,490, using the average cost of answering written questions, Official Report, 4 December 1996, column 656.

Ministerial Duties

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which Ministers will be attending their departmental offices during August; and if she will list the Minister in charge of the Department for each week of the summer adjournment. [10455]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 25 July 1997]: Apart from any holiday they may be taking, all my Ministers will be working during August and attending their DTI offices as necessary for the conduct of business. Ministers will continue to exercise their own responsibilities, although a duty Minister will also cover each day for his or her colleagues as necessary. It follows, therefore, that the ministerial responsibilities of the DTI will be adequately covered during this period.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 27 October 1997

CABINET OFFICE

Millennium Dome

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister without Portfolio how long the millennium dome will remain in place. [12597]

Mr. Mandelson: The millennium experience dome will have a greatly enhanced lifespan following the decision to use PTFE-coated glass fibre for the roof. The Government are now considering its potential long-term uses.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister without Portfolio (1) what representations he has received about the use of PVC in the millennium dome; [12737]

(2) what additives the PVC coating of the millennium dome will contain. [12739]

(3) what discussions have taken place with the European Commission about the use of PVC for the coating of the millennium dome; [12598]

(4) what evidence he has evaluated on PVC as an environmentally suitable material for use in coating the millennium dome; [12596]

(5) what examination has been carried out of the restrictions on the use of PVC in other European countries; [12595]

(6) where the PVC coating of the millennium dome will be manufactured. [12738]

Mr. Mandelson: On 22 August 1997, the New Millennium Experience Company—NMEC—announced its decision to change the roofing material of the Millennium Experience dome from PVC–coated polyester to PTFE–coated glass fibre. The reason for the change was to give the dome a greatly enhanced lifespan, thereby assisting delivery of the Government's aim to ensure an enduring legacy from the millennium experience. The extra longevity and durability of the dome's roof covering as a result of the change to PTFE–coated glass fibre will increase significantly the legacy options which can be considered.

As part of its earlier considerations about PVC–coated polyester, the NMEC required a full environmental review, taking account of all available information in the UK, Europe and elsewhere, of the material's manufacture and disposal. The NMEC was satisfied that the material met all UK and EU environmental requirements. The company had no discussions with the European Commission but did receive representations about the use and safety of PCV from members of the public, from environmental groups including Greenpeace, and from companies involved in the chemical industry. PTFE–coated glass fibre, which is widely used across the world on large tensile roof structures, does not contain plasticising additives and also meets all UK and EU environmental requirements.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Treaty of Amsterdam

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will assess the implications for the legal system of the United Kingdom of ratification of the treaty of Amsterdam, with particular reference to likely changes in court and legal procedures. [12812]

Mr. Hoon: Ratification of the Treaty of Amsterdam will not affect court procedures in the United Kingdom. Under the treaty, civil judicial co-operation is transferred to the Community pillar, but it will not involve the United Kingdom unless we specifically choose to opt into a particular measure or measures.

European Human Rights Convention

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the effect on (a) legal precedents, (b) procedures and (c) the operation of the common law in the United Kingdom of (i) the adoption of the European convention on human rights by the Parliament of the United Kingdom and (ii) the coming into force of the treaty of Amsterdam; and if he will make a statement. [12839]

Mr. Hoon: I have set out our proposals on the incorporation of the European convention on human rights into United Kingdom law in the White Paper, "Rights Brought Home," published on 24 October. The White Paper explains the provisions of the Human Rights Bill introduced in another place on 23 October. As regards the treaty of Amsterdam, I refer the hon. Member to my answer to question No. 198N, UIN 12812.

Gazumping

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what action he is taking to combat gazumping. [12495]

Mr. Hoon: A number of Government Departments are co-operating closely to investigate the whole of the house buying process. My own Department is concentrating on the problem of gazumping with the help of the various institutions whose members provide professional services in the housing market. The various strands of work are being co-ordinated by a ministerial working group comprising Ms Hilary Armstrong, Minister for Local Government Housing, Mr. Nigel Griffiths, Minister for Competition and Consumer Affairs, myself as Chairman and key officials from our Departments.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Tourism

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what estimate he has made of the (a) total number of people employed in the United Kingdom tourism industry and (b) financial contribution to the United Kingdom economy of the tourism industry. [12525]

Mr. Tom Clarke: The latest available figures show that there are around 1.7 million people employed in tourism-related industries in Great Britain. The revenue generated by tourism in the United Kingdom is estimated to be £40 billion for 1996. This is equivalent to approximately 5 per cent. of gross domestic product.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans his Department has to develop a strategy for further development of the United Kingdom tourism industry. [12519]

Mr. Clarke: The Government believe that the further development of tourism can best be achieved by working in full partnership with the industry, local authorities, tourist boards and others. On 10 October we therefore announced an expanded role for the Tourism Forum and the creation of a new forum working group on strategic planning.

Television Reception (Wales)

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what estimate he has made of the number of households in Wales which can receive (a) HTV, (b) BBC Wales transmissions and (c) both. [12548]

Mr. Fisher: Responsibility for the transmission arrangements for television services in the United Kingdom rest with the BBC and the Independent Television Commission. I have been advised that, at present, 98.3 per cent. of the population of Wales has access to television signals from a Welsh transmitter, an English transmitter, or both, which constitute a technically adequate service according to the technical standards agreed by the broadcasters. A total of 96.8 per cent. of the population of Wales can receive HTV, 97.2 per cent. BBC1 Wales and 96.8 per cent. can receive both services.

Tennis Clubs

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what estimate he has made of the number of voluntary-managed tennis clubs in England and Wales; [12708]

(2) what estimate he has made of the percentage of voluntary-managed tennis clubs in England and Wales which are tenants of (a) local authorities, (b) private landowners and (c) public companies. [12709]

Mr. Banks: My Department has made no estimate of the number of voluntary-managed tennis clubs in England and Wales or the type of tenure they might have. However, I am pleased that the Lawn Tennis Association is carrying out a comprehensive survey which should address these issues. The results will be available next year.

Goods and Services (Payments)

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list each of the functions relating to payment for goods or services supplied for which his Department is responsible indicating the management systems purchased, all subcontractors involved in the work, co-operative arrangements with other Departments; and the costs of the systems and processes in the last year for which figures are available. [12565]

Mr. Tom Clarke: The Department for Culture, Media and Sport has purchased the Integra Accounting package from GC McKeown Ltd. to perform the processing of payments for goods and services.

The work to process the payments is undertaken by the Department with some functions outsourced to CSL Managed Services Ltd. It has no co-operative arrangements with other Departments. The Department orders the goods and services, certifies the invoices and enters the information into the computer system. CSL arranges for payment either by payable order, banker's automated clearing service or clearing house automated payment service on behalf of the Department. The cost of implementing the new system during 1996–97 was £112,609 including the cost of some sub-contractors, whilst the cost of the work performed by CSL during 1996–97 was £101,850.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Goods and Services (Payments)

Mr. Todd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list each of the functions relating to payment for goods or services supplied for which his Department is responsible indicating the management systems purchased, all subcontractors involved in the work, co-operative arrangements with other Departments; and the costs of the systems and processes in the last year for which figures are available. [12563]

Dr. David Clark: For this purpose, I have responsibility for the Cabinet Office, including the Prime Minister's Office and the Office of Public Service and its agencies, and the Central Office of Information.

In my Department the functions relating to the payment of goods and services are generally performed by integrated accounting services supplied either by a bureau or by in-house development, using either bespoke or package accounting software.

During the year ending March 1997 the functions of the Cabinet Office, core OPS and the Civil Service College were supplied by the Chessington computer centre. Other arrangements were as follows:

Agency
COI	software package	Computer Associates
SAFE	software package	Tetra
GCDA	software package	arrangement with SAFE
CCTA	software package	Systems Union
TBA	bespoke system	supported by the Unisys
PACE	bureau service	supplied by the DOE

Although there were no specific sub-contractual arrangements the COI system is run on hardware supplied and maintained by Hewlett Packard and SAFE has a similar contract with Connectivity Plus. CCTA has a maintenance contract with Touchstone Computers and a management arrangement with Chessington Computer Services.

The total costs of these systems and services during the year ending March 1997 was £334,093, excluding VAT. However, the Cabinet Office, core OPS and the Civil Service College have now replaced the Chessington bureaux service with new package software supplied by Systems Union.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the number and proportion of (a) Asians and (b) Afro-Caribbeans in each grade in the civil service. [11103]

Dr. David Clark [pursuant to his reply, 30 July 1997, c. 314-15.]: Information on the ethnic origin of civil servants is collected using a voluntary, self-classification, confidential questionnaire. The number and proportion of Asian and Afro-Caribbean civil servants, by grade equivalents, who have submitted a questionnaire, as at 1 April 1996, is set out in the table.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Drugs Tsar

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Council how many names were selected as a result of the first sift of applicants for the position of drugs tsar. [12932]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The recruitment and assessment service performed an initial sift of all 202 applications for the post of UK anti-drugs co-ordinator. This resulted in the identification of 57 particularly strong candidates. Ministers considered these applications very carefully before interviewing the seven strongest candidates.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Council how many individuals applied for the post of drugs tsar, broken down by main occupational category of applicant. [12931]

Mrs. Taylor: A total of 202 applications for the post of UK anti-drugs co-ordinator were received from a very diverse range of candidates by the deadline of 5 September. A breakdown by occupational category cannot be provided without disproportionate cost.

TREASURY

VAT

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the (a) procedure and (b) financial effect of VAT base capping in respect of the United Kingdom's contribution to the European Union general budget for 1998. [12283]

Mrs. Liddell: VAT capping was first introduced for the EC budget in 1988, at a rate of 55 per cent. of 1 per cent. of each member state's gross national product. Under the current own resources decision the VAT capping rate is being reduced progressively from 55 per cent. in 1994 to 50 per cent. in 1999. The 50 per cent. rate has applied to Greece, Spain, Ireland and Portugal since 1995. The VAT capping arrangements are broadly neutral for the UK because any change resulting from the application of the capping mechanism is offset a year in arrears by an equal but opposite change to our abatement.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what legislation he plans to introduce for the implementation of value added tax at the point of origin for intra-European Union imports and exports; [12532]

(2) what proposals he has relating to trans-European Union harmonisation of VAT. [12485]

Dawn Primarolo: None. The current EC VAT system, with tax accruing in the member state of consumption for intra-Community transactions, remains in force in the absence of unanimous agreement to change it. The European Commission has yet to produce legislative proposals for changes to the current system, and so discussions on the merits or otherwise of a move to an origin-based system have not even begun. The Government, while supportive of efforts to simplify and modernise the current EC VAT system, is opposed to further unnecessary harmonisation at the Community level.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to review the system of value added taxation in relation to cereal bars, morning bars, and similar products; and if he will make a statement. [12543]

Dawn Primarolo: Cereal bars and similar products, other than cakes, are liable to VAT at the standard rate. I have no plans to change their taxation.

EU Budget

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the correction of budgetary imbalances as experienced in the preliminary draft European Union budget for 1998, and its effect on the United Kingdom contribution to the European Union budget. [12511]

Mrs. Liddell: The sterling value of the United Kingdom (UK) abatement contained in the 1998 preliminary draft budget—2,066 mecu—will be determined by the pound/ecu exchange rate which applies at the end of this calendar year. If the rate were to remain at the level it was at on 30 September—£1 = 1.4501 ecu—the reduction to the UK's contribution due to the abatement would be £1,425 million in 1998.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the actual and projected European Union budgets for (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98 and (c) 1998–99; what are the gross and net contributions from the United Kingdom (i) in sterling, (ii) in ecus and (iii) as a percentage of all national contributions in each year; and if he will make a statement. [12290]

Mrs. Liddell: The European Community budgets on a calendar year basis.

The table sets out the information requested in respect of the United Kingdom's gross contribution before abatement for the calendar years 1996, 1997 and 1998.

	1996	1997	1998
Total contributions by Member States	72,160 mecu	77,372 mecu	82,313 mecu
UK gross contribution, before abatement,	11,000 mecu	11,332 mecu	13,631 mecu and percentage of total contributions	15.25 per cent.	14,65 per cent.	16.56 per cent.
UK gross contribution, before abatement, (sterling)	£8,825 million	£8,355 million	£9,400 million

Sources:

Figures for total contributions and UK gross contribution before abatement (mecu) taken from: 1996 Supplementary and Amending Budget; 1997 draft Supplementary and Amending Budget: 1998 Draft Budget. The sterling equivalent of the UK figures have been derived by converting at the following exchange rates:

1996 £1 = 1.2467 ecu; 1997 £ = 1.3564 ecu; 1998 £ = 1.4501 ecu.

The UK's net contribution for 1996, expressed in sterling and based on the cash transactions which took place during the year, was £2,352 million. The current estimate on the same basis for 1997 is £1,342 million. These net contribution figures include adjustments and corrections made in respect of our VAT and GNP-based contributions, of our abatement and of Community spending for earlier years. The figures are thus not directly comparable to the gross revenue raised in respect of particular Community budgets.

As is usual, the Government will provide an estimate of the net contribution for the Community budgetary year 1998 in the annual White Paper "Statement on the Community Budget", once the Budget for that year has been adopted and when the revenue and spending requirements for the year are known.

The figures in the table and the amounts for the net contribution demonstrate the wide fluctuation to which the UK's contributions to the EC budget are subject. These fluctuations are principally due to a range of technical factors such as the timing of our payments and receipts, adjustments and corrections to our contributions in earlier years, exchange rate movements and changes and corrections in the value of the UK's abatement.

Single European Currency

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will commission studies on the impact of a single currency on the number and variety of wholesale trade and retail enterprises in the United Kingdom. [12528]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government have established a business advisory group to consider the practical implications of economic and monetary union for businesses, whether or not the United Kingdom were to join the single currency. A wide range of organisations, including those representing shops and small firms, are represented on the advisory group and working parties reporting to it.

Sterling Coinage

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are his Department's proposals for dealing with sterling coinage going out of circulation over the next five years. [12518]

Mrs. Liddell: The 50p piece, introduced in October 1969, is the only coin which is currently planned to be withdrawn from circulation over the next five years. It is due to be phased out of circulation and will cease to be legal tender on 28 February 1998. It is being replaced by a smaller and lighter version which was introduced into circulation on 1 September 1997.

EMU (Publicity)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what EU funding his Department has sought in relation to publicity in respect of the introduction of European monetary union; in respect of which projects or publications such funding was sought; which bodies produced such publicity; and what control his Department exercised over the content of any publicity. [12968]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government have applied for financial assistance to meet half the costs of producing and distributing a guide, "EMU Practical Information for Business". This amounts to around £21,000. The guide was produced entirely by Her Majesty's Treasury to help raise awareness in British business of the practical and strategic implications that the euro would have for their operations whether or not the United Kingdom were to join. Copies of the guide are available in the Library of the House.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total expenditure budget on (a) official expenditure and (b) overseas travel by Ministers and officials by his Department in the current Session. [12586]

Mrs. Liddell: Between 1 May and 20 October spending on official hospitality by Ministers and officials amounted to £11,400; and £317,100 has been spent on overseas travel and subsistence.

Monetary Policy Committee

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 18 June, Official Report, columns 229–30, what guidelines the Monetary Policy Committee has adopted in respect of public comments by its members. [12352]

Mrs. Liddell: The minutes of the Monetary Policy Committee meetings record the votes of individual members. Members of the MPC are free to discuss their views in public speeches or comments to the press, but are not permitted to disclose the content of unpublished minutes of the MPC.

The Committee has, moreover, adopted some guidelines on public comments by members which are designed, inter alia, to avoid confusion around the time of MPC meetings. In particular, the Committee has decided that members should avoid giving speeches and contact with the media for a period of eight days from the Friday before the MPC meeting to the Friday after the announcement of the decision on interest rates. In the months when the inflation report is published, this period extends until publication of the report—typically the following Wednesday. The Committee decided that this arrangement should cover public discussion of the UK economy and the decisions and processes of the MPC, but not other issues which are outside the work of the Committee.

DEFENCE

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many individuals took part in the service volunteers programme at the chemical defence establishment during 1996. [12201]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I asked the chief executive to write to my hon. Friend and understand he did so on 20 August 1997.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 20 August 1997:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the numbers of service volunteers as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency.

During 1996 forty two service volunteers took part in various studies as part of service volunteers programme run by the Chemical and Biological Defence Sector of DERA at Porton Down.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the (a) scientific journals and (b) other open publications in which staff from the medical division of the chemical defence establishment published papers in 1991 and 1992 arising out of their work and research, indicating the date of publication. [12202]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I asked the chief executive to write to my hon. Friend and understand he did so on 20 August.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 20 August 1997:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about scientific journals and open publications in which staff from the medical division at Porton Down have published papers as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency.

Available databases show that during the years 1991 and 1992 staff from the medical division of the Chemical and Biological Defence Sector of DERA at Porton Down published papers in the following scientific journals.

In 1991:- Adverse Drug Reactions and Toxicological Review; International Journal of Experimental Pathology; Human Experimental Toxicology; British Journal of Plastic Surgery; Proceedings of the British Toxicology Society; York, England, UK, September 20–21 1990 published in Human Experimental Toxicology; Journal of Biomechanics.

In 1992:- British Journal of Surgery; Human Experimental Toxicology; Clinical Intensive Care; Psychopharmacology; Journal of Audiovisual Media in Medicine; Annals of the Royal College of Surgeons England.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence at what concentrations of the chemical agent CN the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency has assessed that the long-term clinical effects occur; and when this assessment was made. [12184]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I asked the chief executive to write to my hon. Friend and understand he did so on 20 August 1997.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 20 August 1997:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about concentrations of the agent CN assessed by DERA as causing long-term clinical effects as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency.

CN, chloracetophenone, belongs to a group of agents referred to as tear gases; these cause sensory irritation to the eyes, nose and skin.

DERA has not assessed the concentrations of CN that cause long term clinical effects. Most of the information concerning long-term effects in man are based on case reports from the United States, following widespread use during the 1960s Civil Rights Riots. These reports contain no reliable information regarding the concentrations of CN that produced such effects.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what doses of mustard gas have been assessed by DERA as causing scarring of the conjunctiva and permanent damage. [12185]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I asked the chief executive to write to my hon. Friend and understand he did so on 20 August 1997.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 20 August 1997:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about doses of mustard gas assessed by DERA as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency.

The Chemical and Biological Defence Sector of DERA has not assessed the dose levels of mustard gas which cause scarring of the conjunctiva and permanent damage.

However DERA is aware of case reports from the United States which suggest that doses of between 400 and 800 milligrams per cubic metre per minute of mustard vapour result in corneal damage with ulceration and scarring of the conjunctiva.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what research has been carried out at the chemical defence establishment into a sensory irritant known as 1-methoxycycloheptatriene since 1967; what was the object of this research; when this research was carried out; and what was the conclusion of this research. [12177]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I asked the chief executive to write to my hon. Friend and understand he did so on 20 August 1997.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 20 August 1997:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about research into the sensory irritant known as 1-methoxycycloheptatriene (MCHT) as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency.

The Chemical and Biological Defence Sector of DERA at Porton Down investigated MCHT in the period between 1974 and the mid-1980s. The studies were intermittent and designed to investigate the sensory irritancy and safety of the compound.

The studies concluded that the advantages of using 1-methoxycycloheptatriene compared to conventional sensory irritants such as CS were not significant.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the chemical defence establishment's assessment of the effect on human health in (a) the short-term and (b) the long-term of one-off exposure to oleoresin capsicum; what research has been carried out by the chemical defence establishment into oleoresin capsicum since 1967; what was the purpose of this research; when this research was conducted; and what was the conclusion of this research. [12181]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I asked the chief executive to write to my hon. Friend and understand he did so on 20 August 1997.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 20 August 1997:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the effects of and research into oleoresin capsicum as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency.

Oleoresin capsicum (OC) is a natural oil of the chilli pepper. Chemically, it is a complex mixture of over one hundred volatile compounds, in which capsaicin is a principle compound. The Chemical and Biological Defence Sector of DERA at Porton Down has not conducted any practical research on oleoresin capsicum, but it has used capsaicin as a positive control in a number of animal tissue studies designed to evaluate the relative sensory irritancy of a number of compounds.

As far as the effects of oleoresin capsicum on human health are concerned, it is reported in the technical literature that short term exposure causes pain and irritation of the membranes lining the eyes, nose and mouth. Blistering and a rash have been shown to occur after chronic or prolonged exposure of the skin. Ingestion of capsicum may cause acute stinging of the lips, tongue and mouth, and may lead to vomiting and diarrhoea with large doses. Inhalation of the vapours may also cause significant irritation of the airways and prolonged cough.

In the long-term, a single acute exposure to OC may affect the temperature regulatory mechanisms of the body and can affect the neurological system producing long-term insensitivity to pain.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the chemical defence establishment's evaluation of the effects of short-term exposure to mustard gas. [12175]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I asked the chief executive to write to my hon. Friend and understood he did so on 20 August 1997.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 20 August 1997:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the evaluation of the effects of short-term exposure to mustard gas as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency.

Mustard gas, (bis (2-chloroeythyl) sulphide), belongs to a group of chemical warfare agents known as vesicant or blistering agents.

DERA's evaluation, based on historical evidence including casualty reports from the First World War and more recent nursing of Iranian patients in the UK in the mid-1980s, indicates that short term exposure to mustard gas affects the skin, eyes and respiratory tract. Additionally, the evidence available from literature and practical studies is that the gastrointestinal tract, reproductive organs and bone marrow are affected if high doses are absorbed into the body. The effects on the skin consist of reddening followed by blistering; similar effects are seen at the other affected areas. Once the blisters rupture, ulceration of the skin follows; these injuries take a long while to heal. The effects on the eyes, respiratory tract and gastrointestinal tract are similar to those seen in the skin. Initially the tissues become inflamed and swollen. Eventually, the protective membranes break down and areas of ulceration result.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the chemical defence establishment's evaluation of the effects of short-term exposure to lewisite. [12179]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I asked the chief executive to write to my hon. Friend and understand he did so on 20 August 1997.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 20 August 1997:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the evaluation of the effects of short-term exposure to lewisite as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency.

Lewisite is one of a group of chemical warfare agents known as vesicants or blistering agents.

The Chemical and Biological Defence Sector of DERA's evaluation based on US human studies from the 1940s and continuing Porton Down animal studies of the effects of short-term exposure to lewisite are that both liquid and vapour forms result in chemical burns to the skin, eyes and respiratory tract. Lewisite injuries are immediately painful. The potential for widespread damage to the internal organs is significant.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what research has been carried out at the chemical defence establishment into perfuoroisobutene since 1967; what was the object of this research; when this research was carried out; and what was the conclusion of this research. [12178]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I asked the chief executive to write to my hon. Friend and understand he did so on 20 August 1997.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 20 August 1997:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about research into perfluorisobutene as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency.

Since 1967 some research into perfluorisobutene has been undertaken at the Chemical and Biological Defence Sector of DERA at Porton Down to assess whether its use as a chemical weapon would pose a potential hazard to the UK Armed Forces. This research encompassed: material producibility, material toxicity, an assessment of material dispersion, the performance of UK CBD protective equipment in providing protection against this material and possible methods of providing pretreatment and treatment against poisoning.

The bulk of this research was conducted during the 1980s with some research on protective measures had medical treatment still ongoing. It has been concluded that this material does have potential as a possible chemical weapon agent and that it does pose a potential hazard to UK Armed Forces. As a consequence of this research certain equipment modifications have been introduced.

Porton Down Staff Newsletter

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current security classification of the newsletter produced for the staff of the chemical defence establishment at Porton Down; how often this newsletter is produced; and when this newsletter was first produced. [12182]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I asked the chief executive to write to my hon. Friend and understand he did so on 20 August 1997.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 20 August 1997:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the staff newsletter at Porton Down as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency.

Internal newsletters at Porton Down have been produced in many different forms over the years. They are not usually classified but are not generally circulated outside the MOD.

CBD News was first produced in its current format in February 1995. It is usually published monthly, although there has recently been a three month gap between editions. It is not classified but is only distributed to staff at Porton Down and a small number of staff elsewhere in DERA and MOD.

I hope this is helpful.

Goods and Services (Payments)

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list each of the functions relating to payment for goods or services supplied for which his Department is responsible indicating the management systems purchased, all sub-contractors involved in the work, co-operative arrangements with other Departments; and the costs of the systems and processes in the last year for which figures are available. [12564]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Defence Bills Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Mr. I. S. Elrick to Mr. Mark Todd, dated 27 October 1997:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about payment for MOD goods and services as, in the main, this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Bills Agency.

The Defence Bills Agency is the Primary bill payment authority for MOD but the Meteorological Office, Hydrographic Office and Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA) also undertake specified bill payment action. Set out below is the information you requested for each operating system.

The Defence Bills Agency operates a bespoke system, developed in-house, which integrates contract control functionality with the bill payment system. Certain support functions are provided using systems supplied by AVCO Systems Ltd and ROCC Computers Ltd. During 1996–97 the system was operated on an ICL 3965 Dual Node Mainframe. The operating platform has been uprated in 1997–98 to an ICL SX 485–20 to cope with the additional requirements arising from the introduction of Resource Accounting. The operating cost of the system in 1996–97 was £2.4 million (excluding VAT).

During 1996–97 the Meteorological Office used a Ross purchase ledger run on a VAX machine. DERA assisted in implementing this system and supported both hardware and software. The operating costs of the systems and processes was £222,000 (excluding VAT).

The Hydrographic Office used Prophecy Version 2 running on a DEC Alpha box under UNIX. Software supply, maintenance and development was provided by Radius Computer Systems Ltd. The operating cost of the bill payment systems and processes was £66,000 (excluding VAT) during 1996–97.

During 1996–97 DERA used Digital Equipment Company VAX hardware running Ross Classic software. No sub-contractors were used in developing or operating the system during 1996–97. The operating cost of the systems and processes was £1.8 million (excluding VAT).

Ministry of Defence Police

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Ministry of Defence Police agency for 1997–98. [12580]

Dr. Reid: The following key targets have been set for the Ministry of Defence Policy agency:

Crown Prosecution Service files: to exceed the provincial Home Department police forces' 74 per cent. average rate of compliance with the time limits set for the preparation of CPS files.

To determine a benchmark for satisfaction from victims of crime in the service provided by MDP.

To meet and maintain the national 1996 British crime survey standard of 80 per cent. for public satisfaction with the MDP's policing and security services.

By 1 April 1998 to have achieved the standard of Investors in People.

By 31 March 1998 to have reduced the force complement to a level at or below 3,750 officers.

By 31 March 1998 to implement the additional area policing teams approved by Ministers.

To achieve the level of efficiency savings of 2.5 per cent. prescribed within Departmental and efficiency plans.

Overseas Security Forces (Training)

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what safeguards are in place to ensure United Kingdom troops are not involved in training overseas security forces later used in internal repression. [12347]

Dr. Reid: The provision of training for overseas security forces is a valuable tool in furthering the Government's defence and foreign policy objectives. Requests for training are considered on a case-by-case basis. Close contact is maintained between the Ministry of Defence and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and training would not be provided where we considered it would contribute to human rights violations. Even where human rights is not specifically covered, training provided by our military forces supports Government human rights policy by exposing overseas students to human rights standards and helping them develop an understanding of how armed forces operate in a democratic society.

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what training United Kingdom troops have given to the Kenyan army and security forces. [12348]

Dr. Reid: It has been the practice in the past not to release details of military assistance provided to other countries on the grounds that this information is confidential between Governments and disclosure would risk damaging our international relations. This practice is now being reviewed against the background of the Government's commitment to openness. I will write to my hon. Friend once the review is complete.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what training of members of the Colombian police force in Colombia is being undertaken by the SAS. [12846]

Dr. Reid: Any comment on such matters could cause harm in terms of one or more of the defence, security or international relations exemptions in the "Code of Practice on Access to Government Information".

Energy and Environmental Education

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans his Department has to review its relationship with non-governmental organisations involved in energy and environmental education. [12546]

Mr. Spellar: My Department's relationships with non-governmental organisations involved in energy or environmental training has extended to contracting for such training when required. We have introduced more in-house environmental training, which includes energy education, to meet most of our current needs. There will nevertheless be a continuing requirement for specialist NGO training to meet the needs of staff in key environmental protection and energy appointments.

Exports (Indonesia)

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the normal offset arrangement for Indonesia for purchases above 500 million rupiahs; and what percentage offset was required as part of the deal to export Hawk trainers to Indonesia. [12341]

Mr. Spellar: For contracts over 500 million rupiahs, a 100 per cent. obligation is incurred. The contracts signed in 1993 and 1996 for the export of Hawk trainers to Indonesia were both in excess of 500 million rupiahs.

Northern Ireland

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the potential benefits from use of the private finance initiative in his Department's projects in Northern Ireland. [12959]

Dr. Reid: I have given approval for two pilot PFI projects to be run to explore the feasibility of the Army making use of the private finance initiative in Northern Ireland. One involves the provision of families quarters in Ballymena, Antrim and Lisburn areas and the other the provision of living and working accommodation and facilities management in Lisburn. A briefing day for firms interested in the families quarters project was held on 20 October 1997 but it is too early to assess the potential benefits if the PFI proves practicable.

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the security implications of non-civil service arrangements for the work presently carried out in his Department by Building Management (Northern Ireland). [12958]

Dr. Reid: Management, construction and maintenance of the Defence estate in Northern Ireland is carried out by a combination of commercial firms, MOD civil servants and service personnel. We are currently reviewing the headquarters Northern Ireland estate organisation, including the Building Management (Northern Ireland) element. As part of this we shall be taking into account the financial and personnel, as well as security, implications of any proposals for change.

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for replacing civilian workers with Army personnel in his Department's establishments in Northern Ireland. [12960]

Dr. Reid: The hon. Gentleman will understand that the military and civilian manpower mix in MOD establishments in Northern Ireland is kept under review to provide the most efficient and cost effective use of personnel.

Higher Education Sponsorship

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many and what percentage of (a) women and (b) men in full-time higher education receive financial aid or sponsorship from the (i) Army, (ii) Royal Navy and (iii) Royal Air Force. [12923]

Dr. Reid: I will write to my hon. Friend and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Parliament Buildings

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations his Department has made on the financing of new buildings for the European Parliament in Brussels and Strasbourg. [12510]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We have consistently pressed for value for money and sound financial practice in all European institutions. Overall ceilings for expenditure are set by the Council, but within that, spending by the European Parliament on building and other programmes is a matter for the Parliament in the first place, subject to scrutiny of its spending by the European Court of Auditors. We have not made separate representations.

European Courts

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list (a) those functions of final decision that will lie within the competence of the European Community Court of Justice in Luxembourg in respect of (i) criminal and (ii) civil cases and (b) those functions concerning human rights that will be within the competence of the European Court of Human Rights in Strasbourg, following the coming into force of the treaty of Amsterdam. [12848]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The European Court of Justice in Luxembourg will continue to have jurisdiction to give preliminary rulings on questions of Community law in cases referred to it by courts or tribunals of a member state pursuant to article 177 of the treaty establishing the European Community. It will also acquire jurisdiction to give preliminary rulings on questions relating to certain instruments adopted under the revised title VI of the treaty on European Union—police and judicial co-operation in criminal matters—in cases referred to it by courts or tribunals in any member state which, by a declaration, accepts that jurisdiction. We do not intend to accept that jurisdiction.

The treaty of Amsterdam does not affect the jurisdiction of the European Court of Human Rights in Strasbourg, which is governed by the European convention for the protection of human rights and freedoms, and the protocols thereto.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which (a) criminal and (b) civil matters relating to the European Community and Union will come within the competence of the European Community Court of Justice either as direct jurisdiction, by case law, or after consultation by national court subsequent to the coming into force of the treaty of Amsterdam. [12866]

Mr. Henderson: The European Court of Justice will continue to have jurisdiction to give preliminary rulings on questions of Community law in cases, whether criminal or civil, which may be referred to it by courts or tribunals in a member state pursuant to article 177 of the treaty establishing the European Community. It will also acquire jurisdiction to give preliminary rulings on questions relating to certain instruments adopted under title VI of the Treaty on European Union as revised by the treaty of Amsterdam—police and judicial co-operation in criminal matters—in cases referred to it by courts or tribunals in any member state which, by a declaration, accepts that jurisdiction. We do not intend to accept that jurisdiction.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which matters concerning human rights will be determined by (a) the Court of European Human Rights in Strasbourg and (b) the European Court of Justice in Luxembourg, following the coming into force of the treaty of Amsterdam. [12867]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The treaty of Amsterdam does not affect the jurisdiction of the European Court of Human Rights in Strasbourg, which is governed by the European convention for the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms, and the protocols thereto. The European Court of Justice in Luxembourg will have jurisdiction in the field of fundamental rights only with regard to action of the Community institutions, in so far as the Court has jurisdiction under the treaties establishing the European Communities and under the Treaty on European Union.

EU Funding (Political Groups)

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much European Communities funding was made available to the (a) PSE, (b) PPE, (c) ELDR and (d) EdN groups of the European Parliament in the last year for which figures are available. [12291]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The total amount of EU funding made available to the political groups in the European Parliament in 1995 was 12.055 mecu—£17.5 million. The 1997 budget allows for 12.5 mecu—£18 million.

We are awaiting figures broken down against individual political groups. I will write to the hon. Member when this information is received.

European Monitoring Centre on Racism and Xenophobia

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 1 July, Official Report, columns 90–91, what aspects of culture will be monitored by the European monitoring centre on racism and xenophobia. [12331]

Mr. Doug Henderson: It will be for the centre itself to decide on its work programme. The monitoring centre must, however, carry out its tasks within the limits of Community competence.

Western European Union

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Agenda 2000 applicant countries will be expected to treat membership of the Western European Union as acquis communautaires. [12529]

Mr. Doug Henderson: No. Membership of the European Union does not require membership of the Western European Union, which is a separate organisation.

European Commission (Special Advisers)

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many special advisers are employed at the European Commission; for which commissioners they work; what is their nationality; what is their total pay; and if he will make a statement. [12327]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Each Commissioner is entitled to appoint one paid special adviser. Special advisers are not full-time employees of the Commission. They are consulted ad hoc, and paid per day worked. Total pay for all special advisers in 1996 was 165,000 ecu. They are not selected on the basis of nationality.

Turkey

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions his Department has had with the Treasury over the cost of the measures proposed by the European Commission to deepen European Union relations with Turkey; and if he will make a statement. [12344]

Mr. Doug Henderson: My Department is in regular contact with the Treasury about the European Commission's proposals for deepening relations with Turkey. The UK supports the Commission's view that these should be financed from existing resources under the customs union protocol agreed by the Council in 1995 and the MEDA regulation.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the European Commission's proposal to increase co-operation between the EU and Turkey (a) on the environment, (b) on social development, (c) on justice and home affairs and (d) on humanitarian issues. [12328]

Mr. Henderson: We welcome the European Commission's proposal to increase co-operation in the above areas, which would benefit EU member states and Turkey.

Cyprus

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's policy on the accession of Cyprus to the EU. [12530]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We support Cyprus' accession to the EU. We hope that this will be on the basis of a settlement, leading to the accession of a bizonal, bicommunal federation. This will bring benefits to both communities on the island.

European Union (Co-operation)

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the policy of Her Majesty's Government on increasing co-operation in the European Union at the consular and diplomatic level; and if he will make a statement. [12316]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The obligation on diplomatic and consular missions of Member states to co-operate in implementing common measures adopted by the Council was created by article J.6 of the Maastricht Treaty. That obligation is relocated but unchanged in article J.10 of the draft Amsterdam treaty. We are committed to ensuring effective implementation of agreed EU policies.

Prince Programme

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much of the Prince programme funding has been spent in the United Kingdom since the programme's inception; on what it has been spent; what plans he has in respect of further projects; what safeguards he has put in place to prevent its use for promotional purposes; and if he will make a statement. [12343]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Total prince spending in the UK in 1996—the first full year of the programme—was around 450,000 ecu. Of this, around 400,000 ecu was spent on Citizens First and 50,000 ecu on information about the Intergovernmental conference.

We are committed to raising the profile of Citizens First in the UK as we fully support its aim of informing people about their rights and opportunities in the EU. We will be helping to publicise the second phase of the programme over the next few months.

We have also applied for funding from Prince to meet half the costs of our "EMU: Information for Business" guide. The guide was produced by HM Treasury to help raise awareness in British business of the practical implications of EMU for their operations whether the UK were to join or not.

We believe that the British people have a right to accurate information about the EU, whether from Government Departments or from the Community institutions.

EU (Estonian Accession)

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the impact of provisions relating to a common foreign and security policy in the draft Amsterdam treaty on the accession of Estonia to the EU. [12537]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Nothing in the CFSP provisions in the draft Amsterdam treaty will affect Estonia's eligibility to join the EU. Estonia, like every other applicant, would be expected to take on all the obligations in the treaty.

EU Citizenship

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's policy towards the recommendations contained in the second report from the Commission on citizenship of the Union (EC Cons Doc 8856/97). [12476]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We welcome the report's recommendation that the EU improve citizens' awareness of their rights within the Union. In support of the aim, we are working to raise the profile of the Citizens First programme in the UK. We also agree with the need to ensure that citizen's rights are enforced.

The report claims that EU citizens will not have tangible evidence of the full effects of the internal market without the elimination of border controls. The UK's position is clear: our border controls are not incompatible with the proper functioning of the internal market, including the free movement of persons. We do not intend to eliminate the UK's border controls, which are guaranteed in the treaty of Amsterdam.

Child Trafficking (West Africa)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to meet representatives from (a) anti-slavery and child welfare organisations, (b) the United Nations and (c) west African Governments to discuss the trafficking of children in west Africa; and if he will make a statement. [12895]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We deplore the practice of child trafficking. We have given strong support to the work of the United Nations, including the special rapporteur on the sale of children, in monitoring and combating it. We will continue to work for an end to the practice with relevant Governments and non-governmental organisations concerned with the issue.

Dependent Territories

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has for consultation with the Governments of dependent territories during the current review of their status. [12961]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have begun consultations with the Governments of the dependent territories. The Government of Gibraltar was already considering proposals for constitutional change before we announced this review. We will therefore be looking at these proposals separately.

Treaty of Amsterdam

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list by section those aspects of the Amsterdam treaty which will require primary legislation to amend any United Kingdom Act of Parliament. [12849]

Mr. Doug Henderson: It will be necessary to amend section 1(2) of the European Communities Act 1972 to give effect in domestic law to those provisions of the treaty of Amsterdam and those protocols adopted at Amsterdam which will form part of the Community legal order. These are articles 2 to 9, article 12, and the other provisions of the treaty so far as they relate to those articles; as well as the protocols adopted at Amsterdam other than the protocol on article J.7 of the treaty on European Union.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what copies of the provisional draft treaty of Amsterdam were available in the United Kingdom between its publication and 2 October; when and by whom the substantive text of the treaty, as signed on 2 October, was published in the United Kingdom; what significant changes in the text were made between the provisional and signatory versions of the treaty; and if he will place in the Library a full list of such changes. [12811]

Mr. Henderson: Copies of the following versions of the draft treaty of Amsterdam were sent to Parliament on these dates:

CONF/4001: 18 June
CONF/4002: 16 July
CONF/4004: 7 August
CONF/4005: 26 September

The final version of the treaty—CONF 4007—was sent to Parliament on 10 October, and will be published shortly as a command paper. No major changes were made in the text of the treaty between the provisional version and the treaty as signed. There were a number of declarations made which do not form part of the treaty.

Colombia

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what ministerial visits have been made to Colombia since 1 August; and if Ministers visited camps containing displaced peasant farmers forced from their lands by paramilitary groups. [12786]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I am the only member of the Government to have visited Colombia since 1 August. I did not visit any of the camps containing displaced people, although I met and discussed the issue with their representatives.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions his Department has had with the Colombian Government about the situation of internally displaced peasant farmers in Colombia; and if he will make a statement. [12804]

Mr. Lloyd: The plight of the displaced people of Colombia is a symptom of the internal conflict in that country. During my visit to Colombia last month, I raised with the Colombian Government our concerns about a variety of humanitarian problems resulting from the internal security situation, including that of displaced people.

Official Functions and Conferences

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the (a) official entertainment functions and (b) conferences which have been held at (i) Chevening and (ii) 1 Carlton Gardens since May 1997. [12921]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The following official functions have taken place at Chevening:

Conference organised by the Department of Social Services;
British German Economic Committee;
Conference arranged by the Department of Trade and Industry;
FCO Board of Management;
Conference for GCHQ.

In the majority of these cases these discussions required participants to stay overnight.

At 1 Carlton gardens the following functions have been held:

21 May: Dinner for the governor of Hong Kong
24 May: Lunch for the Japanese Foreign Minister
12 June: Dinner for the Crown Prince of Nepal
7 July: Lunch for the Omani Foreign Minister
10 July: Lunch for the Commonwealth Ministerial Action Group
21 July: Dinner for the Amir of Qatar
23 July: Lunch for the French Foreign Minister
8 September: Dinner for the American ambassador
10 September: Dinner for the Luxembourg Foreign Minister

11 September: Lunch for the Austrian Foreign Minister

12 September: Lunch for the Commonwealth Ministerial Action Group

12 September: Tea for the Italian Foreign Minister

20 October: Tea for the Belgian Foreign Minister

21 October: Lunch for the American ambassador

22 October: Lunch for the chief executive of the Hong Kong special administrative region.

OSCE Vienna Conference

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he wrote to the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee inviting him to nominate a member to attend the Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe conference in Vienna on politico-military aspects of security. [12802]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I wrote to the Chairman of the Foreign Affairs Select Committee on 30 July. I invited the Committee to nominate a representative to join the UK delegation to the conference on the code of conduct on politico-military aspects of security in Vienna from 22 to 24 September.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reasons an invitation for a particular parliamentarian to attend the OSCE conference on politico-military aspects of security was addressed to the Foreign Affairs Committee and not to the OSCE delegation. [12803]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The conference in Vienna from 22 to 24 September to review the code of conduct on politico-military aspects of security was the first such conference since the code's adoption in December 1994. I addressed the invitation to the Foreign Affairs Select Committee, rather than the UK delegation to the OSCE parliamentary assembly, because the democratic control of the military in Europe is a subject of wider, foreign affairs interest.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Goods and Services (Payments)

Mr. Todd: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list each of the functions relating to payment for goods or services supplied for which his Department is responsible indicating the management systems purchased, all subcontractors involved in the work, co-operative arrangements with other Departments; and the costs of the systems and processes in the last year for which figures are available. [12566]

The Attorney-General: The position in relation to the Department for which I am responsible is as follows:

The Crown Prosecution Service

The Crown Prosecution Service has 13 geographical areas, a central case work group and a national headquarters. Each area has its own accounts section which is responsible for handling invoices for goods and services received and claims from prosecution witnesses in respect of expense claims for attendance at court.

In 1996–97 the CPS employed Chessington Computer Services Ltd. to process and make payments to suppliers and to witnesses. The software used by Chessington Computer Services Ltd. was the management accounting information system, MAISY. The cost of this service was £723,894.

There are no sub-contractors involved in making payments. The internal process costs could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Serious Fraud Office

The Serious Fraud Office use a payment processing package known as Purchase Ledger supplied by CEDARDATA.

The majority of payments are made through Paymaster by payable order or, if to another Government Department, by transfer. No sub-contractors are involved.

The cost of processing payments in 1996–97 is estimated at £32,500.

Treasury Solicitor's Department

All payments for goods and services supplied to Treasury Solicitor's Department and my own office are processed by the Treasury Solicitor's Department's financial accounting and information system, FAIS, which uses Image software supplied by TABS Ltd.

The majority of payments are made through Paymaster by payable order or, if to another Government Department, by transfer. In addition, the Department has recently implemented a facility which enables payments to be made via the bank automated clearing system. No sub-contractors are involved.

The cost of processing payments in 1996–97 is estimated at £109,000.

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Leslie: To ask the Attorney-General if he will assess the advantages of the Crown Prosecution Service consulting victims of crime about the progress and status of their cases. [12478]

The Attorney-General: The victim's charter, a copy of which is in the Library of the House, sets out 27 standards of service that victims of crime can expect from criminal justice agencies including the Crown Prosecution service. These include best endeavours by the police to keep victims informed of significant developments in their case and asking about any fears the victim may have about further victimisation and details of loss, damage or injury. The Crown Prosecution service will taken this information, together with other known views of the victim, into account when making their decisions. Direct consultation between the CPS and victims is not normally appropriate since the victim will in most cases also be a prosecution witness.

Two schemes aimed at improving arrangements for keeping victims informed of progress in their case and ensuring that their interests are taken into account are at present being evaluated. In addition, the independent review of the Crown Prosecution Service will also consider ways to enable the Crown Prosecution Service to inform victims of crime about prosecution decisions.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Schools (Parental Choice)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many appeals have been made by parents on the grounds of non-admission of their child to the school of their choice, in each local education authority, in the latest year for which figures are available. [12795]

Mr. Byers: The information requested by the hon. Member is set out in the following tables. More statistical details on admission appeals are in a departmental press notice published on 15 October. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library.

Departmental Publications

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 17 July, Official Report, column 310, how much public money was spent by the Stationery Office in printing the White Paper "Excellence in schools". [12774]

Mr. Byers: None. The Stationery Office Limited is a private company, which printed "Excellence in Schools" at its own expense.

Assisted Places (South Gloucestershire)

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many pupils resident in South Gloucestershire unitary authority are in receipt of assisted places in the current financial year; and what estimate he has made of the cost of those places. [12829]

Mr. Byers: Information about the local education authority area from which assisted pupils originate is not collected centrally. One school, Tockington Manor school, situated in the South Gloucestershire unitary authority area participates in the assisted places scheme with four assisted pupils at an estimated total cost of £16,812 in academic year 1997–98.

Jean Monnet Projects

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the (a) cost and (b) criteria are for selection of Jean Monnet projects in the United Kingdom; which chairs and professorships are funded in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [12505]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The EC programme, "Jean Monnet: European Integration in University Studies", was established in 1989 on the initiative of the European Parliament. It is implemented by the European Commission without direct involvement on the part of EU member states.

The Commission does not publish details of funding allocations to member states under this programme. The 1997 programme vademecum published by the European Commission lists the following criteria for selection:

> "The proposed project must deal specifically and entirely with the issue of European integration.
> All teaching activities carried out within the framework of a Jean Monnet Chair must fulfil this requirement.
> It must be an entirely new initiative, set up for the first time at the beginning of the 1997–98 academic year.
>
> Priority will be given to compulsory courses of study (this applies to the "Jean Monnet Chairs" and permanent courses) and to those reaching a wide audience.
> The proposed project should be clearly inserted into the university's teaching programme and correspond to the academic criteria of quality and feasibility.
> Priority will be given this year to the creation of new Jean Monnet Chairs and to the development of complementary initiatives which, in the framework of the 1990–92 Jean Monnet Chairs, will lead to the setting up of European centres of excellence.
> Selection will be made according to the applications submitted (all applications submitted will be taken into consideration) on the basis of the recommendations of the European University Council for the Jean Monnet Project."

Student Grants

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the annual saving to his Department from the abolition of mandatory student grants; and if these sums will be applied to higher education. [12688]

Dr. Howells: Under the proposals announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 23 July, mandatory student grants will be replaced with increased loans. In the short term, therefore, public expenditure on student support will not be reduced and there will be no savings on the basis of current accounting rules. Savings will be realised in the longer term as graduates begin to make repayments and will be used to improve quality, standards and opportunities for all in further and higher education.

Special Needs

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what training for persons working with special needs children in the classroom is recognised by his Department. [12483]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Department's new standards for trainee teachers mean that all newly-qualified teachers will understand their responsibilities under the special educational needs code of practice, be capable of identifying children with SEN and be able to differentiate teaching practice appropriately.

An additional qualification, approved by the Secretary of State, is mandatory for teachers of classes of visually-impaired and hearing-impaired children. The Green Paper on SEN, published last week, will address further issues about the professional development of teaching and non-teaching staff.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what research his Department has evaluated into potential regional variations in provision for special needs children. [12482]

Ms Morris: The Department is aware, from its contact with parents, teachers, schools, voluntary organisations, local education authorities, and other service providers, that there are wide variations in the access to and the quality of provision available to pupils with special educational needs. That is why the Green Paper on SEN, "Excellence for All Children: meeting Special Educational Needs", which was published on 22 October, announced the Department's intention to:

> "work to secure a continuum of provision across the country, so that no matter where pupils live and what their needs, an appropriate level of support is available".

We recognise that not all LEAs will be able to provide the full range of support needed to achieve this aim. The Green Paper proposes, therefore, the development of regional planning arrangements for some aspects of SEN provision. We shall be consulting widely on this and other proposals contained in the Green Paper throughout the autumn. In the meantime we are supporting a project, co-ordinated by the Royal National Institute for the Blind, which is examining ways of securing effective regional co-ordination for certain aspects of SEN provision.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment in what circumstances parents with severely disabled children have the right to choose a non-mainstream education establishment outside the relevant local education authority area. [12484]

Ms Morris: Children with severe disabilities would normally be given a statement of special educational needs by their local education authority. The LEA must invite the parents of such children to name their preferred school when they are served a copy of the child's draft statement. The LEA is required to name the parents' preferred school—whether it is a mainstream or a special school—in the statement, provided it is appropriate to the child's age, ability, aptitude, and special educational needs, and is compatible with the interests of other children already in the school and with the efficient use of resources. If the parents' preferred school is maintained by another LEA, the home LEA must consult both the school governing body and the maintaining LEA of the school before naming the school in the statement. The school named in a child's statement is required to admit the child.

Higher Education

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what additional resources he plans to put into higher education for each year of the planning period. [12577]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 23 September, a package of measures which will allow an extra £165 million to be spent on higher education in 1998–99. The level of funding for the higher education sector in 1999–2000 and beyond will be decided in the light of the Government's current comprehensive expenditure review.

Universities (Tuition Fees)

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what mechanism he plans to introduce to ensure that universities are not financially disadvantaged by accepting students who are exempt from tuition fees. [12603]

Dr. Howells: There will be no disincentive to universities to accept students who are assessed as not having to contribute to tuition. For 1998–99 local education authorities will conduct an assessment of income to determine how much students or their parents should contribute to the £1,000 tuition fee. The local education authority will pay the public contribution to the fee directly to the university or college where the student is enrolled. The university or college will be responsible for collecting the contribution from the student. Universities and colleges will retain these funds. The administrative arrangements for later years are still under consideration and will be announced later.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he plans to take in respect of the introduction of tuition fees to ensure that the resources provided to universities reflect the average tuition costs of the courses they provide relative to the national average, with particular reference to medicine. [12576]

Dr. Howells: Under our preferred funding option, full-time undergraduates will contribute up to £1,000 a year in tuition fees, depending on family income, with the balance being met from public funds. The maximum payable—£1,000—represents around a quarter of the average annual cost of undergraduate courses. The remainder will be met from public funds through the teaching grant for universities and colleges allocated by the Higher Education Funding Council. The funding council's teaching grant allocations reflect each institution's student numbers and the relative average costs of providing courses in broad subject categories. Universities and college which provide medical courses will receive considerably more in teaching grant per medical student than the national average per student across all subjects.

Class Sizes

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the average class size (a) in maintained schools in England and Wales, (b) for five, six and seven-year-olds in maintained schools in England and Wales, (c) for maintained primary schools in England and Wales and (d) for maintained secondary schools in England and Wales at (i) 1 May, (ii) 1 June and (iii) 1 July. [12569]

Mr. Byers: The information is not available in the form requested.

The average class size of classes taught by one teacher in maintained primary and secondary schools in England in January 1997 were 27.5 and 21.7 respectively; the equivalent figure for key stage 1 classes in primary schools was 26.9.

Information on class sizes in Wales is the responsibility of my hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Goods and Services (Payments)

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list each of the functions relating to payment for goods or services supplied for which his Department is responsible indicating the management systems purchased, all subcontractors involved in the work, co-operative arrangements with other Departments; and the costs of the systems and processes in the last year for which figures are available. [12562]

Dr. Howells: Information on the functions relating to payment for goods and services supplied for which the Secretary of State's Department is responsible, the management systems purchased, all subcontractors involved in the work, co-operative arrangements with other Departments; and the costs of the systems and processes could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Parenthood Courses

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proposals he has to promote courses in parenthood. [12481]

Ms Estelle Morris: As stated in the White Paper, "Excellence in Schools" published on 7 July, the Government intend that all secondary schools should have a role in teaching young people the skills of good parenting, both formally and through contact with good adult role models. The Department will be considering with teachers and others how this might best be achieved and what parenting education programmes should contain.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 25 July, Official Report, columns 768–69, on training and enterprise councils, how many starts were made for the two categories in each TEC area in each of the last three years. [12302]

Dr. Howells: Information for (a) the proportion endorsed as having special training needs on entering youth training, and (b) the proportion reporting that they had a disability on entering training for work, for each TEC area in England is given in the following tables.

Nursery Education

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the annual cost of providing a child with five full days per week in a nursery school. [12690]

Mr. Byers: The 1995–96 estimated unit cost per full-time equivalent pupil in a maintained nursery school in England is £3,640.

Students

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his target for the expansion of student numbers during the next five years; and what proportion of this target he expects to be achieved through part-time enrolment. [12578]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend, the Prime Minister, has made clear that the Government intend to set a target for an extra 500,000 people to enter further and higher education by 2002. We expect that part-time enrolment will contribute significantly to this total.

Teachers' Salaries

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the average salary of a teacher with five years' experience in (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools. [12691]

Mr. Byers: The average salary at 31 March 1996 for teachers in England and Wales with five years experience was £19,750 in maintained nursery and primary schools and £20,430 in maintained secondary schools.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received concerning the effects on part-time students of the reduction in permitted study hours from 21 to 16 per week to maintain jobseeker's allowance entitlement; and if he will make a statement. [12298]

Mr. Alan Howarth: I have not received representations on this specific issue although my colleagues and I receive correspondence on a range of issues relating to the jobseeker's allowance rules.

The Jobseeker's Allowance Regulations 1996 introduced a definition of part-time students. Part-time study had not previously been defined in social security legislation. What is regarded as part-time depends on the type of course and where it is provided. In England and Wales, courses which are funded or part-funded by the further education funding councils of no more than 16 guided learning hours per week are regarded as part-time. This reflects the way in which the sector operates its part-time courses.

We will be reviewing the job-seeker's allowance rules on education and training in the light of the jobseeker's allowance workskills pilots, which we expanded in September this year, and early experience of new deal measures for the long-term unemployed.

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, how many claimants had their jobseeker's allowance reduced during 1996–97 for (a) two weeks and (b) four weeks for not attending or failing to complete (i) jobplan workshops, (ii) restart courses, (iii) workwise and worklink, (iv) 1-2-1, (v) project work and (vi) non-prescribed Government programmes where referral was under a jobseeker's direction. [7733]

Mr. Alan Howarth [pursuant to his reply, 10 July 1997, c.558]: Unfortunately not all relevant data was included in the reply provided by Leigh Lewis, chief executive of the Employment Service.

The third, fourth and fifth paragraphs of the reply should have read as follows:

> "Unfortunately, information is not available in the form you request. However, it may be helpful if I explain that a total of 17,477 sanction decisions and opinions were given in 1996–97 for:
> refusal of a place on a training scheme or employment programme;
> failure to attend a place on a training scheme or employment programme;
> giving up a place on a training scheme or employment programme;
> losing a place on a training scheme or employment programme through misconduct; and, > neglect to avail of a place on a training scheme or employment programme.

> Schemes and programmes included in this definition are jobplan Workshops, Restart Courses, Workwise, Worklink, 1-2-1, and Project Work. Employment Service statistics do not identify the number of sanctions relating to each programme, nor do they differentiate between two and four week sanctions.
> The total number of sanction decisions and opinions given in 1996–97 for refusal or failure to carry out a Jobseeker's Direction was 225. It is not possible to say whether any of these related to employment programmes."

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Hammond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer of 24 July, Official Report column 731, if she will list for each overseas visit the name of the Minister involved, the country visited and the dates of the visit. [11239]

Political and Special Advisers

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list (a) the names, (b) the salary, (c) the previous occupation and salary and (d) the terms and conditions of each political and special adviser in her Department; and what was the selection process used to appoint these persons. [2421]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 6 June 1997]: Sheila Watson, formerly deputy director and consultant economist at the Centre for Local Economic Strategies, and Dan Corry, formerly senior Economist at the Institute for Public Policy Research, are paid special advisers in accordance with schedule 1—part 1—of the "Model Contract for Special Advisers", a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House. They are both paid within a range of £24,349 to £73,484. Their salaries are negotiated individually and are confidential within this range. Details of this and of previous salaries are not provided in order to protect the privacy of the individuals concerned.

Lord Hollick, chief executive of United News and Media plc—UNM—is an unpaid special adviser, also in accordance with schedule 1—part 1—of the model contract, but excluding all those issues having implications for companies in the UNM group, notably in the broadcasting, publishing and exhibition industry given his continuing role as chief executive of UNM, and also excluding until 1 September issues affecting the aerospace sector given his previous position as a non-executive director of British Aerospace plc.

All three appointments are personal appointments following consultation with the permanent secretary of my Department and the Prime Minister.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what restrictions are placed on the issues her Department's special advisers are permitted to handle and the papers they can see. [10982]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 28 July 1997]: Sheila Watson and Dan Corry are special advisers on the whole range of DTI business in accordance with schedule 1—part 1—of the "Model Contract for Special Advisers", a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House. Lord Hollick is an unpaid special adviser, who advises on a range of issues also in accordance with schedule 1—part 1—of the model contract, but excluding all those issues having implications for companies in the UNM Group, notably in the broadcasting, publishing and exhibition industry given his continuing role as chief executive of UNM, and also excluding until 1 September issues affecting the aerospace sector given his previous position as a non-executive director of British Aerospace plc.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the special advisers in her Department, the Minister to whom each is responsible, the subjects on which they advise and the number of advisers in her Department in the year up to 1 May. [5367]

Mrs. Beckett: Sheila Watson and Dan Corry are special advisers to me on the whole range of DTI business in accordance with schedule 1—part 1—of the "Model Contract for Special Advisers", a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House. Lord Hollick is an unpaid special adviser who advises on a range of issues also in accordance with schedule 1—part 1—of the model contract, but excluding all those issues having implications for companies in the UNM Group notably in the broadcasting, publishing or exhibition industries given his continuing role as chief executive of the United News and Media plc, and also excluding until 1 September issues affecting the aerospace sector given his previous position as a non-executive director of British Aerospace plc. There was one special adviser in the DTI in the year up to 1 May.

Environmental Assessments

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if she will make a statement on current Government environmental assessment requirements; [11970]

(2) what guidance from her Department in respect of environmental impact assessments applies to (a) the Fionaven and Schiehallion fields operated by BP and (b) any proposed future development at the Atlantic Frontier; and if she will make a statement; [11974]

(3) if she will list the existing independent arbitration arrangements to monitor environmental impact assessments in respect of development at the Atlantic Frontier; [11971]

(4) what plans she has to conduct further environmental impact assessments in respect of development at the Atlantic Frontier; [11972]

(5) pursuant to the answer given to the hon. Member for Truro and St. Austell (Mr. Taylor), Official Report, 23 July, column 627, if she will set out the procedures currently in place to oversee environmental impact assessments in respect of future development at the Atlantic Frontier. [11969]

Mr. Battle: I will write to my hon. Friend very shortly and place a copy of the letters in the Library of the House.

Arms Industry

Mr. Waterson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will conduct a survey of the revenue, employment and economic impact accruing from the United Kingdom arms industry. [11824]

Mr. Battle: I will write to the hon. Member very shortly and place a copy of the letter in the Library of the House.

Defence Exports

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the premiums paid by United Kingdom defence companies in each of the last 10 years in respect of ECGD cover for defence exports from the United Kingdom. [10304]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 24 July 1997]: Premium earned in the defence sector for capital good and projects in the last 10 years is as follows:

Year	Premium earned £ million
1986–87	18.7
1987–88	8.9
1988–89	24.2
1989–90	13.1
1990–91	17.0
1991–92	10.7
1992–93	40.4
1993–94	37.7
1994–95	10.0
1995–96	23.7

Figures are not yet available for 1996–97.

Figures are not readily available for defence business on short terms of credit insured by ECGD prior to the privatisation of its Insurance Services Group in 1991.

Technology-based Small Firms

Mr. Horam: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what response her Department made to the Bank of England's October 1996 report on the financing of technology-based small firms. [12237]

Mrs. Roche: The Minister for Trade and Competitiveness in Europe, Lord Simon of Highbury, welcomed the Bank of England's report as a very useful contribution to pinpointing the issues associated with the financing of technology-based small firms when speaking in the House of Lords on 19 June 1997 in the debate on the House of Lords Science and Technology Committee's report "The Innovation-Exploitation Barrier".

The Government are now discussing with the Bank of England the recommendations for action in the report.

Engineering (West Midlands)

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action she plans to take to increase employment opportunities in engineering in the west midlands. [10324]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 24 July 1997]: A key factor in increasing employment opportunities in the west midlands, as elsewhere, is a stable, long-term economic framework in which business can plan ahead. That is what my right hon. Friend the Chancellor has already begun to provide. I also expect the consultation process I have launched with business as part of the Competitiveness UK initiative to help identify a range of ways in which engineering and other manufacturing business can improve their competitiveness for instance in the area of innovation, exports and the supply chain. The Government office for the west midlands will be participating fully in this with local partners.

Small and Medium Enterprises

Mr. Streeter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action the Council of Ministers will take to enable it to judge whether proposed legislation will hold back the creation and development of small and medium enterprises under article 118 of the treaty of Amsterdam; and if she will make a statement. [11401]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 30 July 1997]: The article will place a legal obligation on the European Parliament and the Council of Ministers to ensure that directives adopted under it

> "avoid imposing administrative, financial and legal constraints in a way which would hold back the creation and development of small and medium-sized enterprises".

If the Parliament and Council ignored this obligation when adopting a directive, the European Court of Justice could, on application, hold the directive to be invalid.

Gas Installers

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will introduce a requirement for gas installers to have public liability insurance. [5434]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: The Government do not believe that a requirement for public liability insurance by gas installers would be effective in safeguarding consumers. Compulsory insurance would not, of itself, ensure that installers have the necessary skills, competence and hardware to enable them to carry out their duties effectively and safely, which is the first line of defence for consumers. Gas safety legislation requires all gas installers to be registered with the Council of Registered Gas Installers and requires all gas transporters to ensure that their staff undertaking gas safety work meet appropriate standards.

Multilateral Agreement on Investment

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if a public assessment of the impact of the multilateral agreement on investment and its impact on other Government policies will be carried out before the agreement is signed. [11863]

Mrs. Roche: I stressed in the Adjournment debate on the MAI on 23 July that there may be a role for a broad assessment of the impact of the MAI on the environment. Provided that any such proposal will be effective, we will be willing to support it. More broadly, the Government will be happy to participate in discussions on the impact of the agreement.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what oversight Parliament will have over the multilateral agreement on investment and its ratification. [11862]

Mrs. Roche: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 24 June 1997, Official Report, column 484.

Motor Insurance Directive

Sir Richard Body: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the current status of proposals for a fourth EU motor directive on motor insurance. [12512]

Mrs. Roche: The European Commission has adopted a proposal for a fourth Council directive on motor liability insurance and transmitted it to the Council and the European Parliament on 14 October 1997. The proposal is intended to assist people making claims for compensation for injury or loss arising from a road accident in another EU member state. It will be deposited in the House for Scrutiny in the normal way.

Development Areas (State Aids)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what procedures are currently in force, and what additional procedures are under review, in order that she can discharge her overall responsibility for state aids in development areas under section 7 of the Industry Act 1972. [12978]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Under section 7 of the Industry Act, regional selective assistance is provided, on a discretionary basis, to investment projects which help to create or safeguard jobs in the designated assisted areas of Great Britain. No additional procedures are under review.

Biotechnology

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the patenting of human genes and tissues. [12840]

Mr. Battle: Interpretation of these criteria is based on jurisprudence.

This Department is also currently undertaking a wide-ranging consultation on the EC's proposed directive on the legal protection of biotechnological inventions, which could harmonise and clarify national laws on the patenting of biotechnological inventions, so reducing current uncertainty in this area of law in Europe. It is an important initiative in an area where issues of research, ethics and business all need to be taken into account.

Travel Industry

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she expects to make a decision on the Monopolies and Mergers Commission inquiry into (a) the proposed merger between P and O and Stena and (b) vertical integration in the travel industry. [12988]

Mr. Battle: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade gave her on 2 July, Official Report, column 181. The Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the proposed merger between P and O and Stena will be published as soon as is practicable. I cannot comment on the likely publication date of the MMC report or its contents, which remain confidential until publication. Consultation is taking place with the European Commission.

The MMC is required to report to the President of the Board of Trade on the travel trade by 6 November. The report will be published as soon as is practicable.

Retail Newsagents

Mr. Gill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has received from retail newsagents relating to their current trading conditions. [12535]

Mr. Battle: Representations have been received from a number of sources including the National Federation of Retail Newsagents and the Multiple Newsagents Association. My hon. Friend the Minister for Competition and Consumer Affairs has seen the NFRN, and I have also agreed to see it.

Ministerial Endorsements

Mr. Letwin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade in what circumstances Ministers in her Department are entitled to endorse particular products and services. [12475]

Mr. Ian McCartney: In pursuit of Ministers' policy objectives, the DTI provides support to individual companies in a variety of ways, for example those seeking particular major business overseas, or through its small firms merit award for research and technology—SMART—to innovators. The DTI also makes use of a large number of contractors and advisers in the course of discharging its responsibilities. The existence of these arrangements, while not conferring a ministerial endorsement on the firms in question, is normally a matter of public record and the firms concerned routinely refer to them in their own publicity and promotional material.

Patents (Engineering Products)

Mr. Levitt: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures she is taking to prevent the import into Britain and Europe of copies of British engineering products, made in breach of World Patent Organisation rules. [12756]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The importation into the European Union of goods which infringe trade marks, copyright and design rights is prohibited by virtue of Council Regulation 3295/94 provided that the relevant right holder has lodged an application for action with Customs and Excise, which is responsible in the UK for enforcement. The regulation fulfils the obligations of the UK and the EU under the World Trade Organisation—general agreement on tariffs and trade—formerly GATT agreement on trade-related aspects of intellectual property rights but its coverage of "counterfeit and pirated goods" does not embrace patent infringements.

Trade Agreements

Angela Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures her Department is taking to ensure consistency in Government policy towards international development within (a) bilateral trade agreements and (b) multilateral trade agreements. [12282]

Mrs. Roche: My Department works closely with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the Department for International Development and others to ensure that UK development policies are adequately reflected in bilateral and multilateral trade agreements.

Imports (Codes of Conduct)

Angela Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals she has on codes of conduct for British companies importing produce from developing nations. [12314]

Mrs. Roche: My Department is keen to work constructively with companies to establish voluntary codes of conduct with their suppliers both to improve the working conditions under which their products are made and to minimise any adverse impact on the environment. I welcome the moves many of our companies are making towards taking a more ethical stance in business and private sector initiatives such as the ethical trading initiative, which is supported by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the Department for International Development and the Department of Trade and Industry.

Gas Bills

Mr. Webb: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate she has made of the real level of average household bills for gas in Great Britain as a whole and for each region of Great Britain in each year since 1978. [12830]

Mr. Battle: The data are given in the table.

Published tariffs.

Notes:

[1] Based on equivalent of standard tariffs of British Gas and other supply companies. Based on an annual consumption of 17,600 kWh.

[2] Bills relate to the total bill received during the year which for credit consumers covers consumption in Q4 of the previous year to Q3 in year in question and includes all tariff changes and rebates.

[3] Real prices are cash prices adjusted for inflation as measured by the GDP market price deflator.

[4] 1997 bills are provisional in that they only include tariff changes announced up to August 1997 and therefore may be subject to revision if tariff changes occur. The 1997 deflator is an estimate and as such revisions may lead to changes in the real terms bill.

[5] Supply zones are defined as Main: Scottish, North Thames, South Eastern, Eastern, Southern, Wales and South Western; North: North Eastern, North Western and Northern; Midlands: East and West.

[6] Bills for the various trial competition regions are calculated so as to include the fact that those customers who switched supplier would have received their gas, prior to switching, from British Gas and charged BG tariffs for this gas. For example, the Phase 2a and 2b bills are based on the assumption that customers who switched in Phase 2a received gas supply from the new supplier from 10 February 1997, and for Phase 2b from 7 March 1997. Prior to these dates the customers are taken to be on British Gas tariffs (e.g. national or main zone).

[7] Phase 1 covers Cornwall, Devon and Somerset, Phase 2a covers the County of Avon and Dorset and Phase 2b covers Kent and East and West Sussex.

Electricity Bills

Mr. Webb: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate she has made of the real level of average household bills for electricity in Great Britain as a whole and for each region of Great Britain in each year since 1978. [12833]

Mr. Battle: The available data are given in the table.

Electricity Association—1980 to 1988; DTI—1989 to 1997, based on published tariffs and rebates from Public Electricity Suppliers.

Notes:

[1] Based on an annual consumption of 3,300kWh.

[2] Bills from 1989 include all tariff changes and rebates but exclude discounts offered by some companies for prompt payment.

[3] Data from 1989 relates to the total bill received during the year, which for credit consumers covers consumption in Q4 of previous year to Q3 in year in question. Specific bills based on tariffs at 1 April are used pre 1989.

[4] Data pre 1989 and post 1988 are calculated on different basis and so are not directly comparable, but do reflect the overall trend.

[5] Real prices are cash prices adjusted for the effects of inflation as measured by the GDP market price deflator.

[6] 1996 bills exclude the National Grid Discount. Customers in England and Wales received a one-off rebate of £54.60 (including VAT) during Q1 1996, following the flotation of the National Grid Company.

[7] 1997 bills are provisional in that they are based on tariffs as at end August 1997. Information for the year may change (for example with rebates) further changes will occur as revisions are made to the current estimate of the 1997 GDP deflator.

[8] From 1989, averages are weighted by the number of domestic customers in 1994–95, prior to which data [illegible] each year are used.

Telephone Bills

Mr. Webb: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate she has made of the real level of average household telephone bills in Great Britain as a whole and for each region of Great Britain in each year since 1978. [12832]

Mrs. Roche: The first table gives an index of BT's telephone charges for the period of 1978–79 to 1988–89, since values for these years are not readily available. From 1988–89, BT started providing values for the median residential bill, which unlike the first set of figures relates to actual use and provides the most accurate view of an average bill. Values for these for 1988 to 1996 are shown in the second table. Statistics for each region of Great Britain are not available. Figures for other operators are not available.

1. Index of quarterly telephone charges including VAT for the period 1978–79 to 1988–89

Year	Great Britain
1978–79	100
1979–80	92.6
1980–81	102.4
1981–82	110.9
1982–83	110.2
1983–84	105.6
1984–85	104.9
1985–86	105.3
1986–87	106.5
1987–88	104.4
1988–89	99.1

2. Quarterly median residential bill. Value in £ since 1989–90, excluding VAT, deflated by the all items retail prices index and expressed in 1995–96 prices

1989–90	47.64
1990–91	48.15
1991–92	48.44
1992–93	48.99
1993–94	49.38
1994–95	50.55
1995–96	48.67
1996–97	47.69

The above figures make it look as if prices have not changed in real terms since the late 1980s. These figures do not however take account of increased use of the telephone throughout the period.

Supply Teachers

Dr. Vis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will instigate an investigation into the businesses that supply supply-teaching staff. [12868]

Mr. Ian McCartney: My Department's employment agency standards inspectorate is responsible for regulating businesses providing supply teaching staff under the terms of the Employment Agencies Act 1973. In addition to investigating complaints, proactive checks of standards in this and other sectors of the industry are conducted from time to time. Any information about suspected breaches of the legislation should be brought to my Department's attention.

Footwear Imports

Ms Keeble: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what plans he has to impose anti-dumping duties on footwear imported from (a) Thailand, (b) Indonesia and (c) China; [12345]

(2) what action the Government plan to take over the dumping in the United Kingdom of footwear from China, Indonesia and Thailand. [12288]

Mrs. Roche: Definitive anti-dumping measures may be imposed only by the Council of the European Union, acting on a recommendation from the European Commission and by a simple majority of member states. They then apply to all imports of the product from the countries concerned into the EU.

In the case of leather and synthetic footwear from China, Indonesia and Thailand, it seems likely that the Council will agree to a minimum price regime in November. The duty payable would be equivalent to the difference between a minimum price and the import price, where the import price is lower.

In the case of footwear with textile uppers from China and Indonesia, the Commission has put forward a proposal for duties on which discussions continue.

SCOTLAND

Hospital Beds

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of staffed beds projected in the published Lothian health acute strategy for (a) all hospitals in the Lothian health board area, (b) the Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh trust and (c) the West Lothian NHS trust. [12748]

Mr. Galbraith: Lothian health board's 1993 public consultation document on the acute services strategy indicated that following implementation of the proposals there were expected to be 2,042 acute hospital beds—excluding obstetrics, special care baby unit, geriatric assessment and elderly continuing care beds—within the new royal infirmary, Western general and St. John's hospitals.

Total projected bed numbers—excluding only continuing care elderly beds—for the new royal infirmary and St. John's hospital were 942 and 654 respectively.

Since consultation, Lothian health board has continued to refine and revise its plans in consultation with the trusts, and relevant clinicians.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of staffed beds by specialty for the latest date for which information is available for (a) all hospitals in the Lothian health board area, (b) the Royal infirmary of Edinburgh trust and (c) the West Lothian NHS trust. [12747]

Mr. Galbraith: The information is set out in the table.

Lothian Health Board (Acute Services)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has assessed in respect of changes to the Lothian health acute services strategy; when proposed revisions will be made available for public consultation; and when the acute services strategy will be implemented in full. [12751]

Mr. Galbraith: It is estimated that Lothian health board's acute services strategy will be implemented in full once the new royal infirmary of Edinburgh is operating, currently expected to be in 2003. Scottish Office officials are in regular contact with Lothian health board and the relevant trusts so that they are aware of any revisions to the original proposals within the acute services strategy. I would be informed of, and assess appropriately, any revisions which substantially affected the objectives or implementation of the strategy.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will make available a detailed analysis of the costs associated with specific projects of all proposed health service PFI contracts in Scotland. [12749]

Mr. Galbraith: NHS trusts responsible for individual PFI projects account for the costs they incur in pursuing them. The Scottish Office management executive estimates that costs should not be more than 1.5 per cent. of the capital value of the project.

WALES

Devolution

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the cost to public funds of sending literature to every home in Wales on the Government's devolution proposals. [12722]

Mr. Ron Davies: The cost was under £164,000.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the net cost of producing the White Paper on the Government's proposals for a Welsh Assembly. [12717]

Mr. Davies: The net cost was £77,480.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many civil servants currently work in the Welsh Office; and how many he estimates will work in the Welsh Office after the implementation of his devolution proposals. [12689]

Mr. Davies: The Welsh Office currently employs 2,224 full-time equivalent staff. This figures includes 140 casual staff.

My estimate of the number employed by the Welsh Office after establishment of the Welsh Assembly is set out in paragraph 4.45 of the White Paper "A Voice for Wales", copies of which are available in the Vote Office.

Goods and Services (Payments)

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list each of the functions relating to payment for goods or services supplied for which his Department is responsible indicating the management systems purchased, all subcontractors involved in the work, co-operative arrangements with other Departments; and the costs of the systems and processes in the last year for which figures are available. [12568]

Mr. Ron Davies: The functions of the Welsh Office for which payments are made are set out in the Department's supply estimates and appropriation accounts—class XIV, votes 1 to 5. Payments for all functions are handled centrally and the cost of the central finance payment processing for 1996–97 is estimated at £492,000.

MRSA and Tuberculosis

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases of (a) Methicillin-resistant staphylococcus aureus and (b) tuberculosis have been recorded in each health authority district in Wales in each month since April 1997. [12910]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The information is given in the following table:

Performing Arts (Welsh Language)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to promote the use of the Welsh language in the performing arts; and if he will make a statement. [12914]

Mr. Ron Davies: I am pleased that both the Arts Council of Wales and the Welsh Language Board support productions in Welsh—the Arts Council of Wales through its drama programmes, community touring scheme and other activities; the Welsh Language Board through support for the national eisteddfod of Wales and the Urdd national eisteddfod.

Health Trusts (Deficits)

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of (a) the current deficits and (b) the projected deficits of each health trust as a percentage of their budgets; and if he will make a statement. [12963]

Mr. Win Griffiths: As at August 1997, the following trusts were reporting either a current and/or projected end of year deficit position(s):

	Current £000s	Projected £000s
Carmarthen	(441)	(1,659)
Ceredigion	(414)	(1,401)
East Glamorgan	(142)	(342)
Glan y Mor	(10)	0
Glan Hafren	(265)	0
Gwent Community	(473)	66
Llandough Hospital and Community	(690)	(1,648)
Llanelli/Dinefwr	(447)	(1,095)
Morriston	(1,309)	(3,159)
Nevill Hall and District	(156)	(509)
North Glamorgan	657	(737)
Pembs/Derwen	(1,122)	(2.697)
Powys	(646)	(1,403)
UHW Healthcare	(954)	(6,000)
Wrexham	(715)	(737)

The position of some trusts may improve as contract negotiations are completed, and these deficits project worse case scenarios. My officials are in discussion with trusts to ensure that these problems are being dealt with.

It is not possible to provide the figures as a percentage of their budget, as most trusts have not yet reached contract agreement with all their purchasers.

Transplants

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many (a) kidney, (b) heart, (c) lung, (d) heart and lung, (e) liver and (f) other transplants have been carried out in Wales in each of the last 10 years, broken down into health authority district; and if he will make a statement; [12912]

(2) how many transplants involving artificial organs have been carried out in Wales in each of the last 10 years, broken down into health authority district; and if he will make a statement. [12913]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Information on the number of transplants performed on Welsh residents by area of residence is not readily available. The number of transplants carried out in Wales as a whole is shown in the following table. Transplants of organs not listed in the table are not carried out in Wales. It should be noted that kidney transplants for residents of north Wales are normally carried out in Liverpool. No data are available centrally concerning artificial organ transplants.

Organ Donors

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate how many and what percentage of people in Wales (i) carry a donor card and (ii) are registered on the NHS organ donor register. [12911]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The number of people carrying organ donor cards is not known centrally. There were 390 thousand Welsh residents on the NHS organ donor register at 18 October 1997, about 13 per cent. of the population.

Health Authorities (Finance)

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of (a) the running costs of and (b) the remuneration paid by each health authority in Wales in the current financial year. [12964]

Mr. Win Griffiths: This information is not presently available.

Health authorities' costs and the remuneration paid to their chairmen, non-executive and executive directors in 1996–97 were as shown in the following table:

£000

	Health authority costs	Directors' remuneration

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Beef Exports (South Africa)

Barbara Follett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the total percentage reduction agreed since August 1996 by the European Commission in the level of beef export refunds to South Africa. [12332]

Mr. Rooker: The level of export refund EU beef exports received is dependant not only on the destination, but also the type of cut. Since August 1996, the level of export refunds on beef exports to South Africa has fallen by between 35 per cent. and 43 per cent.

Barbara Follett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment his Department has made of the report on the effects of EU beef export subsidies on the Southern African livestock economy commissioned by the South African Government from Natal university. [12333]

Mr. Rooker: We are aware of the report and have noted its contents. As mentioned in my reply to my hon. Friend's previous question, there has already been a large reduction in the level of refunds paid on beef exports to South Africa. We believe however that it is still too early to assess the full impact of these reductions.

Barbara Follett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when will the EU Council of Ministers next debate beef export subsidies to South Africa; and if he will make a statement. [12334]

Mr. Rooker: We know of no current plans to discuss beef export refunds to South Africa in the Agriculture Council.

EU-Senegal Fisheries Agreement

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the nationality of the fishermen and their projected generated financial gain covered in the European Union-Senegal fisheries agreement; what is the cost to the European Union; what is the financial share of the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's position regarding fishing rights held by the European Union in third-party waters. [12500]

Mr. Morley: The fishing opportunities available under the EC-Senegal fisheries agreement are allocated mainly to fishermen from France, Italy, Spain, Portugal and Greece who have traditionally fished in Senegalese waters. However, new pelagic fishing opportunities obtained under the new protocol have not been allocated to specific member states. We have no information on the projected financial gain by individual fishermen.

The cost of the agreement to the EU budget is 12 mecu per annum. The UK contributes some 15 per cent. of this amount.

The Government consider fisheries agreements with third countries to be important in safeguarding traditional fishing grounds for EU fishermen. The agreements with Norway and other North Atlantic countries, for example, are important to the UK distant water fleet. However, the Government wish to ensure that fisheries agreements as a whole provide value for money, promote sustainable fisheries and are coherent with general EU development policy.

Dietary Supplements

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library the reports which he received from the Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Goods and the Environment and the Food Advisory Committee before he made his decision of 4 July to limit the level of vitamin B6 in dietary supplements. [12310]

Mr. Rooker: The statements from the Committee on Toxicology of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment and the Food Advisory Committee have been placed in the Library of the House. They have been available in the public domain since 4 July.

Fishing Fleet

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the impact of the integration of Agenda 2000 countries into the European Union on the United Kingdom fishing fleet. [12526]

Mr. Morley: It will not be possible to carry out a detailed assessment of the impact on the UK fishing fleet of integrating new countries into the EU until we know which countries are to be admitted and the accession terms proposed. However, those applicant countries which have marine fishing interests generally fish in areas, such as the Baltic sea, where the UK fleet is not active. Previous new entrants have, as part of their accession terms, been allocated quotas reflecting the areas and stocks for which they have historic track records. The Government will wish to ensure that similar conditions apply to further new entrants.

Scientific Committees

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his Department approved the establishment of additional scientific committees as announced in European Union document ip/97/679; how those committees will co-ordinate their work with committees responsible to his Department; and if he will make a statement. [12744]

Mr. Rooker: The European Commission has recently transferred all of its advisory scientific committees to Directorate General XXIV which deals with consumer policy and consumer health protection. It is now in the process of restructuring the committees, the six existing committees being replaced by eight new committees which will deal respectively with food; animal nutrition; animal health and animal welfare; veterinary public health; plants; cosmetic products and non-food products intended for consumers; toxicity, ecotoxicity and the environment; and medical products and medical devices. A restructured overarching committee, the Scientific Steering Committee, is also being set up, the membership consisting of the chairmen of the eight scientific committees and eight additional scientists.

The reorganisation of the committee structure is entirely a matter for the European Commission, but in so far as the intention is to provide a more effective advisory system we are in support, though it remains to be seen how the new arrangements will operate in practice. Advice on food safety issues in the UK continues to be provided by the UK advisory committees, although increasingly legislation on food safety is based on agreements reached in Brussels.

Officials have been in touch with officials in DG XXIV and will continue working to ensure that there is effective interchange of information between the EU and ourselves. We also keep in close touch with day to day developments in the EU scientific committees via the UK contact points, and EU committees will be well aware of the conclusions reached in UK discussions.

EU Expenditure

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give a breakdown of expenditure by country under European Union document 9201/97. [12593]

Mr. Rooker: Document 9201/97 concerns a Commission proposal to augment funding for the quality beef promotion scheme by up to 20 mecu. However, as this proposal has not yet been agreed by the Council, expenditure has not yet been allocated. Should the proposal be adopted, it is expected that a breakdown of expenditure by sponsoring member state and by the implementing trade or inter-trade organisation, will be available in due course. Organisations may, however, operate in more than one member state.

Aerial Spraying

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will review the regulations governing the aerial spraying of bracken to ensure the maximum safety and convenience of residents. [12761]

Mr. Rooker: The Control of Pesticide Regulations 1986 include general requirements for the use of pesticides, including aerial spraying, and were updated earlier this year. The amending regulations introduced a specific requirement on all users of pesticides to confine the application of the pesticide to the land, crop, structure material or other area intended to be treated. These regulations place obligations on the aerial spray operator to give notice of the intended aerial application to the chief health officer for the district; hospitals, schools and other institutions within 150 m of the intended flight path; and occupants or their agents of all property within 25 m of the boundary of the land to which the pesticide is to be applied.

These requirements will be emphasised in the revised code of practice for the safe use of pesticides on farms and holdings which will be published early in the new year.

BSE

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish figures to show the incidence of BSE (a) in mainland Britain and (b) in the Channel Islands among (i) Jersey cows and (ii) other breeds. [12764]

Mr. Rooker: The number of confirmed cases of BSE in Jersey and non-Jersey cattle in Great Britain as at 21 October 1997 are as follows:

	Number
Jersey	1,472
Jersey cross breeds	147
Non-Jersey	167,640
Total	169,259

These figures include cases reported before the 1988 BSE order.

Channel Islands authorities compile their own BSE statistics, which they supply to MAFF. My Department receives only cumulative figures of confirmed cases, the most recent being:

	Number	As at
Jersey	132	10 October 1997
Guernsey	648	19 October 1997
Alderney	2	26 June 1995

For logistical reasons not all suspects slaughtered on Guernsey have been subjected to laboratory confirmation of disease. Some have been confirmed solely on the basis of clinical signs.

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will instigate a new public inquiry into the BSE affair. [12967]

Mr. Rooker: The Government are considering the question of a public inquiry into BSE very carefully and will make an announcement when they have reached a conclusion.

Factory-farmed Produce

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to ensure that factory-farmed produce is identifiable by package labelling; and if he will make a statement. [12930]

Mr. Rooker: The Government have no plans at present to make such information a mandatory part of the food label, but we are consulting interested parties on the Farm Animal Welfare Council's recommendation for compulsory labelling of egg production systems.

Genetically Engineered Food

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department has undertaken into the allergenic potential of genetically engineered food; and if he will make a statement. [12896]

Mr. Rooker: The EC Novel Foods Regulation (258/97) introduced an EU wide pre-market approval system for genetically modified foods. In the UK the independent Advisory Committee for Novel Foods and Processes assesses the safety of such foods paying particular attention to their allergenic potential. This Department funds research work worth some £1 million per year, to underpin the ACNFP's safety assessment procedures. It is standard practice to encourage the publication of results from such research.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Bull Bars

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will advocate an EU-wide ban on bull bars during the British presidency of the Council of Transport Ministers in January 1998. [12321]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The UK has already made its opposition to aggressive bull bars very clear to our European partners, and has strongly supported the Commission's proposal for tackling them through an amendment to the external projections directive. However, the opposition to this initiative from certain member states has demonstrated that if we are to tackle the bull bar problem quickly we will have to take action at a national, rather than a European, level.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures he intends to take to control the use of bull bars. [12322]

Ms Jackson: We have concluded that we must look seriously at tackling aggressive bull bars at a national level. We are currently consulting widely on options for action with the aim of identifying a way forward that is both practicable and effective.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if, in assessing housing properties for compulsory competitive tendering purposes, the 4,000 de minimis threshold will apply to properties managed via management agreements, by (a) estate management boards, and (b) tenant management organisations. [12008]

Mr. Raynsford: The Minister for Local Government and Housing announced on 25 July that the proposed de minimis threshold for housing management compulsory competitive tendering should be stock based at 4,000 properties. There are no proposals to make any changes to the current definition of a local authority's housing stock. The definition as it stands includes most stock which a local authority provides under part II of the Housing Act 1985. Only hostels and flats which have been bought under the right-to-buy scheme are excluded. Therefore any properties which are managed by either estate management boards or tenant management organisations will count towards the de minimis calculation.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to end the capping of local authority spending. [12009]

Mr. Raynsford: We remain committed to the abolition of crude and universal capping as soon as possible. We are now working on a wide range of proposals to improve local accountability which will allow us to fulfil this commitment.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has (a) to exclude supplementary credit approvals under the Local Government Finance (Supplementary Credit Approval) Bill from capping rates and (b) to allow SCAs to be used in respect of private housing stock. [12010]

Mr. Raynsford: Ministers have yet to take decisions on capping arrangements for 1998–99. We anticipate making an announcement later in the year.

Guidance to local authorities on expenditure under the capital receipts initiative was issued on 2 October. This sets out how the additional resources released under the initiative can be applied. In the first instance, it will be for individual local authorities to identify local needs and priorities and to draw up strategies to tackle them. Where private sector renewal is such a priority, capital receipts initiative resources will be available to support remedial works.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans his Department has to allow the private finance initiative to be used for housing purposes; and what account is taken of private finance initiative projects in relation to the capping of local government expenditure. [12011]

Mr. Raynsford: Local authorities are already developing pilot schemes for the provision of non housing revenue account housing under PFI. My hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and Housing recently agreed to the launch of a pathfinder project for the use of the PFI in housing revenue account housing during the third reading of the Local Government Contracts Bill. Official Report, 8 July, column 831. In the context of the 1997–98 capping round, the previous Administration adjusted the capping regime to allow amounts of revenue support stemming from private finance credits to be spent. We will announce capping guidelines for 1998–99 later in the autumn. In the longer term, we have repeated our commitment to end crude and universal capping as soon as possible.

European Environment Agency

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the definition of (a) media-oriented and (b) source-oriented monitoring as named as an element of the 1997 work programme for the European Environment Agency; what the projects involved are; how much has been allocated to each; and if he will make a statement. [12508]

Angela Eagle: In the context of the European Environment Agency's work programme, media-oriented monitoring concerns the assessment of the state and trends of the environment by looking at the quality of the various areas of the environment—air, water, nature and soil. Source-oriented monitoring provides an assessment of the pressures on the environment by way of measuring the levels of pollution by source.

The EEA's work programme for 1997 gives an estimated total budget allocation of 2.75 million ecu for the media- oriented monitoring projects, and 800,000 ecu for the source-oriented monitoring projects. The two tables provide a more detailed breakdown by project. A number of UK organisations are partners in some of the consortia carrying out elements of this work programme.

A43

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what has been the average daily flow of traffic on the A43 through Silverstone over each of the last 10 years; what proportion of this flow is represented by heavy goods vehicles; and if he will make a statement. [12262]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Highways Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Lawrie Haynes. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Tim Boswell, dated 27 October 1997:

The Minister for Transport in London has asked me to reply to your recent question about traffic on the A43 through Silverstone over the past ten years.

The annual average daily flow at Silverstone in 1996 was 20,500 vehicles with 17 per cent. commercial vehicles including buses. Traffic is regularly monitored on A43 between Wood Burcote turn and the A413 (Annex A). Figures for that site are shown at Annex B.

A comparison of the 1996 figures show that the flow at the monitoring site is some 17 per cent. higher than the flow through Silverstone.

Broadcasting Masts

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what guidance he has issued to local authorities in connection with the determination of planning applications for broadcasting masts and transmitting stations. [12494]

Mr. Raynsford: Current planning policy guidance on broadcasting masts and transmitting stations is set out in planning policy guidance note 8—PPG8 revised December 1992. That guidance reflects the importance we attach to keeping to a minimum the number of broadcasting and telecommunications masts, and of sites for such installations, while ensuring that there is an effective national broadcasting and telecommunications network.

Conservation Areas

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has for the creation of conservation areas and nature reserves in Britain; and what proposals he has to encourage local authorities towards the creation and management of such sites. [12498]

Angela Eagle: Under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 the conservation agencies have powers to declare national nature reserves. There are now 188 NNRs in England. English Nature, the Government's scientific adviser, has been actively seeking to involve local authorities and other approved bodies in the management of NNRs. It has also assisted local authorities in increasing the number of local nature reserves from 288 in 1991 to 566 in 1997.

Motability (Fuel Tax Exemptions)

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will introduce a fuel tax exemption for those disabled people who have motability vehicles. [12299]

Ms Glenda Jackson: There are no plans to introduce a fuel tax exemption for those disabled people who have motability vehicles. Such a measure would be administratively expensive and impractical, and there are better ways of assisting disabled people with their transport costs. The main way is through the Government's provision of the disability living allowance which was introduced in 1992 to help people with the extra costs which arise from their care and mobility needs. DLA is increased every year, by law, by the rate of inflation, as measured by the movement in the retail prices index which takes account of the cost of petrol as well as the cost of taxi fares and other motoring costs.

Road Bridges

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those requirements of European legislation on axle weights which require strengthening of road bridges; and the cost of strengthening road bridges to the required standard. [12461]

Ms Glenda Jackson: When the United Kingdom's derogation from certain of the European Community weight limits in directive 96/53/EEC, previously 85/3/EEC, expires on 31 December 1998, we will allow an increase in the drive axle weight limit for vehicles on international journeys form 10.5 to 11.5 tonnes.

For the trunk road network the Highways Agency has an assessment and strengthening programme aimed at ensuring all the bridges meet or are brought up to meet modern standards. The latest estimate of the cost of this programme is £450 million and includes some additional costs for meeting the slightly higher requirements of European legislation. Figures are not available to estimate this additional cost.

Until local authorities have completed the assessment of their bridge stock, it will not be possible to determine accurately the cost of strengthening bridges on local roads to enable them also to carry the heavier 40 tonne lorries. It has, however, been made clear to local authorities that not all bridges on all roads need to carry such vehicles.

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will investigate the possibility of using redundant North sea oil and gas drilling platforms in the construction of new road bridges. [12286]

Ms Jackson: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Highways Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Lawrie Haynes. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Bob Blizzard, dated 27 October 1997:

> The Minister for Transport in London has asked me to respond to your Parliamentary Question on the possibility of using redundant North Sea oil and gas drilling platforms in the construction of new bridges.
> Most new bridges are constructed of steel, (steel) reinforced concrete, or a combination of both. The exact type of bridge is usually dictated by cost, aesthetics, the road geometry and the loads that the bridge will have to carry. To achieve the most effective design, the shape and strength of the various components are specifically designed and it is not often that "second hand" components can be incorporated without significant cost. However, second-hand materials can often be used quite economically after they have been recycled. For example, all the steel bars produced in the UK for reinforced concrete are made from recycled scrap steel.
> Crushed concrete can be used again as an aggregate for concrete but generally it is not suitable for making the high strength concrete needed in bridges. Recycled concrete from drilling platforms is also likely to be contaminated with salt which will cause the steel reinforcement to corrode unless special measures are taken.
> It is therefore difficult to see how steel or concrete from redundant North Sea oil and gas drilling platforms could be used economically, directly in new bridges. However, salvaged steel from North Sea platforms has already been used in temporary works and we are continuing to carry out research into finding more ways of using recycled materials including concrete.

EU Life Environment

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what United Kingdom projects are funded by European Union Life Environment moneys; at what cost; and if he will make a statement. [12506]

Angela Eagle: Since the inception of the European Union LIFE programme in 1992, Life Environment, which is administered by the European Commission, has supported 70 projects in the United Kingdom, providing total funding of around 35 million.

Under Phase 2 of the LIFE programme, which began last year and runs until 1999, 16 United Kingdom projects have so far successfully applied for funding. Theses projects, and the Community funding they have been awarded, are as listed.

Proposer	Title of project	Ecu
1996
Dorset County Council	Coastal Zone Management: development of a strategy for an open coast	199,361
BIP Group Ltd	The use of a novel biological treatment for reductio of VOC emissions to air	149,377
University of Ulster	Implementing alternative strategies for sustainable beach and dune management	630,403
City of Edinburgh	The Forth Estuary: a demonstration of effective integrated costal zone management	143,617
Buckinghamshire College	Tourfor: integrated tourism with the development of forest resources	325,122
BOC Plc	The sanitisation and recirculation of water in the processing of poultry	228,097
Isle of Wight Council	Demonstration project on integrated costal zone management	151,809

Asbestos

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures the Government are taking to encourage the replacement of asbestos in industrial applications. [12285]

Angela Eagle: All uses of blue and brown asbestos and certain uses of white asbestos are prohibited. The Control of Asbestos at Work Regulations 1987, as amended in 1992, require that employers substitute safer alternatives instead of using asbestos where it is practicable to do so.

The Government are determined to make current legislation more effective and to introduce new measures, including extending the present bans. The advice of the Health and Safety Commission is being sought on all these matters.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will strengthen protection and conservation measures for sites of special scientific interest. [12499]

Angela Eagle: We are actively taking forward the commitment to increase protection for wildlife and have proposed a review of the mechanisms for protection and maintaining SSSIs. Officials are currently undertaking preliminary discussions on this important issue.

Birds

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to reverse the decline of previously common hedgerow, woodland and farmland species of bird life. [12497]

Angela Eagle: The Government have taken positive steps to help reverse the decline in common hedgerow, woodland and farmland bird species. They include:

A biodiversity steering group report, published in December 1995, contained costed action plans for bird species, including the song thrush and skylark, and costed habitat action plans for cereal field margins, lowland wet grassland and other important bird habitats. Further costed action plans for other important bird habitats and song bird species are being prepared.

The Government are working with conservation and farming organisations to improve the efficiency and targeting of agri-environmental schemes which encourage environmentally sensitive farming.

MAFF has commissioned research into the relationship between farming practices over the last 20 years and populations of farmland birds. MAFF also funds research on establishment and maintenance of hedgerows and has large programmes to support agri-environment schemes and to help promote minimisation of the use of pesticides.

A comprehensive literature review, recently published, considered the possible indirect effect of pesticides on farmland birds. Further research is planned in this area.

An approval system is in place for new pesticides, and existing pesticides are subject to an EU review programme. Older pesticides are therefore reviewed against modern standards.

A pesticide's forum, including agricultural, environmental, food and other groups, has recently published an action plan for the responsible use of pesticides.

A group has been set up to recommend ways of strengthening the Hedgerow Regulations 1997, so that they give better protection for hedgerows. The group is working towards making its recommendations by the end of December this year.

Railtrack (Radio Aerial Masts)

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he had made of the advantages and disadvantages of Railtrack retaining its exemption from planning controls with particular reference to radio aerial masts. [12531]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My Department is aware of concerns which have been expressed about the use of permitted development rights by statutory undertakers such as Railtrack. Last year we commissioned research to establish the extent to which statutory undertakers rely on permitted development rights and to consider whether any changes are needed. The research project is now complete and we are considering the findings.

European Agency for Safety and Health at Work

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the (a) purpose and (b) annual budget of the European Agency for Safety and Health at Work. [12527]

Angela Eagle: The purpose of the European Agency for Safety and Health at Work is to promote improvements in health and safety by collecting and disseminating available technical, scientific and economic information, of relevance to health and safety, throughout the Community and more widely.

The annual budget for the agency for 1997 is 4 million ecu, around £2.9 million.

Work-related Casualties

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to reduce the number of deaths and serious accidents at work; and if he will make a statement on the factors underlying recent increases in work-related casualties. [12479]

Angela Eagle: The Government share concern about the recent increase in workplace accidents. The reasons for the increase are not straightforward and the Health and Safety Commission is conducting further analysis to identify the main causes and influences. The HSC's plan of work for 1997–98 sets out what the Health and Safety Commission and Health and Safety Executive are doing to promote health and safety. But the main responsibility lies with employers and others in industry—they have a legal obligation to manage health and safety properly and they need to do better.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many (a) employees and (b) self-employed people (i) were killed or (ii) received major injuries at the workplace in each year since 1993. [12809]

Angela Eagle: The table shows the total number of fatal and major injuries to employees and self employed people reported to enforcing authorities between 1992–93 and 1996–97—years commencing 1 April.

Year	Employees	Self-employed
Fatal injuries
1992–93	276	63
1993–94	245	51
1994–95	191	81
1995–96	209	49
1996–97[1]	210	77
Major injuries
1992–93	16,938	1,115
1993–94	16,705	1,274
1994–95	17,041	1,313
1995–96	16,568	1,166
1996–97[1]	[2]27,360	[2]1,311

[1] Provisional. Finalised figures will be available in April 1998.

[2] Definition of major injury extended when The Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1995 came into force on 1 April 1996.

Planning Applications

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many planning applications, by region, have been referred to the Sports Council for England under the terms of the General Development Procedure Order 1995 as amended with effect from 5 August 1996. [12707]

Mr. Raynsford: Between 5 August 1996 and 31 July 1997, 288 applications were referred to the English Sports Council as a statutory consultee. The English Sports Council has provided the following breakdown of this total, based on their regions:

	Number
East	42
East Midlands	42
Greater London	34
North	20
North-West	49
South	25
South-East	11
South-West	34
West Midlands	17
Yorkshire	14

Planning Legislation

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to review the operation of the Town and Country Planning (General Permitted Development) Order 1995 and the Town and Country Planning (Demolition-Description of Buildings) Direction 1995; and if he will make a statement. [12706]

Mr. Raynsford: There are no immediate plans for a review of the operation of either the order or the direction. However, we keep under consideration the need for amendments to these documents in the light of representations received on various issues. Any changes which we proposed introducing to either the permitted development order or the demolition direction would be the subject of consultation.

Energy and Environmental Education

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans his Department has to review its relationship with non-governmental organisations involved in energy and environmental education. [12545]

Angela Eagle: We propose to develop the constructive relationship we have with the many non-governmental organisations involved in energy and environmental education. In particular we look forward to improving co-ordination of initiatives through the panel on sustainable development education which we are setting up.

PVC

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the suitability of PVC for use in construction of publicly funded buildings. [12594]

Mr. Raynsford: One of the potential problems with the use of PVC materials in construction is the possibility of rapid fire spread, and guidance is given on this aspect in Approved Document B (Fire Safety) to the Building Regulations 1991. These regulations make no distinction between publicly funded buildings and any other buildings.

In the case of fire, building regulations are intended to ensure that a reasonable standard of safety is provided. The protection of property, including the building itself, may require additional measures which are the responsibility of either the building owner or insurers to specify on an individual basis and would be dependent on the particular risk associated with the proposed use of the building.

The approved document recognises that the choice of materials for walls and ceilings can significantly affect the spread of a fire and its rate of growth, even though they may not be the materials first ignited. Guidance is therefore given in the approved document on both the location and spacing of thermoplastic and other materials that do not satisfy the performance criteria of British Standard fire tests.

With regard to the general use of PVC in the construction of buildings my Department has consulted with the Department of Health, the Health and Safety Executive and the Building Research Establishment. It was concluded from this consultation that there are no known serious hazards to human health or the environment associated with the use of PVC.

Road Repairs

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans the Government have to raise the minimum acceptable standards of repair for private contractors digging up roads in the United Kingdom in order to lay pipes and cables. [12573]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The standards to be followed by undertakers when reinstating the highway on completion of their works in the street are set out in a national specification published under the New Roads and Street Works Act 1991. The undertaker concerned is fully responsible for carrying out the work in compliance with the specification, and failure to comply with the reinstatement standards is a criminal offence which can attract a penalty of up to £1,000.

The reinstatement specification is currently under review by the Highway Authorities and Utilities Committee, which represents the main practitioners. The Government will give very careful consideration to any recommendations which the committee makes.

Planning Appeals (Tennis)

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many planning appeals have been dealt with by his Department during the last 10 years in respect of housing or commercial development on land in use or formerly in use for tennis or in connection with tennis; how many such appeals were allowed; and whether there was a net gain or net loss in the land available for tennis. [12705]

Mr. Raynsford: The provision of information on planning appeals is the responsibility of the Planning Inspectorate. I have asked the Inspectorate's chief executive, Mr. Chris Shepley, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from C. J. Shepley to Mr. Edward Davey, dated 27 October 1997:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your Question about planning appeal decisions during the last 10 years for housing or commercial development on land previously used for, or in connection with, tennis.

The Inspectorate only records details of proposed land uses, not those in, or previously in, existence when an appeal is received. Therefore, the information requested is regrettably not available.

Oil Pollution

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what statutory obligations will be placed on local authorities to achieve proper compliance with the International Maritime Organisation's convention on oil pollution preparedness, response and co-operation, with particular reference to articles 3 and 6; and what resources will be provided to assist them in meeting any such obligations. [12702]

Ms Glenda Jackson: None. Regulations to implement the oil pollution preparedness, response and co-operation convention, covering harbour authorities, operators of oil handling facilities and operators of offshore installations, are expected to come into force early next year. They will place no obligations on local authorities. However, the current review of the national contingency plan is considering, amongst other matters, the issue of local authorities' responsibilities for oil pollution, preparedness and response.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to issue implementation rules in relation to the United Kingdom's treaty obligations under the International Maritime Organisation's convention on oil pollution preparedness, response and co-operation. [12696]

Ms Jackson: Regulations implementing the oil pollution preparedness, response and co-operation—OPRC—convention are expected to come into force early next year. The Coastguard Agency's marine pollution control unit has recently gone out to public consultation on the draft regulations.

Goods and Services (Payments)

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list each of the functions relating to payment for goods or services supplied for which his Department is responsible indicating the management systems purchased, all subcontractors involved in the work, co-operative arrangements with other Departments; and the costs of the systems and processes in the last year for which figures are available. [12561]

Angela Eagle: The following functions and systems have been purchased.

	System purchased	Function	Name of sub-contractors	Co-operative arrangements	Cost in last financial year (£000)
DETR	Finest	Accounting, purchasing and invoicing	Software AG WS Atkins Information Technology	None	n/a
Environment Agency	McKeown	Accounting, purchasing and invoicing	None	None	n/a
Health and Safety Executive	McKeown	Accounting, purchasing and invoicing	None	None	576
Rural Development	CFACS	Purchasing and invoicing	Cedardata	None	52
Planning Inspectorate	Sunsystem	Accounting, purchasing and invoicing	None	None	16
Highways Agency	SunBusiness invoice register	Invoicing	Thompson Systems	None	11

Full costs for all systems cannot be obtained due to disproportionate costs.

Council Tax Arrears

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will bring in legislation to exclude imprisonment as an option at magistrates' disposal when they consider cases of poll tax and council tax arrears. [12719]

Mr. Raynsford: We have no plans to do so. Committal remains an important tool for local authorities in their efforts to recover unpaid council tax and community charge, but it is used as a last resort and a debtor can be imprisoned only where a magistrate is satisfied that failure to pay has been due to wilful refusal or culpable neglect. However, the Department has recently issued a consultation paper on the enforcement of council tax debts which, amongst other things, invites views on giving magistrates powers to impose a community service order as an additional enforcement option.

Sports Clubs

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to review the maximum length of tenancy a court may grant to a sports club under the terms of the Landlord and Tenant Act 1954. [12704]

Mr. Raynsford: The Landlord and Tenant Act 1954 enables courts to order the renewal of business tenancies—including sports club tenancies—for a maximum of 14 years. The Law Commission has recommended increasing this to 15 years. Other than considering this recommendation, we have no plans to review the maximum length of tenancy courts may grant when considering applications for renewals of leases under the 1954 Act.

I know there is concern over the circumstances in which landlords may be able to frustrate applications by sports clubs for the renewal of their leases. We are considering this point.

Energy Education

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to improve co-ordination between different Government Departments and their agencies when preparing educational material on energy; and if he will make a statement. [12547]

Angela Eagle: A co-ordinating group of Government Departments with an interest in sustainable development education in England, including energy education, has been established to ensure that Government action is well co-ordinated.

Substances Regulation Working Group

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects the European working group on substances regulation to report; what recommendations were submitted from the United Kingdom through (a) the Health and Safety Executive and (b) the Department of the Environment; and if he will make a statement. [12806]

Angela Eagle: This question has been taken to relate to the existing substances regulation. The Committee, composed of representatives of the member States and chaired by the European Commission, awaits the outcome of detailed technical discussions underway in working groups, which will form the basis of any recommendation for measures to be taken in relation to substances covered by the Regulation. The UK has the lead on 13 of the 78 substances on the first and second priority lists. The assessments on 30 substances are currently under discussion; Nine submitted by the UK. Some are at a more advanced stage than others but the nine UK assessments should complete the technical review stage over the next six months before progressing to Committee stage.

The Health and Safety Executive, the Environment Agency, and environment directorates within the Department of Environment, Transport and the Regions co-operate closely, submitting joint assessments to working groups.

Trichloroethylene

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to revise occupational exposure limits for trichloroethylene; and if he will make a statement. [12805]

Angela Eagle: The Health and Safety Commission has no immediate plans to revise the current maximum exposure limits for trichloroethylene. The Health and Safety Executive and the Department for the Environment, Transport and the Regions have prepared a comprehensive risk assessment document on trichloroethylene under the EU existing substances regulation. This document is still being discussed by member states. Decisions on any further risk reduction measures will be made after these discussions are concluded.

Disabled People (Parking Permits)

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to review the arrangements for issuing orange badge parking permits to disabled people. [12759]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We have no plans at present to change either the criteria for issuing orange badges or the parking concessions granted to badge holders under the scheme. However, the Government have agreed, subject to parliamentary scrutiny, to a European Commission proposal for a recommendation to member states for a standard design for national parking badges to facilitate their mutual recognition. If finally agreed, the new design would be introduced in the United Kingdom over the normal three-year replacement cycle from 1 January 2000.

Housing Association Rents

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the total gross revenue from housing association rents in the last year for which figures are available; and what proportion of this is met by housing benefit. [12834]

Mr. Raynsford: The latest information available on gross revenue from housing association rents is for 1995–96 and covers 95 per cent. of the housing stock owned by associations. In England during that year the gross revenue produced by this stock was around £2,048 million. The amount of housing benefit paid to the tenants of all housing association stock in England during 1995–96 is estimated to have been around £1,395 million.

Weald and Downland Roads Project

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions to what extent the impact on employment (a) in Hastings and (b) Tunbridge Wells was taken into account in the decision not to allow the Weald and Downland design, build, finance and operate to proceed. [12783]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The impact on employment of the DBFO project was one of the many issues assessed under the five criteria—accessibility, safety, economy, the environment and integration—when the decision not to proceed with the DBFO project as a whole was taken.

London Underground

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on London Underground's Project Prestige. [12880]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Prestige project, which will provide London Transport with a new ticketing system for both London Underground and London Transport Buses, is currently under negotiation between London Transport and Transys, a private sector consortium. It is hoped that negotiations will be completed in the near future.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to make an announcement on the future funding arrangements for London Underground. [12980]

Ms Jackson: The Government are urgently considering a range of options for the future funding of London Underground, but it is too early to say when an announcement will be made.

Transport Select Committee Reports

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will review the former Government's responses to the Transport Select Committee's reports on (a) United Kingdom airport capacity—HC644 of Session 1995–96—and (b) the adequacy and enforcement of regulations governing heavy goods vehicles, buses and coaches—HC54 of Session 1996–97. [12971]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government will be taking fully into account the helpful reports of the Select Committee in developing policy on (a) aviation related matters within the proposed "Integrated Transport" White Paper and (b) enforcement of heavy goods vehicles, buses and coaches.

Cycling

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the actions taken by his Department since 1 May to increase provision for cyclists and increase cycle use. [12991]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We have given our endorsement to the national cycling strategy which aims to quadruple cycle use by 2012. The NCS has a common ownership, having been established by consensus involving a wide range of bodies. I have chaired two meetings of the national Cycling Forum to discuss a range of issues involved in taking the strategy forward. We are now working actively with others to implement it. The Department also provides technical advice to local authority practitioners who play a significant role in developing initiatives at a local level. In July we hosted a regional seminar aimed at traffic engineers and planners to promote the NCS. And in August we published two traffic advisory leaflets outlining results of research on cycle-related issues.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to develop a strategic cycle lane network throughout London; and if he will make a statement. [12897]

Ms Jackson: The Government are supporting the London Cycle Network which is a 2,500 km strategic network of routes being developed by 33 London boroughs. Approximately 30 per cent. of the network exists already. Whilst the boroughs total estimated cost is £67 million, some £45 million is sought through the transport policies and programme funding, with additional sources of funding coming from the Traffic Director for London—on red routes—the Highways Agency—on trunk roads—and the Millennium Commission as well as the boroughs themselves. Now in its third year of implementation the LCN has so far received TPP allocation of £10.55 million.

Motor Vehicle Insurance

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment his Department has made of the advantages of introducing a requirement for displaying insurance certificates in motor vehicles. [12801]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Such a requirement could give some assurance that an insurance policy for the vehicle was in force; accompanying provisions to prevent the display of certificates for policies which had been cancelled would also be needed. Display of a certificate would however provide no assurance that the driver was covered by an insurance policy or was complying with policy conditions. The value of a requirement to display would therefore be less in this country than in those countries which have vehicle-related insurance systems, under which cover is taken out for a particular vehicle regardless of who drives it. Although the Government have not discarded the possibility of a requirement to display evidence of insurance, it appears at present that other measures, such as a computerised insurance database, would offer a better approach to the problem of dealing with the irresponsible minority of drivers who fail to take out insurance. The nation-wide introduction of wheelclamping for vehicles for which vehicle excise duty has been evaded will also provide a significant knock on benefit for enforcement of the compulsory insurance requirements.

Integrated Transport Strategy Seminars

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for what reasons hon. Members have not been invited to attend seminars on the development of an integrated transport strategy being organised by the Government office for the south-east; and if he will make a statement. [12875]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government office has held a number of seminars with local authorities, transport operators, users and environmental groups and others to discuss transport policy. To be effective, numbers attending had to be limited and so it was not possible to invite the region's 83 Members of Parliament. The Department did, however, send all hon. Members copies of the consultation documents on the role of the trunk road network in England and on developing an integrated transport policy: and would welcome any contributions which Members of Parliament might wish to make.

Air Misses

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will meet representatives from the Civil Aviation Authority to discuss the occurrence of near misses between aeroplanes in flight; and if he will make a statement. [12898]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Both Ministers and senior officials have discussed these issues with representatives of the Civil Aviation Authority and National Air Traffic Services Limited, and will continue to do so.

Regional Airports

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those regional airports which have lost their direct air links to Heathrow or Gatwick airports over the last five years. [12992]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Regional airports in the UK that have lost their direct air services to Heathrow and Gatwick since 1992, are as follows:

To Heathrow	To Gatwick
Birmingham	Birmingham
East Midlands	Cardiff
(Inverness)[1]	East Midlands
Liverpool	Liverpool
Newquay[2]
Plymouth[2]

[1] British Airways have announced that they intend to transfer the Inverness service from Heathrow to Gatwick with effect from 17 November 1997.

[2] Newquay and Plymouth are now served from Gatwick.

Integrated Transport Policy

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those organisations that have responded to date to the consultation exercise on an integrated transport policy. [12973]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Some 20,000 copies of the consultation document on developing an integrated transport policy have been sent out to members of the public and organisations. So far, around 4,000 responses have been received and officials are now entering details of these on to a database so that they can be properly analysed. The great bulk of responses received to date are from individuals and it is likely that most organisations such as business and local authorities will contribute nearer the closing date of 14 November.

A full report on the consultation exercise will be published with the White Paper.

Drivers (Eyesight)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent research his Department has evaluated into the awareness of drivers of poor eyesight. [12863]

Ms Glenda Jackson: In 1995 the Department commissioned Professor W.N. Charman of the University of Manchester Institute of Science and Technology to undertake a thorough review of the research on driver vision standards.

The Department published his report earlier this year and it is available as "Road Safety Research Report No. 2 vision and Driving—A Literature Review and Commentary". I am arranging for copies to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his Department's estimate of the number of drivers in the United Kingdom who are unaware that their eyesight is below the safe minimum standard. [12793]

Ms Jackson: A survey carried out by the Transport Research Laboratory 1992 found that about 2.5 per cent. of drivers did not meet the statutory requirement of being able to read a number plate in good light from a distance of 20.5m with glasses or contact lenses if worn. A subsequent survey commissioned by others has suggested a higher figure. It would clearly be difficult to establish how many of the drivers concerned were unaware that their eyesight had fallen below the required standard. The Department strongly advises drivers to check themselves against the number plate standard regularly. Where eyesight is below the required standard, the normal remedy will be to obtain new glasses or contact lenses. Drivers who cannot meet the standard must notify the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency immediately and stop driving; otherwise they are committing a criminal offence. Drivers who require glasses or contact lenses in order to meet the standard must wear them whenever driving.

Rented Housing

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the gross cost to the public sector if all local authority rents were to be cut by 10 per cent.; and what would be the cost net of savings in housing benefits. [12836]

Mr. Raynsford: A 10 per cent. reduction in guideline rents in 1998–99 for housing revenue account local authorities in England would have the following estimated effects:

Present value (discounting to 1996–97) of effects from 1998–99 to 2027–28
1996–97 prices discounting to 1996–97

Effect	Present value (£ million)
Loss of gross rental income	5,819.6
Savings in rent rebates	4,378.2
Saving in public expenditure linked to the RPI	1,341.4
Net public expenditure cost	100.0

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what increase in subsidy to housing associations would be necessary to produce a reduction of 10 per cent. in the average level of housing association rents. [12835]

Mr. Raynsford: Rent subsidies are not paid to housing associations. Social housing grant is a capital grant paid on new housing association development, but any changes in the grant rate for new development would not directly affect rents on existing housing association stock.

Minerals (Carriage by Rail)

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will amend the regulations for the carriage of minerals by rail in order to secure the same control on dust emission as is required by road transport. [12760]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Local authorities already have adequate powers to control dust emissions from minerals carried by rail. They can impose planning conditions under the Town and Country Planning Act 1990, and take enforcement action under the statutory nuisance provisions of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Green Belt

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Hitchin and Harpenden (Mr. Lilley), of 21 July, Official Report, column 430, on how many occasions an inquiry into a strategic or unitary development plan has proposed large-scale releases of green belt land for housing; and if he will list those which he or his predecessors have called in or have requested modifications. [12974]

Mr. Raynsford: This information is not held centrally and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Local Government Review

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the direct cost to public funds of the local government review process in England between April 1992 and March 1997. [12941]

Mr. Raynsford: The cost of the Local Government Commission, which undertook the structural review of local government during those years, is as follows:

Year	Total expenditure £ million
1992–93	2.056
1993–94	5.146
1994–95	7.913
1995–96	4.047
1996–97	2.099

Working Time Directive

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps are being taken to extend the scope of the European Union working time directive to cover transport workers. [12879]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The European Commission published a White Paper in July on proposals for extending the provisions of the working time directive to the excluded sectors. We are currently considering this and will reply to the Commission in due course.

Congestion Charging

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the local authorities currently piloting congestion charging schemes; and what plans he has for extending such trials. [12990]

Ms Glenda Jackson: An experiment funded by my Department is under way in Leicester. This is a research project using volunteers. Compulsory charging could not be undertaken, even on a trial basis, without new primary legislation. Whether to introduce such legislation, and whether to facilitate further experimental schemes, are issues that the Government are considering as part of the preparation for the integrated transport policy White Paper.

Gas Power

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment his Department has made of the impact of the Rio II treaty on United Kingdom policy towards gas power. [11102]

Mr. Battle: I have been asked to reply

The United Nations General Assembly special session on 23 to 27 June 1997 did not result in any treaty commitments. However, in considering applications for gas-fired and other forms of power stations, we will ensure consistency with the wider objectives of secure, diverse and sustainable supplies of energy at competitive prices and meeting environmental targets.

Multilateral Agreement on Investment

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what analysis the Government have carried out on the environmental labour and development impact of the multilateral agreement on investment. [11864]

Mrs. Roche: I have been asked to reply.

The Government are committed to safeguarding the international environment, to eliminating abusive labour practices and to promoting sustainable development in both developing and industrialised countries. We would not want to see an agreement which undermined our environmental, labour or development policies.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent representations she has received from asylum seekers relating to their living standards. [11656]

Mr. Keith Bradley: We have received approximately 40 letters about the benefit position of asylum seekers from hon. Members, members of the public and asylum seekers' representatives. We have also received a copy of the report, "Past Misery, Present Muddle" from the charity the Medical Foundation for the Victims of Torture.

As part of the Home Office's comprehensive spending review, an interdepartmental review is currently considering all aspects of arrangements for asylum seekers, including the provision of accommodation and support.

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps she will take to co-ordinate activities between the Child Support Agency and the Benefits Agency to combat benefit fraud; and if she will assess the advantages of measures to deal with deliberate evasion of child maintenance by absent parents. [12489]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Children are entitled to the support of both parents wherever they live. It is not acceptable that parents should seek to avoid their responsibilities and one of our key aims for the Child Support Agency is to ensure that more absent parents pay the maintenance they owe.

The Child Support Agency and the Benefits Agency have established liaison arrangements to ensure that the two agencies work effectively together in providing an improved level of service for their joint customers. These include the shared use of common information or allegations made by the public to detect and prevent benefit fraud and the stationing of fraud liaison officers at Child Support Agency centres. Questions about child support are now included in the income support claim form to allow the maintenance process to begin as soon as benefit is claimed. And, from April 1998, parents with care will be helped to complete a maintenance application form when visited by Benefits Agency staff at the start of their income support claim.

Earnings Disregards

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the current value of earnings disregards under income support, housing benefit and jobseeker's allowance if they had been increased (a) in line with prices and (b) in line with earnings since April 1988. [12284]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is in the table.

Benefit	Rate when introduced £	Date of introduction	Current rate £	Value if increased in line with prices since date introduced £	Value if increased in line with earnings since date introduced £
Income support	5	April 1988	5	7.35	8.50
	10	October 1996	10	10.25	10.40
	15	April 1988	15	22.05	25.60
Jobseeker's allowance	5	October 1996	5	5.15	5.20
	10	October 1996	10	10.25	10.40
	15	October 1996	15	15.40	15.65
Housing Benefit	5	April 1988	5	7.35	8.50
	10	April 1988	10	14.75	17.10
	15	April 1988	15	22.05	25.60
	15	April 1988	25	22.05	25.60
Housing benefit child care disregard	40	October 1994	60	43.05	44.75

1. The figures have been rounded to the nearest 5 p at each uprating date.
2. The retail prices index (all items) less rent, local taxes and mortgage interest payments as published by the Office of National Statistics, has been used in this table.
3. Jobseeker's allowance replaced income support for the unemployed in October 1996.
4. The £15 disregard for housing benefit was increased for lone parents to £25 in October 1990.
5. The £40 child care disregard on housing benefit was increased to £60 in April, 1996.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will investigate the level of accuracy of the CSA assessments. [12487]

Mr. Keith Bradley: We are looking closely at all aspects of the Child Support Agency to ensure that it provides an efficient and effective service.

The receipt of regular maintenance is a key part of the Government's strategy for helping lone mothers into work. All the indicators currently in place show a continuing improvement in the accuracy of assessments. We expect this trend to be maintained both as the result of continued efforts by the agency's staff and as the provisions contained in the Social Security Bill are implemented in due course. These provisions will improve and simplify the decision-making process.

Social Protection

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will place in the Library a copy of the full correspondence between her Department and European Commissioner Flynn on the European Union discussion document on social protection. [12509]

Mr. Keith Bradley: In March the European Commission published, "Communication on Modernising and Improving Social Protection in the European Union", with the invitation that recipients submit observations on the range of issues covered.

A copy of the letter sent to Commissioner Flynn on 17 July has been placed in the Library. This response welcomed a well structured discussion in Europe of Key issues in social protection, but ruled out direct involvement of the EU in decisions which remain the responsibility of member states. It also gave an outline of the Government's priorities and thinking on modernising social protection.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to review the all work test for incapacity benefit. [12488]

Mr. Denham: We are reviewing all aspects of the social security system. We will assess whether sickness and disability benefits are consistent with our overall aims to encourage work, savings and honesty. A key aim is to help people focus on their capacity for work rather than their disability and provide a climate which will help them achieve independence and play a fuller part in society.

As part of this we will be looking at a number of eligibility issues including those surrounding the all work test, and will be seeking to ensure the test provides a fair assessment of incapacity for benefit purposes.

Benefit Overpayment

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what procedures apply in respect of individuals seeking the return of money they have repaid for benefit overpayment subsequently determined by an adjudicating officer as not requiring repayment. [12490]

Mr. Keith Bradley: All overpayments of benefit are looked at individually and their recoverability decided upon on the basis of the facts and circumstances of the case as known at the time of the decision. However, where the decision to recover an overpayment is subsequently reversed, this will affect only the balance of the overpayment still outstanding.

Correspondence Unit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many letters have been passed on to her Department's correspondence unit in each month since May 1997; and if she will make a statement; [12936]

(2) how many and what percentage of correspondence answered by her Department's correspondence unit receives a full response in (a) a week or less, (b) one to two weeks, (c) two to three weeks, (d) three to four weeks, (e) between one and two months, (f) over two months and (g) over six months; and if she will make a statement; [12934]

(3) how many and what percentage of correspondence answered by her Department's correspondence unit receives a holding reply prior to a full response; [12933]

(4) how many people are employed (a) full-time and (b) part-time in her Department's correspondence unit; [12937]

(5) under what circumstances correspondence sent to her Department is passed on to the correspondence unit; and if she will make a statement. [12935]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows.

During the period May to September 1997, departmental Ministers received around 25,000 letters from hon. Members, members of the public and others. This compares with around 15,000 letters received by Ministers during the same period last year. The figures for each month are as follows:

Total letters received

	1996	1997
May	3,244	4,124
June	3,003	5,458
July	4,043	6,948
August	2,149	4,374
September	2,897	4,136
Total	15,336	25,040

A correspondence section attached to Ministers' offices, which has 13 full-time staff, receives all correspondence and seeks advice from officials, including those in the policy correspondence unit. Other units and officials elsewhere in the Department also deal with correspondence.

Our target is to reply to all letters within 20 working days. Ministers reply personally to about 30 per cent. of letters. The target response time has been achieved for 42 per cent. of letters in the last five months. Detailed figures are shown in the table:

Ministerial replies issued

			Number of days
	Up to 20	21–40	40+
May
Per cent.	100	0	0
June
Number	278	58	0
Per cent.	83	17	0

Number	485	569	214
Per cent.	38	45	17
September
Number	349	629	368
Per cent.	26	47	27

1. Figures for turn around times of correspondence answered by officials are not available.
2. Figures for the number of holding replies are not kept but all letters are acknowledged shortly after receipt.

We remain committed to answering all correspondence within 20 working days and are taking active measures to reduce turnaround times.

Lone Parents

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list for the most recent available period, (a) the number of claimants of one-parent benefit in the United Kingdom and each region and nation, (b) the estimated number of claimants of one-parent benefit for the same areas who are (i) working and (ii) working and receiving family credit, (c) the number of claimants of one-parent benefit who are also receiving lone-parent premium for the same areas and (d) the number of new claimants in each area over the most recent 12 month period. [12979]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table:

[2] As at 31 December 1996. Based on 1 per cent. sample of child benefit centre records.

[3] As at 31 December 1996. Represents the maximum number of such lone parents that could potentially be in receipt of OPB. Based on 5 per cent. sample of family credit records.

[4] Income support as at November 1996, based on Quarterly Statistical Enquiry. Excludes 6,000 jobseeker's allowance (Income based) cases which cannot be split by country/region.

[5] Excludes OPB recipients receiving income support/jobseeker's allowance/housing benefit/council tax benefit but not receiving a lone parent premium because they receive a higher value premium e.g., disabled child premium.

[6] Housing benefit/council tax benefit recipients not also in receipt of IS/JSA, as at May 1996. Based on HB/CTB Annual Statistical Enquiry. There is an overlap as most people receive both HB and CTB.

[7] For year ending 31 December 1996. Based on 1 per cent. sample of child benefit centre records.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to her answer of 30 July, Official Report, column 364, what estimate she has made of the number of lone parents in receipt of income support in each of the next three financial years. [12822]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The latest estimates of the number of lone parents in receipt of income support in each of the next three financial years are shown in the table. Unfortunately revised estimates will not actually be available until publication of the 1998 social security departmental report next Spring.

Lone parents in receipt of income support

1. Figures are consistent with those given in tables 6 and 7 in the 1997 Social Security Departmental Report and are rounded to the nearest thousand.

2. Figures are based on a 5 per cent sample and as such are subject to a degree of sampling variation.

Backdating

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims for benefit made in the last year were eventually backdated (a) up to one month, (b) at least one month but less than three months, (c) at least three months but less than 12 months and (d) at least 12 months for each of the major social security benefits. [12818]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows.

Number of claimants affected as a result of changes to the backdating rules from April 1997 and June/October 1998

[1] Information not available.

[2] Information not readily available.

Information is based on a small ad-hoc survey of benefit claims undertaken during early 1996.

Figures may not sum due to rounding.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment she has made of the main reasons why individuals claim benefits late; and if she will make a statement. [12819]

Mr. Bradley: An ad hoc survey of a small number of Benefits Agency local offices was undertaken in early 1996 to provide information on the extent of backdating and, in those benefits where it was possible to identify, the reason for backdating.

This information was used in deciding on the range of exceptions provided in the current regulations.

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the time-table for the implementation of limits on the backdating of benefits to one month. [12953]

Mr. Bradley: We intend to implement the new backdating rules in June 1998 for all benefits except housing benefit and council tax benefit which will be implemented in October 1998.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Custodial Sentences

11. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the deterrent effects of custodial sentences. [11667]

Ms Quin: The Home Office research and statistics directorate has recently commissioned a literature review of the deterrent effect of the various sentencing options which will be completed early next year.

Crime (Rural Areas)

17. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what initiatives he intends to take to reduce crime in rural areas. [11673]

Mr. Michael: Our comprehensive strategy against crime includes a new statutory duty on local authorities and the police to develop local partnerships to prevent crime and promote community safety. This will benefit all parts of the country: rural as well as urban and inner city by targeting the specific problems and needs of each area.

Criminal Justice

22. Ms Blears: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to reduce delays in the criminal justice system. [11678]

25. Mr. Cranston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to tackle delays in the criminal justice system. [11681]

Mr. Michael: The Government are committed to tackling delay throughout the criminal justice system and have pledged to halve the time taken to deal with persistent young offenders. We have accepted proposals from the review of delay in the criminal justice system which are designed to enable straightforward guilty plea cases to be dealt within days of charge, improve case management in magistrates courts and start indictable-only cases in the Crown Court. The Crime and Disorder Bill will contain the necessary measures and, to underpin them, will make provision for statutory time limits which will be tougher for young offenders than for adults, and tougher still for persistent young offenders. Our proposals for legislation to speed up youth justice were published in a consultation paper, "Tackling Delay in the Youth Justice System", on 15 October when we also published comprehensive guidance for youth justice agencies on tackling delays within the existing statutory framework.

European Convention on Human Rights

23. Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for the incorporation of the European convention on human rights. [11679]

Mr. Straw: We have made rapid progress on this. We introduced the Human Rights Bill in another place last Thursday and we published the White Paper "Rights Brought Home" last Friday.

Private Security Industry

24. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce the statutory regulation of the private security industry. [11680]

Mr. Michael: We intend to introduce statutory regulation of the private security industry as soon as possible. As we warned in opposition, we will not be able to bring forward legislation in our first year of office, but as is shown by our consultation exercise, we are already working with the industry and others to achieve a consensus on the best way to provide a comprehensive, effective and streamlined system of regulations.

38. Mr. Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce the statutory regulation of the private security industry. [11694]

Mr. Michael: We intend to introduce statutory regulation of the private security industry as soon as possible. We will not be able to bring forward legislation in our first year of office, as we warned before the election, but we have recently completed a consultation exercise with the industry and others on the best way to provide a comprehensive, effective and streamlined system. We want to look beyond the narrow proposals put forward by the previous Government which focused only on criminal record checks for the contract guarding sector of the industry. In opposition we welcomed the recommendations of the Home Affairs Committee on regulation. However, the Committee did not offer a detailed blueprint and in the light of the responses received to the consultation exercise we will consider the industry as a whole to decide what action is needed.

Rural Police Officers

26. Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to recruit more police officers in rural areas. [11682]

32. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to ensure that police authorities have the resources to enable more police officers to be recruited in rural areas. [11688]

Mr. Michael: I recognise that people in rural communities have different policing needs from those who live in urban areas, but the Government have no direct control over police numbers. Under legislation passed by the previous Government, it is for individual chief constables to determine the number of police officers in each force having regard to the resources available to them.

We are working with the police to reduce administrative burdens and to increase civilianisation which will allow chief constables to put more officers on the beat. We also intend to introduce legislation which will place a statutory duty on all local authorities and the police jointly to develop partnerships to reduce crime. Local communities will be able to identify their needs and the strategies to tackle them.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to recruit more police officers in rural areas. [11658]

Mr. Michael: People in rural communities have different policing needs from those in urban areas, but the Government have no direct control over police numbers in either. Under legislation passed by the previous Government, it is for individual chief constables to determine the number of police officers in each force, having regard to the resources available to them and their deployment.

We are working with the police to reduce administrative burdens and to enable chief constables to put more officers out into the community. We also intend to introduce legislation which will place a statutory duty on all local authorities and the police jointly to develop partnerships to cut crime in rural and urban areas alike.

Crime Prevention (Local Authorities)

27. Mr. Rammell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the Government's plans to give local authorities statutory powers for crime prevention. [11683]

34. Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he will introduce to increase the involvement of local authorities in combating crime. [11690]

Mr. Michael: Details of our proposals were set out in the consultation document, "Getting to Grips with Crime—a new framework for Local Action", which we published on 17 September. It is our intention to require local authorities and the police service together to conduct an audit of local crime and disorder problems, to draw up a strategy for tackling them and to publish targets for delivering the strategy. This process must be conducted on the basis of full consultation with local people and a wide range of other key partners.

Crime (EU Discussions)

28. Mrs. Fiona Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met his European counterparts to discuss crime levels. [11684]

Ms Quin: My right hon. Friend and I met all the Justice and Home Affairs Ministers of the European Union on 9 and 10 October and, most recently, on 20 and 21 October my right hon. Friend met the French Justice and Interior Ministers. On both occasions, a useful discussion on a number of crime-related issues took place.

Young Offenders

29. Mr. Khabra: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to encourage the voluntary sector to participate in offering opportunities for young people convicted of crimes. [11685]

Mr. Michael: Through the new deal for unemployed 18–24-year-olds, we are encouraging voluntary organisations to come forward with a wide range of programmes and opportunities which will address the employability needs of young unemployed people, including those convicted of crimes, as well as doing useful work for the community.

In addition, the voluntary sector, in partnership with probation and prison services and other statutory agencies, delivers a range of programmes for young offenders, including drug and alcohol counselling, advice on employment, training and education opportunities, accommodation provision and developmental programmes.

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to introduce more severe penalties for young offenders; and if he will make a statement. [11676]

Mr. Michael: Our proposals for reform of the youth justice system have been set out in three consultation papers published in the last five weeks. Our aim is a faster, more efficient youth justice system with a clear focus on preventing re-offending. A new final warning scheme will end multiple cautions and ensure that firm action is taken quickly when young people offend. A new court order will require young people to make reparation to victims. We will strengthen community penalties and ensure effective custodial sentences for the most serious and persistent young offenders.

Anti-social Behaviour

30. Caroline Flint: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the relationship between anti-social behaviour and crime. [11686]

Mr. Michael: The British crime survey has demonstrated a link between disorder or low-level misbehaviour and the levels of more serious crime in an area.

Anti-social behaviour also causes alarm and distress and heightens the fear of crime. Tackling this sort of conduct and preventing its escalating into more serious criminal behaviour is a central element in our policy towards making our communities safer. Proposals in the Crime and Disorder Bill which we will introduce later this year will address this directly and we are working with the police on ways to identify and target anti-social behaviour.

Prisons (Capacity)

31. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to increase the number of places in prisons. [11687]

Ms Quin: To help with the current population pressures, the Prison Service was allocated a further £43 million in July for this year and next. In total, these resources will create 290 new places on top of those to be provided by the existing building programme and will provide additional staffing and fund regime activities to support the placing of a further 1,830 prisoners in existing accommodation.

The existing building programme will provide 8,600 additional places over this year and the next two years through a combination of expanding existing prisons and building new prisons.

Closed Circuit Television

33. Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his policy with regard to CCTV schemes. [11689]

37. Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the role of CCTV in combating crime. [11693]

Mr. Michael: I strongly support closed circuit television schemes, which can be effective in preventing crime and the fear of crime. They can make a contribution to community safety in general, especially as part of a wider crime prevention strategy. I am currently considering, linked to our review of existing expenditure programmes, how to encourage the appropriate use of CCTV in the fight against crime.

Corruption

35. Mr. Ivan Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on Government plans to create a single offence of corruption. [11691]

Mr. Michael: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary published on 9 June a statement on reform of the corruption statutes for consultation. A copy is available in the Library. The Law Commission will also be producing proposals for reform of the law in this area.

My right hon. Friend will consider carefully the results of these exercises, together with any further recommendations the Nolan committee may make in relation to the criminal law.

My right hon. Friend expects to make a further statement on the reform of the law in this area early next year.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what legislation is currently being discussed at the European Union level for the standardisation of member states' legislation pertaining to the combating of corruption by officials; and if he will make a statement. [12315]

Mr. Michael: In September 1996, European Union member states adopted a protocol to the 1995 Convention on the Protection of the Financial Interests of the European Communities. The protocol requires all member states to establish a certain minimum level of protection against damage to the Communities' budget by reason of corruption which makes similar provision in the case of corruption of or by national or Community officials. In May 1997, the member states adopted a separate convention on corruption of or by national or Community officials which is not linked to damage to the Communities' budget. These instruments do not cover the corruption of officials from third countries, but member states have, in recent weeks, adopted two common positions under title VI of the treaty on European Union supporting on-going negotiations in the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development and the Council of Europe on conventions which address this aspect.

The Government strongly support measures to penalise corruption, whether by or of national or Community officials or in the private sector. To that end, they intend to take forward next year, during the United Kingdom's presidency of the European Union, recommendation 6 of the European Union action plan on combating organised crime, which was endorsed by the Amsterdam European Council. This requires the development of a comprehensive Union policy on corruption covering first and third pillar measures and applying to public sector officials and to the private sector.

Prisoners

36. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of prisoners on 1 May; and if he will make a statement. [11692]

Ms Quin: The prison population on 1 May was 60,088.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to increase the amount of time prisoners spend (a) in working and (b) on education schemes. [11849]

Ms Quin: The Government recognise the difficulties faced by the Prison Service in dealing with the exceptional rise in the prison population, but remain committed to ensuring that prisoners are provided with constructive regimes.

We expect the Prison Service to seek to expand work opportunities for prisoners by developing its ability to attract work from the private sector and by improving the organisation of prison regimes so as to maximise the time that prisoners can spend in purposeful activity, including work.

Invitations to tender for new contracts to deliver education in prisons, to be issued shortly, will aim for contracts which, in delivering the prison core curriculum, maximise efficient use of resources and offer a dynamic ability to meet the needs of particular prison establishments.

Provision for regime facilities is included in the extra £43 million over this year and next which has been made available to the Prison Service to help cope with overcrowding pressures.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to accommodate the rise in the number of prisoners; and what is his policy on early release. [12264]

Ms Quin: To help with the increasing population pressures, the Prison Service was allocated a further £43 million in July for this year and the next. In total, these additional resources will create 290 new places on top of those to be provided by the existing building programme. These funds will also provide additional staffing and funding for regime activities to support the placing of a further 1,830 prisoners in existing accommodation.

The existing building programme will provide 8,600 additional places over this year and the next two years, through a combination of expanding existing prisons and building new prisons.

Early release arrangements are set out in part II of the Criminal Justice Act 1991. The Government have no plans to review these. As regards executive release, the Government have no plans to use these powers. Executive release from prison is designed to be used as a last resort.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy towards prisoners having television in their cells; and if he will make a statement. [12265]

Ms Quin: The Government are reconsidering policy in this area, including examining the case for in-cell television as an earned privilege, but we have not yet taken final decisions. Meanwhile, no action has been taken either to extend the privilege of in-cell television or to withdraw sets from those establishments that currently allow them.

The all-party Home Affairs Committee, then with a Conservative majority, recommended in March 1997 a rethink of policy and stressed the potential of television as a means of contributing to good order in a prison.

The Learmont report in 1995 recommended that in-cell television should be made widely available and pointed to its potential benefits as an information as well as a recreational medium.

UK Border Controls

Mr. Linton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy on the retention of United Kingdom border controls with the rest of the European Union. [11848]

Ms Quin: We intend to retain the United Kingdom's system of frontier controls. In the treaty of Amsterdam we have obtained legal confirmation of the right to maintain controls at our frontiers with other member states of the European Union.

Gambling (Arbitration Body)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will assess the advantages of establishing an independent body to arbitrate in disputes between people making wagers and bookmakers. [12516]

Mr. George Howarth: The Horserace Betting Levy Board has recently considered this and other related matters. It concluded that the current arrangements for settling disputes—the Tattersalls' committee and the green seal service—were effective in most cases.

I will be discussing the issues with the levy board shortly.

Greyhound Racing

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what (a) proportion and (b) number of greyhound races shown in betting shops are from racecourses owned by the major off-course betting companies. [12304]

Mr. George Howarth: Of the 9,646 greyhound races shown in betting shops in the year to 31 October 1997, 4,108—42.6 per cent.—will be from tracks owned by major off-course betting companies.

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated shortfall in revenue to the British greyhound racing fund since 1992 resulting from certain bookmaking companies failing to contribute to the fund. [12311]

Mr. Howarth: The British Greyhound Racing Board estimates that the fund should have received £22 million since 1992 but has actually received £13.4 million, leaving a shortfall of £8.6 million in contributions.

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many bookmaking companies currently pay the agreed 0.4 per cent. contributions to the British greyhound racing fund. [12306]

Mr. Howarth: We understand that up to September 1996 the fund had received contributions from 97 bookmakers.

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the (a) proportion and (b) number of greyhound races shown in betting shops. [12313]

Mr. Howarth: In the year 1 November 1996 to 31 October 1997, 9,646 afternoon greyhound races will be transmitted from greyhound tracks into betting shops.

In 1996, 74,343 races were staged by National Greyhound Racing Club member tracks; 13 per cent. of these were shown in betting shops.

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the contracting process between the bookmakers' afternoon greyhound services and the greyhound racecourses. [12303]

Mr. Howarth: We have no plans to review the contracting process between Bookmakers' Afternoon Greyhound Services and greyhound tracks. This is a commercial matter between them.

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many National Greyhound Racing Club greyhound racecourses are currently in operation; and how many are owned by major off-course betting companies. [12312]

Mr. Howarth: Of the 32 National Greyhound Racing Club greyhound tracks currently in operation, four are owned by major off-course bookmakers.

Off-course Betting Shops

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many bookmaking companies currently operate off-course betting shops in the United Kingdom. [12305]

Mr. Howarth: An estimated 1,793 off-course bookmaking companies currently operate in the United Kingdom.

Primary Purpose Rule

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what response he has received regarding the changes made in the primary purpose rule on 5 June. [12346]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There has been much support for the abolition on 5 June of the primary purpose rule.

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in implementing changes in the primary purpose rule. [11657]

Mr. O'Brien: The primary purpose rule was abolished on 5 June. A review of outstanding appeal cases has now been completed.

Huntingdon Life Sciences

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if the revocation of the certificate of designation at Huntingdon Life Sciences involves both the company's sites; [12307]

(2) pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Newark (Ms Jones) of 24 July, Official Report, column 680, if the baboons at Huntingdon Life Sciences are wild caught; [12465]

(3) how many project licences have been revoked at Huntingdon Life Sciences as a result of the Home Office investigation; [12296]

(4) what problems relating to the care, treatment and handling of animals at Huntingdon Life Sciences were found in animal departments other than the dog toxicology unit as a result of his Department's investigation. [12464]

Mr. George Howarth: I have written to the hon. Member.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Newark (Ms Jones) of 24 July, Official Report, column 68, what are the 16 stringent conditions his Department has set Huntingdon Life Sciences. [12466]

Mr. Howarth: The 16 conditions were:

(i) That a report be submitted to the Home Office setting out what changes have been introduced to the line management for and the responsibilities of the proposed certificate holder, to ensure that these arrangements do not compromise animal welfare.

(ii) That the applicant for a new certificate of designation has successfully completed module 1 of a Home Office accredited training course.

(iii) That summary findings of the Department of Health good laboratory practice scrutiny be disclosed by the establishment to the Home Office with confirmation that any process problems have been corrected.

(iv) That a written submission be made outlining how each of the standard conditions attached to all certificates of designation would be effectively and fully implemented.

(v) That adequate provision has been made for regular and effective means of communication between those entrusted with responsibilities under the Act.

(vi) That the applicant be required to satisfy the Home Office that line management arrangements for all animal care staff are effective. Specifically:

(a) that line managers are qualified by experience or training and informed of their responsibilities and the need for welfare related problems to be notified to an appropriate level within the company;

(b) that only trained and competent staff are entrusted with responsibility for the care and welfare of animals;

(c) that measures are in place to ensure that the certificate holder will be properly informed of conditions and practices within the designated areas.

(vii) That the applicant demonstrates that the staff appraisal reporting system for animal care staff ensures that concerns relating to animal welfare are properly identified and resolved and makes provision for periodic assessment that basic competencies have been maintained.

(viii) That the applicant supplies the Home Office with a general "process map" with overviews of the methods and resources to be used to ensure that reduction, refinement and replacement are adequately addressed in the design of animal studies performed at the establishment.

(ix) That, for new studies, a system is in place which ensures that adequate numbers of appropriately trained and licensed technical staff will be available.

(x) That a system is established to determine the nature, frequency and duration of visits by the named veterinary surgeon to the designated areas.

(xi) That a suitable named person for the dog facility is nominated.

(xii) That the applicant submits an enforceable code of conduct for the control of dogs, coupled with an effective means of reporting misconduct to an appropriate level within the organisation. This should be accompanied by evidence that all dog unit animal care staff have received appropriate training.

(xiii) That the applicant demonstrates that systems are in place to ensure that staff training in the handling and care of dogs ensures that structured training is delivered, that competence is demonstrably assessed and that only competent persons are entrusted with responsibility for animals' health and welfare.

(xiv) That the applicant submits standard operating procedures and protocols for the dog facilities relating to the housing, husbandry, care, restraint and performance of regulated procedures, with evidence that staff have successfully completed appropriate, structured training. This should include:

(a) a protocol for the group exercising of dogs which specifies the minimum daily exercise period per dog, defines the minimum amount of staff time to be used to socialise with the dogs and identifies the type of area provided for the exercise to take place:

(b) protocols for the restraint of dogs to enable intravenous dosing and sampling and the proper production of haemostasis thereafter. Evidence should be supplied that animal care staff have been appropriately trained or re-trained.

(xv) That the company has determined by internal benchmarking the principles which will determine and minimise the daily period for which pair-housed dogs will be held singly.

(xvi) That the applicant details any other measures which have or will be taken to provide environmental enrichment and a better quality of life for animals.

The company has now met these conditions and a new certificate of designation was issued on 29 September.

Identity Cards

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the Association of Convenience Stores concerning a proposal for mandatory identity cards for young people; what response he has given; and if he will make a statement. [12289]

Mr. George Howarth: The Association's chief executive wrote to my right hon. Friend on 27 May asking the Government to introduce compulsory identity cards to assist retailers in determining the age of customers. I discussed this proposal with representatives of the association at a meeting on 18 June.

I subsequently wrote to the chief executive on 17 July, sending him a copy of the statement issued that day by the ministerial group on alcopops, which set out the Government's position on identity cards in the context of the Government's initiative on alcohol misuse by young people.

The statement made clear that the Government are considering the issues raised by national identity cards, but that these go wider than questions relating to sales of products to those under age. In any event, the introduction of national identity cards would require legislation and would not represent a short-term solution to concerns about the sale of alcohol to young people.

The statement welcomed the commitment of the association and other retail and liquor industry interests to expanding the existing Portman Group proof of age card scheme to tackle sales of alcohol to the under-18s.

I have just received a further letter from the association, which I am considering.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to publish a consultation document regarding the introduction of an identity card scheme. [12844]

Mr. George Howarth: We have no present plans to issue such a document.

North Yorkshire Police

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will assist with the provision of radio communications for North Yorkshire police. [12338]

Mr. Michael: The police information technology organisation in the Home Office has provided assistance and advice to North Yorkshire police on its radio communications planning, prior to the implementation of the next generation of digital radio communications systems from 1999 onwards. This advice and assistance will continue.

Criminal Injuries Compensation

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the average times for processing criminal injuries compensation claims. [12515]

Mr. Michael: Claims under the criminal injuries compensation scheme vary greatly in their complexity. The straightforward ones may be determined in a matter of weeks, but those in which there are evidential difficulties or where the medical diagnosis or prognosis is uncertain may take several years to bring to a conclusion. Some will also be subject to an appeal. There is accordingly no meaningful average time for processing all cases. However, the victims charter sets a standard of 12 months from receipt of a claim to the issue of a first decision. The Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority advises that, under the new tariff-based scheme, that standard has been met in 90 per cent. of claims received on or after 1 April 1996.

Alcohol Sales (Fundraising Events)

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will assess the advantages of allowing charities and community groups to pay a single annual fee to register as entitled to sell alcohol at fundraising events. [12784]

Mr. George Howarth: The licensing laws were amended earlier this year to allow charities and other bodies to apply for more occasional permissions to sell alcohol at fundraising events.

We are willing to examine any specific proposals for further change which are put to us.

Algerian Nationals

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many Algerian nationals have been granted exceptional leave to remain in the United Kingdom in the past 12 months; [12790]

(2) how many Algerian nationals were refused asylum in the United Kingdom in the past 12 months; [12789]

(3) how many Algerian nationals have applied for asylum in the United Kingdom in the past 12 months. [12791]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information requested is given in the table.

Decisions on applications[1] [2] for asylum in the United Kingdom from Algerian nationals, excluding dependants, in the 12 months between October 1996 and September 1997

	Number of principal applicants
Asylum applications	590
Total decisions[3]	1,090
Recognised as a refugee and granted asylum	60
Not recognised as a refugee but granted exceptional leave to remain[4]	10
Refusals	1,020

[1] Figures rounded to the nearest five.

[2] Provisional figures.

[3] Decisions do not necessarily relate to applications made in the period.

[4] Usually granted for a year in the first instance, subject then to further review.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Algerian nationals are being held in detention centres in the United Kingdom. [12788]

Mr. O'Brien: As at 16 October 1997, a total of 23 Algerian nationals were detained in immigration detention centres. This figure excludes those detained under Immigration Act powers in prison establishments or in prison cells.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Algerian nationals are currently being held in custody in the United Kingdom for non-immigration offences. [12792]

Ms Quin: The latest available information is for 30 September 1997. On that date there were 25 Algerian nationals held in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales for non-Immigration Act offences. information for Scotland and Northern Ireland is available from the respective Secretaries of State.

Old Documents

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 8 July, Official Report, column 391, if the review of the oldest document retained in the Home Office has been completed. [12865]

Mr. Straw: The review has been completed and I am pleased to say that the papers will be transferred to the Public Record Office and made available for public inspection later this year, subject to minor extractions. The extractions are intended to protect the identities of individual informants who put themselves at risk in the service of the state. It would not be in the public interest to reveal the identities of such individuals, since to do so might deter potential informants from assisting the authorities today. Of course, all the agents named in these records have long since died, but in many cases members of their families will still be alive and particularly in the context of Ireland, where memories can be deep and bitter, publication of the names cold cause unnecessary and gratuitous distress or worse.

Road Traffic Act 1988

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the enforcement of section 154 of the Road Traffic Act 1988; and if he will make a statement. [12798]

Mr. Michael: No representations have been received during the period of this Parliament.

Section 154 of the Road Traffic Act 1988 requires that a person against whom a motor insurance claim is made must on demand provide particulars of their insurance cover to the claimant. It is a criminal offence not to do so.

Police policy regarding the enforcement of section 154 is an operational matter for individual chief officers. The traffic committee of the Association of Chief Police Officers has recently considered this issue and takes the view that there should be a readiness to treat every allegation under section 154 on its merits before deciding what, if any, police action might be taken.

Immigration Rules

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what weight attaches to whether a child was conceived within a lawful marriage overseas in determining right of entry to the United Kingdom to join a parent who is a British national. [12491]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: None. A child may join a parent or parents who are present and settled in the United Kingdom provided the requirements of the immigration rules are met. It is not a requirement that the child was conceived within a lawful marriage.

Alcopops

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research he has commissioned into the ages of the purchasers of alcopops. [12309]

Mr. George Howarth: As the Government's announcement on 17 July made clear, we are concerned about the misuse of all kinds of alcohol by those under age. There is a range of existing research and regular surveys which already cover various aspects of under-age drinking. We are looking carefully at whether additional research is required.

Community Sentences

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many offenders who withheld their consent from community sentences received custodial sentences in the most recent year for which figures are available. [12716]

Mr. Michael: Information is not collected centrally and no national data are available. However, the indications are that the number of offenders withholding consent to a community sentence is very small. For example, a recent survey of pre-sentence reports by Teesside probation service found that consent was withheld in only four of 854 cases. For those who do refuse consent, custody is the most likely sentence.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for new community sentences. [12715]

Mr. Michael: This Government plan to increase the effectiveness of community sentences and the range of options available to the courts.

On 1 October, new provisions came into effect allowing courts to impose an attendance centre order on fine defaulters who are aged under 25. Other provisions of the Crime (Sentences) Act 1997 will be piloted in Norfolk and Greater Manchester from January next year. These include provisions allowing for the imposition of a community service order or curfew order on fine defaulters and persistent petty offenders, disqualification of offenders from driving regardless of the offence committed and the imposition of curfew orders of up to three-months duration on offenders under the age of 16.

We are also studying other community sentence options which will reinforce the sentencing armoury, particularly with regards to youth crime. Our proposals for young offenders were set out in the consultation paper "Tackling Youth Crime" published in September. We will introduce an action plan order—which will be a focused and intensive intervention. There will also be a new reparation order which will require young people to make reparation to victims.

Policemen (Salaries)

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average salary of a policeman with five years' service. [12692]

Mr. Michael: Police pay in England and Wales is based on national pay scales. Pay rates are negotiated each year by the Police Negotiating Board and approved by the Secretary of State. The national salary for a constable with five years' service, with effect from 1 September 1997, is £19,434.

Sentences

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his statement of 30 July, Official Report, column 257, if the explanation of what a sentence means in practice will be communicated to the victims of the crime concerned who are not present in court at the time sentence is passed. [12726]

Mr. Michael: The victims charter already provides for victims to be told, if they want to be, the final result of their offender's trial. Pilot projects to test how best this might be achieved have been running for several months and a full evaluation should be available by next spring. Before then, we will consider whether it might be practicable to include additional information about what the sentence means in practice.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his statement of 30 July, Official Report, column 257, if he will state what new bail conditions he proposes to introduce. [12713]

Mr. Michael: We propose to introduce two new bail conditions to deter bailed defendants from failing to appear in court or from failing to take the necessary steps to enable the case to proceed. The first measure will allow for the greater use of securities, to provide a stronger incentive for defendants to surrender to the custody of the court. The second measure will allow the courts to impose a condition of bail requiring a defendant to attend an interview with a legal representative in advance of a court hearing. Failure to obtain legal advice is one of the most common reasons for delay, resulting in ineffective first hearings and routine adjournments.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1), pursuant to his statement of 30 July, Official Report, column 257, what plans he has to assess the level of public confidence in his proposals for the courts to explain sentence lengths; [12602]

(2) if (a) courts will be required to explain sentences and (b) the period of a sentence served in custody will relate more closely to the lengths of sentence passed under his proposals for honesty in sentencing. [12718]

Mr. Michael: Our proposal that the courts should spell out what each sentence really means in practice was a manifesto commitment which was endorsed by the electorate. The proposal is to enable the public to know how long an offender will spend in prison, the period of supervision after release, and the period during which he may be recalled to prison.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the offences covered by sentencing guidelines from the Court of Appeal. [12728]

Mr. Michael: It is difficult to draw up a definitive list of offences for which sentencing guidelines are currently available, since the form and content of sentencing guidelines differ and the Court of Appeal also provides guidance on the treatment of offences through its more general cases. However, guidelines providing general guidance to the courts on the treatment of particular criminal offences, and in some cases suggesting starting points for sentences, have been provided by the Court of Appeal for a number of categories of offences, including: most sexual offences, including rape, unlawful sexual intercourse, incest, indecent assault and buggery; drugs offences involving class A and class B drugs; robbery, theft and benefit fraud; public order offences, including riot, violent disorder and affray; and explosives offences.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his statement of 30 July, Official Report, column 257, (1) if the sentencing guidelines to be prepared by the Court of Appeal will operate in the lower courts in the same way as the sentencing guidelines which have already been laid down; [12703]

(2) how the sentencing guidelines to be prepared by the Court of Appeal will affect the Magistrates' Association guidelines on sentencing; [12714]

(3) if he will list those offences which will be covered by sentencing guidelines from the Court of Appeal. [12601]

Mr. Michael: The Government are committed through their manifesto to placing a duty on the Court of Appeal to ensure there are sentencing guidelines for all the main offences. We are currently considering how best to take forward this commitment.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to extend the Attorney-General's power to refer sentences to the Court of Appeal for review. [12729]

Mr. Michael: We are in discussion with colleagues about the best way to implement our manifesto commitment to extend the Attorney-General's powers to refer cases to the Court of Appeal for review where it appears to him that the sentence is unduly lenient.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals, apart from those of the Crime (Sentences) Act 1997, he has to ensure stricter punishment for serious repeat offenders. [12712]

Mr. Michael: Mr right hon. Friend's proposals were set out in his statement of 30 July to the House.

Violent Crime

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in which year since 1967 the largest percentage increase in recorded crimes of violence against the person occurred. [12733]

Mr. Michael: The largest percentage increase was between 1968 and 1969 when violence against the person rose by 25 per cent.

Stephen Lawrence

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will invite the former Attorney-General to make available to the Macpherson inquiry notes of the meeting with two hon. Members and the Crown Prosecution Service following the withdrawal of proceedings against persons accused of murdering Stephen Lawrence; [12589]

(2) if the Macpherson inquiry will be provided with details of earlier attacks thought to be connected with persons accused of murdering Stephen Lawrence. [12590]

Mr. Michael: The judicial inquiry will have powers under section 49 of the Police Act 1996 to summon any person to give evidence, to require the production of documents and to take evidence on oath. It is therefore a matter for Sir William Macpherson, the chairman of the inquiry, to decide which documents the inquiry requires.

Mr. Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will institute an award in the memory of Stephen Lawrence. [12591]

Mr. Michael: When my right hon. Friend met Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence on 24 June, he told them that they would have his support if they wished to establish some form of memorial to their son Stephen.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average annual percentage change in recorded crime, excluding criminal damage valued at £20 and under between (a) 1967 and 1979 and (b) 1979 and 1996. [12734]

Mr. Michael: The average annual percentage change was 3.5 per cent. between 1967 and 1979 and 4.3 per cent. between 1979 and 1996.

Crime (Sentences) Act 1997

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Enfield, Southgate (Mr. Twigg) of 30 July, Official Report, columns 261-62, if he will set out the timetable for his review of section 4 (Minimum Sentences for Persistent House Burglars) of the Crime (Sentences) Act 1997. [12743]

Mr. Michael: We have no plans to review section 4 of the Crime (Sentences) Act 1997. As my right hon. Friend made clear in his statement on criminal justice on 30 July, Official Report, column 354, our position is the same as that announced by the previous Government in their White Paper, presented to the House in April 1996, which said:

> "The Government's objective is to implement the various proposals, taking account of the Parliamentary timetable, the need to provide additional prison places and the resource implications".

It is not a question of a review, but of whether and when it is appropriate to take action, bearing in mind those considerations.

Prisoners (Costs)

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average cost of keeping a prisoner in custody in (a) a high security prison, (b) a normal security prison, (c) an open prison and (d) a young offenders institution in the last year for which figures are available. [12721]

Ms Quin: In the financial year 1996–97 the average cost for keeping a prisoner in custody was as shown in the table:

Type of prison	Cost per prisoner (£)
Dispersals	36,601
Category B	19,284
Category C	—
Local	—
Open	16,865
Young offenders institution	19,273

Goods and Services (Payments)

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list each of the functions relating to payment for goods or services supplied for which his Department is responsible indicating the management systems purchased, all sub-contractors involved in the work, co-operative arrangements with other Departments; and the costs of the systems and processes in the last year for which figures are available. [12556]

Mr. Straw: In the non-agency Home Office payments are made both centrally and locally. Central payments are processed by the Department's business accounting strategic system, BASS, which uses Ross Renaissance software; 98.31 per cent. of payments by value are processed via the bank automated clearing system. The cost of processing central payments is estimated at £144,800. Payments to other Government Departments are made via Paymaster.

Payments may also be made locally by cheque or, exceptionally, by cash. Information on the cost of processing local payments is not available.

The Forensic Science Service is self accounting and is responsible for paying all of its suppliers for the services and goods it consumes. All payments are processed using the Systems Union accounting package, SUN. Of the payments made, 65.5 per cent. are via BACS the remainder being made by cheque. Any payments to other Government Departments are made by cheque. The cost of processing these payments is estimated at £48,000.

Within the United Kingdom Passport Agency, payments are made centrally by cheque, using SUN accounting software supplied by Systems Union. This includes payments to all other Government Departments. Operation of the payment function of the SUN system, including staff costs, was approximately £34,250 in 1996–97.

In the Prison Service payments are made both centrally and locally. Central payments are processed by the Prison Service's finance outstations and central unified system, FOCUS, which uses Tetra Chameleon software; 92.5 per cent. of payments by value are processed via BACS. The cost of processing central payments is estimated at £83,000; 98 per cent. of payments to other Government Departments are made via Paymaster.

Payments are also made locally at establishments by cheque or, exceptionally, by cash. Information on the cost of processing local payments is not available.

All Fire Service College payments are made locally at the college by cheque, except for expense claims under £10 which are paid in cash. All cheque payments are processed by the College's purchase ledger department, which uses CEDARDATA financial software; 89.2 per cent. of payments by value are paid by cheque, and payments to Her Majesty's Paymaster General in respect of loan interest is paid by Lloyds bank funds flow. The cost of processing all payments is estimated at £32,850.

If my hon. Friend is interested in particular aspects of our payment processing systems, perhaps he would write to me with further details.

Crime Clear-up and Conviction Rates

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the crime clear-up and conviction rates for each policy authority area in (a) 1995 and (b) 1996. [12588]

Mr. Michael: The information requested is given in the tables. These figures are not on a comparable basis because the clear-up data relate to the number of offences and the conviction rate date relate to the number of offenders.

Fire Service Pensions

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he proposes to publish the review of fire service pensions; and if he will make a statement. [12741]

Mr. George Howarth: We have undertaken to publish the review as a basis for consultation with fire service interests on the future arrangement for fire service pensions. It will be issued as soon as is practicable.

HEALTH

Huntingdon Life Sciences

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many experimental studies at Huntingdon Life Sciences have been invalidated as a result of his Department's investigation; and what was the fate of the animals involved. [12297]

Ms Jowell: The United Kingdom's Good Laboratory Practice Monitoring Authority has investigated Huntingdon Life Sciences. The authority decided that five toxicity studies within the dog toxicology unit did not meet good laboratory practice standards. The authority has required the company to notify each study's sponsors accordingly.

On completion of the studies, the dogs will be put down humanely in accordance with normal practice.

Abortion Act 1967

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the working of the Abortion Act 1967. [12579]

Ms Jowell: Data on all terminations of pregnancy and the non-national health service places which provide abortion continue to be monitored by the Department.

Hospital Beds (Reopening Costs)

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average cost of reopening a bed in a general ward of a hospital. [12693]

Mr. Milburn: The costs would depend on a number of factors including geographical location, the level of staffing required to open the bed, when the bed was required—weekend or overnight.

Nurses' Salaries

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average salary of a nurse with five years' experience. [12694]

Mr. Milburn: Nurses' salaries are dependent on a wide range of factors such as grade and length of service. It is therefore not possible to provide the average salary of a nurse with five years' experience. However, current salary rates are published in advance letter (NM) 1/97, copies of which are available in the Library. Additionally, new earnings survey figures for 1996 show that the average gross weekly earnings of a full-time nurse on adult rates was £325.70.

Operation Costs

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average cost of (a) a hip replacement operation, (b) a cataract operation and (c) a heart bypass operation in the last year for which figures are available. [12723]

Mr. Milburn: The information is given in the following table:

Average costs

Operation	In-patient case £	Day case £
Hip replacement[1]
primary	3,290	—
revision	4,330	—
Cataract[2]	900	475
Coronary artery by-pass graft	5,930	—

Official Hospitality

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the total expenditure on official hospitality by his Department to date in the current session. [12582]

Mr. Milburn: Expenditure on hospitality for the period 1 May 1997 to 30 September 1997 is as follows.

Department	41,803
Agencies	7,159
Total	48,962

Goods and Services (Payments)

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list each of the functions relating to payment for goods services supplied for which his Department is responsible indicating the management systems purchased, all sub-contractors involved in the work, co-operative arrangements with other departments; and the costs of the systems and processes in the last year for which figures are available. [12558]

Mr. Milburn: The process for making payments for goods and services forms the latter part of the purchasing process. The Department of Health has developed procurement procedures based upon guidance issued by Her Majesty's Treasury and those procedures are designed to ensure probity and fairness in procurement decisions. The processing of payments and the issue of payable instruments form part of the Department's accounting systems. The procedures for both placing orders and making payments to suppliers requires the necessary certification and authorisation that ensures an adequate separation of duties, thus conforming with Government accounting.

The Department does not use sub-contractors for payment work nor have co-operative arrangements with other departments for the payment of goods and services. The payment of welfare foods benefit does involve both the Benefit Agency in the issue of welfare milk tokens and a contractor to authorise payments against surrendered tokens. The Benefits Agency also authorises payments on the Department's behalf in respect of European Economic Area medical costs.

The Department's accounting system is based on a proprietary accounting package—Sun Accounts—amended by departmental staff to meet specific needs. The Department makes some 180,000 payments a year, which include payments to health authorities, local authorities, non-departmental public bodies and voluntary organisations. Payments to other Government Departments and health authorities are made by means of transfers. Whenever possible, other payments are made by means of bank automated clearing system and the remainder are paid by payable order.

The accounts payable and cashiering applications which support departmental payments form part of the accounting system and specific capital and development costs of the computer systems are not therefore readily available. The salary costs of providing a cashiering service are estimated to be £216,000 for 1997–98.

The Department has four executive agencies and the following table summarises the position of each.

	Medicines Control Agency	Medical Devices Agency	NHS Estates Agency	NHS Pensions Agency
Contracting arrangements for payments	None	None	None	The payment of medical fees to independent advisers form part of the total service provided
Co-operative arrangements with other government departments	None	None	None	None
Estimated costs of making payments	£105,000	£30,000	£40,000	£15,000

St. Bartholomew's Hospital

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will ensure that the independent review panel considering the future of St. Bartholomew's hospital will be allowed a fully day for visits and discussions at the hospital. [12294]

Mr. Milburn: The review panel visited the Royal Hospitals NHS trust on 4 September 1997 for a full day. This included visits to the St. Bartholomew's hospital and Royal London hospital sites. The members of the panel also made further visits to the London chest hospital, St. Bartholomew's and other London sites later that month.

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the arrangements made by the Royal Hospitals NHS trust for the independent review panel to visit St. Bartholomew's hospital. [12293]

Mr. Milburn: Ministers have not been involved in the detailed arrangements made for visits by the independent review panel, but we understand that the arrangements for the panel's visit to the Royal Hospitals NHS trust on 4 September 1997 were satisfactory.

Liverpool Blood Services

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will be announcing his decision about the future of the Liverpool blood transfusion service; and if he will make a statement. [12287]

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received (a) directly and (b) indirectly from clinicians and their professional associations since 1 May in respect of the proposals to remove blood processing and testing from the Liverpool blood centre; and if he will publish those representations. [12295]

Mr. Boateng: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health has announced the setting up of an independent review into clinical concerns raised about the proposals for the transfer of bulk processing and testing of blood from Liverpool to Manchester. Professor John Cash, president of the Royal College of Physicians of Edinburgh and former director of the blood transfusion service in Scotland, is leading that review.

On 8 September, Professor Cash submitted an urgent interim report to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State in which he advised that, given that the original plans were then largely implemented, and in particular the run-down of experienced and skilled staff in the Liverpool centre,

> "it is now in the best interests of patients in Merseyside and the surrounding area that the transfer of bulk blood processing and testing to Manchester goes ahead as planned on 19 September."

On 9 September, the Secretary of State announced his reluctant acceptance of that recommendation on grounds of patient safety.

However, the Secretary of State also made it clear that that was not the end of the matter. Professor Cash is to make a final report in November, when he will advise on how blood services can be developed to meet the needs of people in Merseyside and the surrounding areas as well as the requirements of local clinicians. Meanwhile, two steps have already been taken to aid that development. In line with the interim recommendations made by Professor Cash, the Secretary of State announced in September the appointment of two experts, Professor Alistair Bellingham and Dr. Ian Gilmore, to two critical new posts. Their respective roles are transition director of the Liverpool blood centre, and chair of a Merseyside and area clinical user group set up to monitor the quality of blood services in Merseyside and north Wales. Both Professor Bellingham and Dr. Gilmore have an important part to play in working with local clinicians to ensure the safety and the reliability of the supply of blood components to local hospitals.

We shall decide what further measures may be required when we have seen Professor Cash's final report.

As regards the number of representations which Ministers have received from clinicians on this issue, as I said in my reply to a similar question from my hon. Friend the Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mrs. Ellman) on 1 July, column 145, separate records are not kept of the particular categories of people who make such representations. We estimate, however, that we have received around 24 representations from different clinicians or their professional associations since 1 May 1997. Copies have been passed to Professor Cash for him to consider as part of his review. They will not be published separately.

Dental Access Fund

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the Government proposes to repeat the provision of the dental access fund for 1997–98. [12755]

Mr. Milburn: No. On 9 September, we announced the "Investing in Dentistry" initiative, which makes available up to £9 million in 1997–98 to help dentists expand existing or set up new practices in areas of the country where there are particular problems with the availability of national health service dental services.

NHS Trusts (Board Meetings)

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State of Health what steps he took to consult NHS trusts before issuing his instructions to hold board meetings in public. [12797]

Mr. Milburn: In reaching his decision, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health took account of the fact that all health authorities and a significant proportion of national health service trusts already hold board meetings in public.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from NHS trust boards following his instructions to hold board meetings in public; and if he will publish the content of these submissions. [12796]

Mr. Milburn: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health has received a number of letters about trust board meetings, both in favour and against. It is for those making the representations to decide whether they should be published.

Ambulance Service Personnel

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State of Health how many ambulance service personnel have taken early retirement on health grounds in each of the last five years; and what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the subject; and if he will make a statement. [12775]

Mr. Milburn: In the five-year period up to 24 February 1997, the national health service pension scheme awarded ill-health retirement benefits to 2,576 ambulance personnel retiring from NHS ambulance trusts in England and Wales. A year-on-year breakdown is not available.

In the last five years, the Department of Health has not commissioned any research on ambulancemen retiring early from the NHS on health grounds.

Prescriptions

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average number of items prescribed to individuals aged 65 years and over in each year since 1985. [12794]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested is available in the statistical bulletins, Statistics of prescriptions dispensed in the Family Health Service Authorities: England 1985 to 1995, (statistical bulletin in 1996/17 July 1996) and Statistics of prescriptions dispensed in the community: England 1986 to 1996, (statistical bulletin 1997/15 July 1997), both of which are available in the Library. Before 20 October 1995, the term "elderly people" meant women aged 60 years or over and men aged 65 and over. Since then, however, men aged 60 and over are also included in this group, but the population figures for 1995 are still for men aged 65 years and over and women aged 60 and over. The 1985 to 1990 prescription data are based on fees, while 1991–1995 prescription data are based on items.

H. Pylori

Dr. Brand: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to reimburse general practitioners for testing for H. pylori. [12780]

Mr. Milburn: Under the terms of a general practitioner's cost plus contract, all expenses incurred in the delivery of general medical services are reimbursed either directly to the general practitioner who incurs the cost or indirectly, at the average for the profession as a whole, through fees and allowances.

General practitioners are free to use any of the test kits for H. pylori if they feel it clinically appropriate, and the profession will receive reimbursement for their costs through fees and allowances.

The Government have no plans to change these arrangements.

Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease in the United Kingdom resulted from contaminated implements during surgical procedures. [12493]

Ms Jowell: In the United Kingdom two incidents involving a total of three patients are known where Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease is presumed to have been transmitted by neurosurgical instruments. Both incidents occurred in the 1950s.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish his Department's latest figures for trends in suspected and confirmed cases of Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease in the United Kingdom. [12492]

Ms Jowell: The latest figures on the number of cases of Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease, including new variant CJD, in the United Kingdom were published in a Department of Health press release on 6 October 1997, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

The fifth annual report of the national Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease surveillance unit published on 15 September 1997 showed that there has been an increase in the number of cases of classic sporadic CJD recorded in England and Wales for the period 1970 to April 1996, with the greatest increase reported in those over the age of 75. Substantial increases in the reported incidence of classic CJD have also been observed in other countries which monitor the disease, including countries where bovine spongiform encephalopathy is rare or absent. These increases are most likely to reflect improved case ascertainment, especially in the older age groups, rather than a real increase in the disease.

GP Fundholder Budget Allocations

Dr. Brand: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the outcomes of the appeals process for fundholder budget allocations for the past five years by regional office, showing how many appeals found in favour of (a) GP fundholders and (b) regional offices for each area. [12486]

Mr. Milburn: When a fundholding practice receives its proposed budget offer for the coming year, the regulations require it to notify the health authority whether or not it accepts the offer. Although this is not a formal appeals process established by regulations, in practice most rejections are treated as appeals by regional offices. Similar procedures were followed before April 1996, when regional health authorities were responsible for budget offers.

Information is available on the results of such "appeals" in respect of budget proposals for 1996–97 and 1997–98. A table summarising this information is as follows.

Summary of representations on GPFH/Regional Office budget allocations 1996–97—1997–98

	1996–97 Principally in favour of		1997–98 Principally in favour of
	GPFH	RO	GPFH	RO
Northern and Yorkshire	2	8	10	31
Trent	—	—	—	—
Anglia and Oxford	—	1	1	7
West Midlands	1	1	2	3
South and West	1	11	8	16
North Thames	3	6	1	1
South Thames	5	27	1	38
North West	—	—	—	2
Total	12	54	23	98

These figures are not strictly comparable between regions due to different methods of dealing with likely problems in the setting of budgets. Some regions have a policy of addressing differences between the policy of the health authority and the fundholder to resolve disputes before a formal offer is made. In addition where a multifund (where a larger number of fundholders join together to apply the budget) have appealed en-masse, this might be counted as one appeal, or as individual appeals.

Often an appeal has no definite resolution for either side—elements of both arguments my be accepted, and the decision does not, in reality, come down one way or another. However, where a decision by the RO has been largely in favour of the GPFH this is reflected in the table.

Maternity Services (North Staffordshire)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what changes in procedures to maternity services have been introduced in north Staffordshire in the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement; [12350]

(2) if he will investigate staffing levels at the North Staffordshire maternity unit during holiday periods, weekends and between 5 pm and 9 am weekdays; and if he will make a statement; [12351]

(3) what investigations have been undertaken into maternity services and procedures in north Staffordshire. [12766]

Ms Jowell: Following concerns expressed by staff working within the trust, North Staffordshire Hospital NHS trust conducted a management review of maternity services, which reported in May 1997. As a result of this review, a number of improvements have been implemented by the trust to both procedures and staffing arrangements, including the introduction of a new model of woman-centred care, additional staff in community midwifery, and improved cover arrangements at labour suites. There are no reductions in staffing at weekends or on bank holidays. All these changes are aimed at improving maternity services for patients.

Brain-damaged Babies

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what proportion of babies were born with brain damage in North Staffordshire in each of the last five years; [12349]

(2) if he will publish figures on the incidence of babies born with brain damage in north Staffordshire in each of the last five years. [12765]

Mr. Boateng: The estimate, from the latest available data, of the percentage of babies born in North Staffordshire reported as having infantile brain damage is as follows:

	Percentage
1989–90	0.3
1990–91	0.4
1991–92	0.6
1992–93	0.4
1993–94	0.1
1994–95	0.5

Source:

Department of Health, Hospital Episode Statistics.

Note:

Infantile brain damage is defined using the following International Classification of Diseases Codes Ninth Revision (ICD 9).

Infantile cerebral palsy: 343.0 to 9.

Birth trauma:

767.0 Subdural and cerebral haemorrhage.

779.0 Convulsions in newborn.

779.1 Other and unspecified cerebral irritability in newborn.

779.2 Cerebral depression, coma and other abnormal cerebral signs.

Corticosteroids

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what guidelines his Department issues to GPs prescribing systemic corticosteroids to patients who (a) have not been exposed to chickenpox and (b) are pregnant; and if he will make a statement; [12924]

(2) if he will estimate how many and what percentage of people using corticosteroids carry a steroid treatment card; and if he will make a statement. [12926]

Mr. Milburn: Guidance on prescribing issues, including the use of systematic corticosteroids, is available to general practitioners from a variety of sources. Publications funded by the Department include the British National Formulary, which is regularly updated and provides advice for all doctors on the choice and safe use of corticosteroids. Copies of the BNF are available in the Library.

No information is available on the number of people using corticosteroids who carry steroid treatment cards.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have died from chickenpox in each of the last five years, indicating those cases in which the deceased had been using systematic corticosteroids when infected; and if he will make a statement. [12925]

Ms Jowell: The number of deaths from chickenpox in England and Wales reported to the Office for National Statistics are given in the following table:

Mortality for chickenpox in England and Wales 1992–96

Year	Number of persons
1992	27
1993	30
1994	23
1995	22
1996	39

Since 1993, ONS codes all the diseases, injuries, drugs, operations and external causes mentioned on death certificates by the certifying doctor or coroner, in addition to the underlying cause of death. Only one of the 114 deaths certified as due to chickenpox, from 1993 to 1996 inclusive, explicitly mentioned the use of corticosteroids. The timing of the drug treatment in relation to the date of infection is not available.

Iproniazid

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the link between iproniazid use and fatal liver damage; and if he will make a statement. [12908]

Ms Jowell: There are no current United Kingdom marketing authorisations for iproniazid. We are not aware of any research being undertaken in the UK into iproniazid.

The main agency through which the Government support medical and clinical research is the Medical Council. The MRC is an independent body which receives its grant in aid from the Office of Science and Technology, which is part of the Department of Trade and Industry. The council is not funding any research into iproniazid and fatal liver damage, and its scientific advisors are not aware of any other research on the topic.

Xenotransplantation

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the members of the Xenotransplantation Interim Regulatory Authority and (a) their qualifications, (b) their other paid or voluntary employment and (c) their other current appointments; [12900]

(2) on what date membership of the United Kingdom Xenotransplantation Interim Regulatory Authority was finalised; and if he will make a statement. [12901]

Mr. Boateng: The membership of the United Kingdom Xenotransplantation Interim Regulatory Authority was announced through a Department of Health press release on 14 March 1997. No further appointments to the authority have been made. Details of its members, including their qualifications, their main paid employment and their membership of other Government committees are as follows:

Mrs Jean GAFFIN OBE, JP, BSc, MSc

Executive Director of the National Council for Hospice and Specialist Palliative Care Services

Dr David COOK MA, Phd

Director, Whitefield Institute, Oxford. Fellow and Chaplain, Green College, Oxford.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations his Department has received (a) supporting and (b) against xenotransplantation during the consultation period on his Department's advisory group on the ethics of xenotransplantation report; and if he will make a statement. [12902]

Mr. Boateng: Following the publication of "Animal Tissue into Humans", the report of the advisory group on the ethics of xenotransplantation, a consultation exercise was held which asked for submissions on several aspects of xenotransplantation, including the science and its regulation. Some 51 responses have been received. These contained detailed analysis of the issues raised by the report and cannot be classed as being either for or against xenotransplantation. Copies of all those responses not made in confidence will be placed in the Library in due course, following consideration of the United Kingdom Xenotransplantation Interim Regulatory Authority's advice. In addition to the responses to the consultation exercise, we have received around 15,000 postcards registering opposition to xentransplantation on both medical and ethical grounds.

Artificial Organ Transplants

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many transplants involving artificial organs have been carried out in each of the last 10 years, broken down by health authority district; and if he will make a statement. [12907]

Mr. Boateng: There have been several small trials of artificial organs as alternatives to organ transplantation, but, so far, none of the available artificial organs offers a satisfactory alternative.

Novelty Condoms

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment he has made of the health risk posed by the availability of novelty condoms from vending machines in entertainment venues and public lavatories; and if he will make a statement; [12916]

(2) what plans he has to restrict the availability of novelty condoms from vending machines in entertainment venues and public lavatories; [12917]

(3) if he will meet representatives from the medical profession and AIDS charities to discuss the risk posed by the availability of novelty condoms in vending machines in entertainment venues and public lavatories; and if he will make a statement. [12918]

Ms Jowell: Novelty condoms are not recommended for use as a barrier to HIV-AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases or as a contraceptive. The Department of Health advises the public to use only condoms which carry either the British Standards Institute kitemark or the European CE mark. As novelty condoms are not classed as medical devices under the Medical Devices Regulations 1994, they should not carry the CE mark, and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health cannot use his enforcement powers under these regulations to restrict their availability. However, any confusion and risk to health caused by novelty condoms being mistaken for genuine condoms would come within the scope of the General Product Safety Regulations 1994, which are enforced by local authority trading standards officers, if there is a significant risk that a novelty condom could be confused with the genuine article and give rise to the transmission of disease then, in the absence of adequate warnings about the hazard, the product could be deemed to be unsafe under the regulations.

We have not received any representations from the medical profession or AIDS charities to discuss novelty condoms, but we would be happy to consider such a request if approached.

Asbestosis

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the diagnostic features in the classification of asbestosis recognised by his Department. [12943]

Mr. Boateng: Diagnosis is a professional issue and we would look to the health care professions to provide guidance on it.

Organ, Blood and Bone Marrow Donation

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received on introducing an opt-out scheme allowing the surgical removal of organs unless the deceased has registered an objection in advance; what response he has made; and if he will make a statement. [12909]

Mr. Boateng: I refer my hon. Friend to the oral answer the Minister of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Dulwich and West Norwood (Ms Jowell) gave my hon. Friend the Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on 20 May 1997 at columns 504-05.

Ministers have met interested members of the medical profession and voluntary organisations involved in organ donation and transplantation to discuss this and other issues. Ministers have also received four letters on this subject from hon. Members and a number of letters from the public generally, in every case, our response has been that all views will be considered carefully before reaching a decision but that any steps taken must command public confidence.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate (a) how many and (b) what percentage of people in England (i) carry a donor card and (ii) are registered on the NHS organ donor register. [12903]

Mr. Boateng: Organ donor cards have been distributed freely by many organisations over the last 25 years. No record has ever been kept of who may possess them. However, public opinion surveys show consistently that around 30 per cent. of the population claim to carry an organ donor card.

At 18 October 1997, there were 3,685,000 English residents on the national health service organ donor register—7.6 per cent. of the population.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce a scheme of paid leave entitlements for those donating bone marrow; and if he will make a statement. [12869]

Mr. Boateng: The Government have no plans to introduce a scheme of paid leave entitlements for those donating bone marrow. There are two bone marrow donation registers in this country; the British bone marrow register which recruits from blood donors and is funded through the national health service, and the Anthony Nolan bone marrow register which is funded and run by the Anthony Nolan Bone Marrow Trust. Both registers meet all reasonable expenses of donors, including travelling and accommodation expenses and compensation for loss of earnings.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans he has to encourage people to (a) carry donor cards, (b) register on the NHS organ donor register (c) give blood and (d) donate bone marrow; and if he will make a statement; [12904]

(2) if he will estimate how much has been spent on promoting (a) the use of donor cards, (b) the NHS organ donor register, (c) blood donation and (d) bone marrow donation in each of the last 10 years. [12905]

Mr. Boateng: No information is available on Department of Health publicity campaigns before 1989–90. No information is available about the sums spent on promoting bone marrow donation over the last 10 years, but some associated costs may be contained within the blood publicity budget. The information available is provided in the table. Within the organ donation publicity budget, it is not possible to identify separately the amounts spent on individual campaigns.

There are continuing campaigns to encourage positive attitudes towards tissue donation. During this year, the Department is promoting a wide range of measures designed to increase the number of regular blood donors through raising awareness of the need to maintain supplies of blood to hospitals. This includes the launch this year of a new three to five year publicity strategy, designed to increase the current donor base and thereby reduce the need for emergency appeals, and the development of an information pack for secondary schools, for use in association with the national curriculum, which we hope will help to secure the future donor base.

The over-riding aim of organ donation publicity campaigns is to encourage people to discuss their donation wishes with their families. Knowing the views of the deceased in advance makes it easier for relatives to agree that organs may be donated. People are also encouraged to register their wishes by joining the computerised NHS organ donor register, established in 1994. This register builds on earlier work to promote organ donor cards, which are still distributed with the NHS organ donor register leaflets. We are considering how best to use publicity monies to encourage donation.

Bone marrow donors are recruited through two organisations. The British bone marrow register is funded through the NHS and recruits from blood donors at blood donation sessions. The Anthony Nolan Bone Marrow Trust is a charity funded by voluntary giving and recruits donors from the general public through local and national publicity campaigns.

Smoking

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he plans to introduce to dissuade children from taking up smoking; and if he will make a statement. [12927]

Ms Jowell: The rise in smoking by young people, particularly teenage girls, is a grave concern. Measures directed at reducing children's smoking will be set out in the White Paper on tobacco control to be published next year.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Family Credit

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate the effect on the number of recipients of family credit of cutting the taper to (a) 65 per cent., (b) 55 per cent. and (c) 50 per cent. [12814]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is in the table:

Level of taper (per cent.)	Increase in number of family credit recipients (000s)
65	35
55	175
50	285

1. Results are derived from the Policy Simulation Model based on the 1995–96 Family Resources Survey, uprated to 1997–98 caseload levels.
2. Caseload effects are rounded to the nearest 5,000 claimants.

Backdating

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will amend the rules for backdating of disability living allowance and attendance allowance to ensure that arrears from an any grounds or any time review can backdate the claim from the time of the claim. [12847]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The changes introduced in April 1997 inadvertently limited payment of arrears as a result of an "any grounds review" (requested within three months of a decision) on disability living allowance, disability working allowance and attendance allowance. Extra-statutory payments were made until amending regulations came into force on 13 October 1997.

Social Fund

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has for changing the regulations relating to social fund payments following the Social Security Commissioner's decision in the case of Mr. O'Flynn. [13299]

Mr. Denham: Amending regulations were laid yesterday. Earlier this year, the Social Security Commissioner decided that the provision, which restricted entitlement to a funeral payment provided the funeral took place within the United Kingdom, infringed European Community law.

The changes bring the legislation into line with European Community law. Where someone is living in this country, but originally came from another EEA country, they may be able to claim help with funeral expenses if they satisfy the existing eligibility criteria which apply to all other claimants. They may be able to get help if, and only if, the deceased person also lived here. Under the changes they will be able to claim if the funeral takes place in another EEA country. However, the amount paid will be limited to the amount which would have been paid had the funeral taken place where the deceased had lived in the United Kingdom.

A further change has been made to bring the provision into line with European Community law. The person arranging the funeral may also get help with travel costs to arrange or attend the funeral, but the amount allowable would not exceed the amount which would have been paid if the funeral had taken place locally.

A number of other minor changes have been made to restore, or clarify, the original policy intention.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Football Grounds

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is his Department's policy on the provision of standing areas at those football grounds where it is currently prohibited; with which bodies he has consulted; and if he will make a statement. [12955]

Mr. Fisher [holding answer 27 October 1997]: There has been a great deal of debate recently about the re-introduction of standing accommodation for spectators at premier league and first division grounds. As my hon. Friend the Minister for Sport made clear in a statement last week, the Government have no plans to review the policy which requires clubs in the premier league and the first division to be all-seater, but which allows clubs in the second and third divisions of the Football League to retain some standing accommodation subject to stringent safety requirements.

The Taylor report identified all-seating as the factor which contributed most to spectator safety. We are, of course, prepared to listen to comments made about the provision of spectator accommodation, consulting relevant bodies such as the Football Licensing Authority as necessary, but we should be very careful before considering any change of policy.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Special Secure Units

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reason there was a delay from June 1996 to May 1997 in implementing a system of three-monthly health reviews of prisoners detained in special secure units; what is the agreed format and content of these reviews; how many prisoners have been examined to date; and what percentage of the total special secure unit population this represents. [12605]

Ms Quin: The special secure unit operating standards were amended in January 1997 to provide that the health of prisoners detained in SSUs should be formally reviewed at three-monthly intervals. Detailed discussion about the content and format of health reviews and related disclosure issues were not concluded until April 1997. Instructions were issued to prison medical officers and the first reviews took place in May 1997.

The process of formal review does not replace the existing arrangements for the health care of prisoners in SSUs which is comparable to that elsewhere in the prison service. The three-monthly reviews are designed to collate information gathered over the review period, assess the health of each prisoner, identity any areas of concern and initiate any necessary remedial action. Reports from outside specialists may be commissioned where necessary. A summary of the three-monthly review report along with any health care recommendations is given to each prisoner.

In May 1997 there were 23 exceptional risk prisoners held in SSUs. Reviews were carried out on all of these prisoners. There are now only six exceptional risk prisoners in England and Wales, all of whom are held in the Whitemoor SSU. Subsequent reviews have been carried out on these prisoners.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average total cost per year of maintaining a prisoner in a special secure unit. [12606]

Ms Quin: The average total cost[1] per prisoner place in a special secure unit is estimated to be approximately £61,000 per annum for the year ending 31 March 1997, the period for which the last detailed analysis was carried out.

[1] Average total cost represents the cost per SSU accommodation place certified to hold prisoners in an establishment.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners are currently held in special secure units; for how long each prisoner has been held in such units; and what is the nationality of each such prisoner. [12607]

Ms Quin: The table shows the six prisoners held in the special secure unit at Whitemoor. There are currently no other prisoners held in SSUs.

Nationality	Offence	Time spent in SSU
American	Conspiracy to murder	2 years 7 months
Colombian	Customs evasion	4 months
British	Armed robbery	9 years 3 months
Cypriot	Customs evasion	4 years 2 months
Irish Republic	Importation of drugs	1 year 11 months
British	Importation of drugs	1 year 11 months

Parole Board

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has made provision for those detained during Her Majesty's pleasure to have their cases considered by the Parole Board at oral hearings. [13297]

Mr. Straw: The Parole Board Rules 1997, which were made on 6 October 1997 under section 32(5) of the Criminal Justice Act 1991, came into force on 6 October. A copy of the rules has been placed in the Library.

The rules apply to those detained during Her Majesty's pleasure and to all discretionary lifers, including those sentenced under section 2 of the Crime (Sentences) Act 1997.

Apart from minor changes to statutory references and interpretation, the rules are identical to their predecessors, the Parole Board Rules 1992.

Parliamentary Boundary Commission

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whom he intends to appoint to the vacant post of commissioner at the Parliamentary Boundary Commission for England. [13300]

Mr. George Howarth: I am very pleased to announce that we have appointed Mr. Michael Lewer QC to serve as a Commissioner at the commission. His appointment is effective until 31 December 2000.

Prison Service

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish the business plan for the Prison Service for 1997–98. [13301]

Mr. Straw: I am publishing today the Prison Service's business plan for 1997–98, including the key performance targets I have set.

I recognise the pressure under which the service is now operating. The audit of resources which I published on 25 July made it clear that the key assumptions on which the service had been planning for the current year, particularly the size of the prison population, have already been overtaken. I announced on 24 July an increase in Prison Service funding this year and next year to help meet these pressures. At the same time, work underway as part of the comprehensive spending review, the study of ways of closer working between the Probation and Prison Services—which I announced on 16 July—and other policy developments in the criminal justice field will all have long-term implications for the service, which makes long-term planning difficult.

For these reasons, I have decided not to publish a three-year corporate plan this year. Instead I am publishing a business plan which sets out clear targets and priorities for this year but does not significantly change the longer-term objectives previously set for the service and focuses on the need to accommodate the prison population safely while maintaining balanced, positive regimes so far as possible. I will shortly discuss with the Director General the priorities and direction for the service for the next three years, which will be reflected in the corporate plan for 1998–2001.

The plan includes the performance targets against which the service has been operating so far this year. The majority will require some improvement on last year's performance, but I recognise that the further rapid rise in prisoner numbers so far this year, well ahead of the assumptions made when the plan was drafted, will have an impact on performance.

The targets are:

Escapes

To ensure no category A prisoners escape.

To ensure that the number of escapes from prisons and from escorts, expressed as a proportion of the prison population, is lower than in 1996–97.

Assaults

To ensure that the number of assaults on staff, prisoners and others, expressed as a proportion of the average population, is lower than 9 per cent.

Drugs

To ensure that the rate of positive testing for drugs (the number of random drug tests that prove positive expressed as a proportion of the total number of random tests carried out) is lower than in 1996–97.

Overcrowding

To ensure that the percentage of the prison population above the uncrowded capacity of the estate is no more than 13 per cent.

Time unlocked

To ensure that by 31 March 1998 at least 60 per cent. of prisoners are held in establishments which normally unlock all prisoners on the standard or enhanced regime for at least 10 hours per week day.

Offending behaviour programmes

To ensure that there are at least 2,200 completions by prisoners of programmes accredited as being effective in reducing re-offending, of which 670 should be completions of the sex offender treatment programmes.

Cost per place

To achieve at least a 1.3 per cent. reduction in real terms in cost per place compared to 1996–97, ensuring that the average cost of a prison place does not exceed £24,610.

Staff training

To ensure that, on average, staff spend at least six days in training.

I have also set a target on purposeful activity, to ensure that prisoners spend on average at least 22.5 hours per week engaged in purposeful activity. This target takes account of work to improve the accuracy of these figures. Because of this, this year's target is not directly comparable with performance in previous years, but it is intended to maintain performance at the level delivered last year.

I regard it as extremely important that prisons provide a full day's constructive and challenging activity for prisoners, and I shall be asking the Director General to consider how he can improve on this targeting the years ahead. But I do recognise that the population pressures facing the service make it unrealistic to set a higher target in 1997-98.

Prisoner Transfers

Ms Blears: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what basis prisoners will be transferred between United Kingdom jurisdictions and the islands, following the introduction of schedule 1 to the Crime (Sentences) Act 1997. [13304]

Mr. Straw: The Government attach considerable importance to enabling prisoners to maintain family ties while serving their sentences. As part of a number of measures to facilitate family contact, there is provision for prisoners to transfer to another United Kingdom jurisdiction, or to one of the islands, where they have close family members.

The Criminal Justice Act 1961 provided for inter-jurisdictional transfers to be made on either a permanent or a temporary basis. Permanent transfers were normally refused where, as a consequence of differing early release provisions applying in the various jurisdictions, a reduction in time to serve would have been likely to result.

In 1992, an inter-departmental working group recognised the particular difficulties posed in relation to the permanent transfer of long-term prisoners to Northern Ireland because of differing early release provisions, and recommended that consideration be given to amending the legislation to overcome this problem. This recommendation was accepted and has been given effect in the Crime (Sentences) Act 1997 (section 41 and schedule 1) brought into force on 1 October 1997.

The new provisions provide for prisoners to be transferred to another jurisdiction on either an unrestricted or a restricted basis. In the case of an unrestricted transfer, the administration of the prisoner's sentence will become a matter entirely for the receiving jurisdiction. A restricted transfer will be subject to conditions whereby the sending jurisdiction will continue to administer certain specified aspects of the sentence.

Transfers will continue to require the consent of the Secretary of State of both the sending and receiving jurisdictions. Normally, transfer requests will be approved only where the prisoner has at least six months left to serve in the receiving jurisdiction before his or her release date at the time of making the request, and where the prisoner has no outstanding appeal against conviction or sentence, is not charged with further criminal proceedings, and is not liable to any further period of imprisonment in lieu of payment of any outstanding monetary orders made by a court.

Each application will be assessed on its individual merits, taking into consideration:

(i) the purpose for which the transfer is requested;

(ii) whether the prisoner was ordinarily resident in the jurisdiction to which transfer is sought prior to the imposition of the current sentence; or whether members of the prisoner's close family are resident in that jurisdiction and there are reasonable grounds for believing that the prisoner will receive regular visits from them; or whether the prisoner has demonstrated through preparations that he has made for his life following release from prison that he intends to reside in the receiving jurisdiction upon release and he is in the later stages of his sentence;

(iii) whether there are grounds for believing that the prisoner may disrupt or attempt to disrupt any prison establishment, or pose an unacceptable risk to security; and

(iv) any compelling or compassionate circumstances.

When considering whether to make an unrestricted or a restricted transfer, the Secretary of State of the sending jurisdiction will take into account the period and terms of transfer requested by the prisoner, and whether, as a consequence of an unrestricted transfer, there would be likely to be any effect on the length of time which the prisoner would be required to serve, or on any post release supervision requirement.

Where an unrestricted transfer is granted, the prisoner will serve the remainder of his or her sentence in the receiving jurisdiction as if that sentence had been passed there, and will be subject for all purposes to the statutory and other provisions applying to prisoners within the receiving jurisdiction.

A prisoner granted a restricted transfer will automatically remain, for the duration of his or her transfer, subject to the law governing release on licence, automatic release, post release supervision and recall applicable in the sending jurisdiction. In addition, any other condition relating to the terms of a prisoner's detention as the Secretary of State of the sending jurisdiction may deem appropriate in any particular case or class of case may be attached to the transfer.

A prisoner transferred on a restricted basis will normally become subject for all purposes, other than those specified in any conditions attached to the transfer, to the statutory and other provisions applying to prisoners in the receiving jurisdiction (including, for example, such matters as categorisation).

In the light of the new arrangements the Government have taken the opportunity to consider how applications for temporary release from prisoners transferred to another jurisdiction on a restricted basis should be handled. In future, decisions on applications for temporary release for compassionate or other purposes submitted by prisoners granted a restricted transfer for the purposes of facilitating family ties will normally become the responsibility of the jurisdiction to which the prisoner is transferred. Prisoners will be able to apply for periods of temporary release under the provisions existing in the receiving jurisdiction. Each such application will be considered by the appropriate authority in the receiving jurisdiction on its own merits and in accordance with the relevant criteria applying in that jurisdiction. Prisoners will normally, therefore, no longer be eligible to apply for temporary release under the provisions applying in the sending jurisdiction.

However, where a restricted transfer is time limited (for example, to enable the prisoner to receive accumulated visits), or for a purpose other than to facilitate family ties (for example, to attend judicial proceedings or to receive medical treatment), and the prisoner is expected to return to the sending jurisdiction, decisions on temporary release will continue to be made by the sending jurisdiction.

The effect of any conditions attached to a transfer will be explained to the prisoner concerned prior to transfer. Any conditions imposed may be reviewed at the request of the prisoner or either of the Secretaries of State party to the transfer at any time during the duration of the transfer, and may be varied or revoked by the making of a further order. A restricted transfer may not be made unrestricted without the consent of the prisoner concerned. Any requests for variation or revocation of conditions will be considered under the normal transfer criteria.

A prisoner granted a restricted transfer may be returned to the sending jurisdiction at any time if this proves necessary, for example, if the purpose for which the transfer was granted is no longer being fulfilled, at the request of the receiving jurisdiction (in the case of disruptive behaviour), or in the interests of the administration of the sentence (such as consideration by the Parole Board or to undergo post release supervision).

Transfer requests submitted by remand prisoners will be considered in accordance with the normal transfer criteria. However, in view of the need to ensure that the prisoner is available to the courts as required, normally such requests will be granted only where there are compelling or compassionate reasons for doing so.

Where a transfer is agreed, the timing of the prisoner's move will be subject to operational and security considerations in the sending and receiving jurisdictions.

"Corpus Juris"

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the document "Corpus Juris" sponsored by the Directorate General (Financial Control) of the European Commission; what Her Majesty's Government's policy is on this document; and if he will place a copy of the document in the Library. [12813]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 27 October 1997]: We understand that the document in question is a discussion paper with no formal status. We disagree with many of its recommendations which are incompatible with the legal traditions of this country. However, for any of them to have effect, they would need to be proposed formally and agreed unanimously in the Council. I understand that an English translation of the document should be obtainable from the European Commission. I am arranging for copies to be obtained and placed in the Library as requested.

Crime (Sentences) Act 1997

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Enfield, Southgate (Mr. Twigg) of 30 July, Official Report, columns 261–62, what is the linkage between section 20 of the Crime (Sentences) Act 1997 and other early release provisions; and if he will make a statement on his grounds for not implementing section 20; [12727]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 30 July. Official Report, columns 261–62, to the hon. Member for Enfield, Southgate how the extended supervision of sexual offenders he proposes in the Crime and Disorder Bill will differ from that provided in the Crime (Sentences) Act 1997. [12742]

Ms Quin: We decided not to implement the release and post-release supervision provisions set out in sections 10–26 of the 1997 Act on the grounds that they were unnecessarily complicated. Our preferred approach is that the courts should be required to spell out in open court what a sentence means in practice, based on the existing release and supervision arrangements provided for by the Criminal Justice Act 1991.

The principle of extended supervision of sex offenders is one which the Government fully support. However, the arrangements for extended supervision of sex offenders in the 1997 Act cannot be brought into effect independently of other provisions in part II of the Act which we believe would create overly complex arrangements. That is why we intend to bring forward fresh provision to do this in the Crime and Disorder Bill. This will give the courts the same powers in respect of maximum post-release supervision as section 20.

SCOTLAND

Sewerage Charges

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will grant relief to domestic customers in respect of sewerage charges in 1998–99. [13374]

Mr. Dewar: Yes. I have set aside £29.7 million for this purpose. This sum represents a saving to average band D households of between £17 and £20 in 1998–99. The sum is in line with the previous Government's expenditure plans. This relief, first introduced in 1996, is a transitional arrangement which is to be phased out by April 1999. We shall pay grant to water authorities to compensate for the charge income they will forgo in 1998–99. Of this some £9.0 million will be available to the East Authority, £7.4 million to the North Authority and £13.2 million to the West Authority. The necessary order will be laid before Parliament shortly.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Goods and Services (Payments)

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list each of the functions relating to payment for goods or services supplied for which her Department is responsible indicating the management systems purchased, all subcontractors involved in the work; co-operative arrangements with other Departments; and the costs of the systems and processes in the last year for which figures are available. [12559]

Mr. Foulkes: My Department has an in-house payment system which processes most payments made in the UK in respect of goods or services supplied under the aid programme. Payments are authorised by the spending departments, which are mainly overseas. After input and review by headquarters staff in the UK these payments are then recorded, checked and cleared for issue by the accounts department in our East Kilbride headquarters. The accounts department's total running costs for 1996–97 were £819,000 but not all these costs related to the processing of payments for goods and services. It would involve disproportionate expense to make a reliable estimate of spending departments' and other headquarters' costs covering only this aspect of work.

In addition, my Department employs five procurement agents: these agents include in their fee a sum to cover payment to suppliers. This fee covers all aspects of procurement agents' services and agents do not separate out that element of their fee which covers payment to suppliers.

Financial aid to partner Governments under the terms of loan or grant agreements is made by Crown Agents Financial Services which charged £589,000 for this service in 1996–97. Some payments are also made overseas by embassies and high commissions on our behalf.

PHARE

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what representations she has made in respect of the financial irregularities noted by the Court of Auditors in its special report concerning the decentralised system for the implementation of the PHARE programme between 1990 and 1995. [12503]

Mr. Foulkes: We maintain regular contacts with the commission (DG1A) in order to help improve the efficiency and effectiveness of PHARE implementation and financial control procedures. We agree with the findings of the report and will maintain pressure for improvements.

Kenya

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what are the current levels of aid to Kenya; and how much is provided to (a) the Government of Kenya and (b) non-governmental organisations. [12553]

Mr. Foulkes: British aid to Kenya in 1996–97 was about £25 million, 40 per cent. of which was provided through non-government channels.

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will provide support to human rights monitors in Kenya. [12551]

Mr. Foulkes: My Department has offered to provide finance to assist with an election observing programme by three well-respected non-government organisations in Kenya.

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when she next expects to meet representatives of the Kenyan Government to discuss human rights issues. [12550]

Mr. Foulkes: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for International Development met President Moi and Finance Minister Mudavadi in Nairobi on 6 October 1997. During these meetings she explained Britain's commitment to the elimination of poverty in poorer countries and our intention to work with those Governments which are themselves committed to taking the full range of measures necessary to achieve this aim including the improvement of human rights. She has no plans to meet representatives of the Kenyan Government.

TREASURY

VAT (Schools)

Dr. Vis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if all state schools are registered for VAT, and what the differences are between VAT treatment for (a) local education authority schools, (b) grant-maintained schools and (c) private educational facilities. [12776]

Dawn Primarolo: Local Education Authority schools are covered by the VAT registration of their parent local authority. Other schools may be registered for VAT in respect of non-education activities. Education itself is exempt from VAT, so no school has to charge VAT on its provision of education.

There are some differences between different types of school in respect of recovery of VAT incurred on their expenditure. Local Education Authority schools can recover all VAT under the special provisions made for local authorities; other schools cannot, though grant-maintained schools are compensated for this by central Government grant, and independent schools can take non-recoverable VAT into account in setting the level of their fees.

Financial Services Regulation

Mr. Stephen Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his proposals for reform of financial services regulation. [13096]

Mr. Darling: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has decided that the new single regulatory organisation is to be called the Financial Services Authority. This name has been adopted by the body formerly known as the Securities and Investments Board.

The draft legislation to be published next summer will include draft statutory objectives for the Financial Services Authority. These are expected to include objectives in the following areas:

the promotion and maintenance of confidence in the UK financial sector and markets;

protecting consumers by ensuring that firms are competent and financially sound and give their customers confidence in their integrity, while recognising customers' own responsibility for their financial decisions; promoting the improvement of public understanding of the benefits and risks associated with financial products through the improvement of information and advice; monitoring, detecting and preventing financial crime.

We also intend to set some objectives to condition how the Financial Services Authority goes about its job. We want it to:

be efficient and economic, ensuring that costs and restrictions on firms are proportionate to the benefits of regulation; facilitate innovation in financial services;

take account of the international nature of financial regulation and financial services business.

The Financial Services Authority has today published a launch document with more details of the preparations for the new regulatory structure. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

The Financial Services Authority has also published today consultation documents on practitioner and consumer involvement and the basis for charging for banking supervision. The details of the new regulatory structure and the Government's intentions for the draft legislation will be subject to further consultation.

Indirect Taxation

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the European Commission proposals to adopt a new procedure concerning the implementing measures relating to indirect taxation, as observed in IP/97/653. [12504]

Dawn Primarolo: In common with most other member states, the UK is committed to the maintenance of unanimity in the Council as the basis for EC decision-making on indirect tax matters. The UK is thus opposed to the European Commission's proposals.

Taxation (Expatriates)

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to change the arrangements for the taxation of expatriates. [12845]

Dawn Primarolo: All aspects of the UK tax system are kept under regular review.

National Assets Register

Mr. Alan Keen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to be able to publish the National Assets Register. [12581]

Mr. Darling: The Government is currently working towards the completion of the National Asset Register and hopes to publish it in the second half of November 1997.

Economic and Monetary Union

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will make it his policy to protect Britain's zero rates of VAT during negotiations on stage III of economic and monetary union; [12841]

(2) what action he will take to ensure that Britain's zero rates of VAT are protected under European Commission plans to harmonise VAT rates. [12842]

Dawn Primarolo: Although the European Commission aspires to the further harmonisation of VAT rates as part of its suggested programme for a "common system" of VAT, there are no current legislative proposals on rates. The UK's zero rates are fully safeguarded under existing EC VAT law, and any change requires the unanimous agreement of member states. We are committed to retaining the right to keep our existing zero rates and there is no question of being forced to give them up.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the real change in total public expenditure for (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99 consequential on the higher gross domestic product deflators announced in the Budget. [12477]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 27 October 1997]: In the July Budget, the projections for General Government Expenditure were increased in cash terms by £0.4 billion in 1997–98 and by £4.1 billion in 1998–99 compared with the figures published in the November 1996 Budget. An additional £1.2 billion was provided for Health and £1 billion for Education in 1998–99. Forecasts for the GDP deflator were also increased. In 1995–96 prices, the July projections for General Government Expenditure were lower than those in the November 1996 Budget by £2.6 billion in 1997–98 and £1.5 billion in 1998–99.

Single European Currency

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer where Nordic gold for single currency coinage will be mined; which companies will be involved; and if his Department will undertake research on the ecological effects of the mining and refining involved. [12517]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 27 October 1997]: There are no plans for single currency coinage for circulation to contain gold.

Pension Schemes

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number of members of closed pension schemes with no sponsoring employers who will be adversely affected by the Budget changes to the value of tax credits. [12838]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 27 October 1997]: We have no detailed information concerning the membership of closed pension schemes with no sponsoring employers.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps to compensate members of the closed pension schemes with no sponsoring employers whose weekly income has fallen as a result of the Budget changes to the value of tax credits. [12837]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 27 October 1997]: No.

BNFL

Mr. McGrady: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the role of her Department in determining dividend guidelines relating to BNFL; when the guidelines were last reviewed; and what factors were taken into account in determining such guidelines. [12938]

Mr. Battle: Dividend policy is reviewed from time to time by my Department, in consultation with the Treasury, the most recent being in 1995, when the basis of calculating the dividend was changed from a current cost accounting basis to a historic profit after tax basis. A number of factors are taken into account in determining dividend policy, including the need for the Government, as shareholder, to earn a reasonable rate of return on its investment.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what contact has taken place between officials of her Department and representatives of BNFL since 1 May. [12950]

Mr. Battle: The Department maintains regular contact with BNFL on a wide range of issues.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when her Department last approved BNFL's corporate plan; what period it covered; and if it indicated that mixed oxide fuel is to be manufactured by BNFL at Sellafield. [12942]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: BNFL's 1996 Corporate Plan was approved in November 1996. It covered the period from April 1996 to March 2000. The Plan, and the Company's 1996 Annual Report and Accounts, indicated that Mixed Oxide (MOX) fuel continues to be manufactured at Sellafield.

DTI Recruitment

Mr. Dismore: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will publish summary information on DTI recruitment for calendar year 1996, and the use of permitted exceptions to the principles of fair and open competition and selection on merit, as required by the civil service commissioners' recruitment code. [13302]

Mr. Ian McCartney: It is DTI policy that recruitment is carried out on the basis of fair and open competition and selection on merit, subject to the exceptions permitted by the Civil Service Commissioners. My Department has systems in place which ensure that the principles of fair and open competition are understood and followed, in accordance with the provisions of the Civil Service Commissioners' Recruitment Code. These systems are subject to internal check by The DTI's Internal Audit.

The DTI's Executive Agencies and the Government Office network make separate arrangements for publishing recruitment data, and the following table and narratives describe only Headquarters recruitment.

The number of occasions on which the permitted exceptions to fair and open competition and selection on merit have been used at each level (except for appointments of up to 12 months) are categorised as follows:

extensions of appointments of up to 12 months up to a maximum of 24 months:

two Administrative Assistants where permanent post holders were on temporary promotion into the next grade which was subject to advertising one Administrative Officer where the future of the post was subject to review recurrent short term appointments:—none short term appointments where highly specialised skills are required:—none extensions of short term appointments beyond the initially publicised period, including conversions to permanency:

one Assistant Statistician appointment extended to 18 months where a replacement with statistical experience could not be identified secondments:—none

extensions to secondments:—none

re-appointment of former civil servants:

one at Grade 6

six at Grade 7

four at Executive Officer

two at Administrative Officer

two at Investigations Officer

transfers of staff with their work (not under TUPE):—none transfers of staff from other public services without work (unless from a public body staffed exclusively by civil servants):—none appointments of surplus acceptable candidates to shortage posts:—none appointments of disabled candidates under modified selection arrangements any use of the exceptions reserved for the Commissioners:—none.

Company Auditors

Mr. Todd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she has received the fifth annual reports of the recognised supervisory bodies for company auditors under part II of the Companies Act 1989. [13303]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I have received the fifth annual reports of all the recognised supervisory bodies for company auditors, and have placed copies in the Library. My Department will be discussing the contents of the reports with the bodies as necessary.

Lloyd's of London

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what evidence concerning the operations of Lloyd's of London in 1982 has been passed by her Department to the Serious Fraud Office since the end of June 1997. [12976]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 27 October 1997]: My officials received a number of papers relating to Lloyd's which were passed to the Serious Fraud Office for their consideration.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what costs have been incurred to date by the United Kingdom Government as amicus curiae in cases involving Lloyd's of London in the United States courts. [12975]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 27 October 1997]: The costs of individual activities undertaken by the Government in pursuit of its regulatory responsibilities in respect of Lloyd's of London cannot be separately identified, and the resources devoted to producing them would be disproportionate.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Judicial Appointments

Ms Fiona Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what changes his Department proposes to make to the current system of judicial appointments. [13296]

Mr. Hoon: It is essential in the public interest that the judiciary at every level is of the highest possible quality. Appointments will continue to be made strictly on merit, after the independent views of the judiciary and the legal profession have been taken into consideration by the Lord Chancellor; and appointment to full time office normally made only after satisfactory service in a part time judging.

Nevertheless, improvements can be made. I intend to present an annual report to Parliament on the operation of the judicial appointments system. The first report will cover the period 1998–99. I also intend to end the system of appointment to the High Court bench only by invitation and to invite applications for appointments to the High Court bench, so that all with judicial ambitions can be assured that their cases are properly considered.

I propose to ensure appropriate flexibility in part-time sittings arrangements where, for example, women or men have taken career breaks for family reasons. My officials are developing plans to ensure that those who sit part-time may be able to concentrate their sittings into a shorter period of time than at present. By this means these career breaks will not, so far as practicable, impede career development.

I intend to increase the upper age limit for appointment as Assistant Recorder from 50 to 53 in future competition rounds. Raising the age limit to 53 will widen the pool of potential applicants. The normal period of service as an Assistant Recorder and Recorder, before appointment to the Circuit bench, is five to seven years and an appointment to the Circuit bench at or around 60 would enable the judge to serve for a minimum of 10 years before retiring at 70.

In the longer term I intend to review whether an Ombudsman should be appointed with power to examine fully complaints from anyone who feels unfairly treated by the appointments process; and to review the appointment procedures for deputy High Court judge appointments. I have recently appointed two solicitors, direct from the profession, to act as deputy High Court judges. This has not happened before. I also intend to review the scope to improve arrangements for appraisal of performance of the part-time judiciary, not least to improve the assessments of their performance which contribute to my decisions on applications for full-time office.

Since becoming Lord Chancellor I have decided to involve in the process of shortlisting judicial candidates for interviews both judges and lay members who will have, in advance, a summary of the views expressed in consultation about every applicant. An additional 28 lay members have been appointed to assist in the shortlisting and interviewing of candidates for a range of judicial appointments including those of Circuit judge, District judge and Assistant Recorder. I have taken steps to promote work on equal opportunities, in conjunction with the legal profession, which I will announce shortly. I have required that any allegation of misconduct made in the course of consultation about a judicial candidate must be specific and subject to disclosure to the candidate.

So far as the magistracy is concerned, I have increased for the first time the upper age limit for appointment as a lay magistrate to 65, so as to draw from the pool of the age group 55 to 65 to achieve a better social and political balance on the bench. This age group includes many who may have taken early retirement. I have also opened the magistracy to blind candidates on an experimental basis.

I believe that these positive measures will strengthen the openness, flexibility and effectiveness of the arrangements for judicial appointments. I do not rule out further measures in due course. I earlier announced (23 June 1997, Official Report, column 145), that I proposed to consult on the merits of establishing a Judicial Appointments Commission. However, in the light of the measures that I have listed above, the resources of my Department, and the other substantial priorities facing my Department, including a very heavy workload connected with legal aid and civil justice reforms, I have decided not to proceed with further work on a possible Commission, but to concentrate on making those changes I regard as most urgent.

Mental Incapacity Report

Mr. Hope: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what action his Department proposes to take in respect of the Law Commission's report on mental incapacity. [13097]

Mr. Hoon: The Law Commission's Report on Mental Incapacity is a thorough and detailed examination of the current law. It provides a coherent framework for reform. The Government recognises, however, that the Report addresses sensitive issues on which strong personal views may be held.

The Government does not consider that it would be appropriate to legislate in this area without fresh public consultation. It therefore hopes to issue a Consultation Paper by the end of the year seeking views on the full range of the Law Commission's recommendations.

The Law Commission's Report does not make any recommendations concerning euthanasia. The Government is of the certain view, in line with the House of Lords Select Committee on Medical Ethics, that euthanasia cannot be sanctioned in any circumstances. The Consultation Paper will therefore not seek views on this subject.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Nectarines

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons the EU Commission has placed restrictions on the size of nectarines which may be sold. [12337]

Mr. Rooker: The EU Marketing Standard for nectarines has been in place since 1990.

There is substantial over-production of nectarines, brought about largely by the Intervention (withdrawal) system. The Commission has sought to tackle this to some extent by limiting the size of the fruit that can be marketed and thus intervened (withdrawn), thereby limiting the cost to EU taxpayers. Although the EU regime for fresh fruit and vegetables has only recently been reformed, with significant reductions in the amount of produce that may be withdrawn, ultimately we would prefer to see an end to the withdrawal system.

The establishment of minimum sizes helps to ensure that only nectarines which are sufficiently developed, and able to ripen, are available to the consumer.

Agriculture Councils

Ms Shipley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Agriculture Councils held on 22 and 23 September in Brussels and on 20 and 21 October in Luxembourg; and if he will make a statement. [13295]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: I represented the United Kingdom at meetings of the European Union Agriculture Council on 22–23 September and 20–21 October. I was accompanied at the October Council by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Scotland, Lord Sewel.

At the September Council, EU Agriculture Ministers followed up their informal discussions of early September on the Commission's proposals to reform the common agricultural policy which have been made as part of Agenda 2000. On this occasion, discussion focused in particular on rural development, environmental and structural policy. Member states reaffirmed the importance of an active rural development policy to assist the transformation of European agriculture; there were, however, differences of view in the Council on the funding of rural and structural measures in the future. I stressed the importance to the United Kingdom of setting the proposals on rural development clearly in the context of changes to the market mechanisms of the CAP, on which the Commission's Agenda 2000 proposals represented an important first step. I also emphasised the need to foster alternative rural enterprises as the source of new employment possibilities in the countryside in the future.

The Council of Ministers also heard reports from the Commission on progress in negotiations on veterinary and plant health equivalence agreements with third countries; and noted the Commission's intention to lodge an appeal in the WTO dispute concerning hormones in beef. In a brief discussion of BSE, I reported to the Council the steps I have taken in the United Kingdom, both legislative and administrative, to tighten up our measures to counter illegal exports of beef and beef products from the UK. These were welcomed in the Council.

I pressed the Commissioner and the Presidency to provide an early opportunity for the Council to discuss the present state of the beef market, on the basis of the Commission's promised report, to decide whether the short term market adjustment schemes agreed in 1996 were working effectively.

I also raised in the Council the UK's serious concerns about the impact of the recent WTO Appellate body ruling on the EU bananas regime in so far as its affects access by ACP Caribbean banana producers to EU markets. I urged the Commission to reach a rapid and equitable solution to the problems flowing from the WTO ruling which would not only respect WTO obligations but allow the EU to meet its commitments to the ACP and in particular on Caribbean trading partners under the Lomé Agreement.

At the October Agriculture Council, discussion concentrated on the market reform proposals contained in Agenda 2000. I argued for the removal of production controls in the form of quotas and compulsory set aside and for a lowering of support levels to bring EU prices closer to world market prices and I argued that transitional arrangements should begin soon. The Council will resume its discussion on this crucial issue in November. A letter from the President of the Agriculture Council to the President of the European Council on employment policy in rural areas was approved by Ministers.

In a debate on the Commission's report on the beef and veal markets, I expressed doubts about the efficacy of the early marketing scheme for veal in reducing production on the EU market, and urged the Commission to make a further cut in the premium paid under the calf processing scheme. The Council reached political agreement upon changes to the system of support for producers of durum wheat. Under the compromise which was agreed by qualified majority (Greece, Sweden and Denmark opposing), the additional aid paid for durum wheat in traditional producing areas was reduced, and the maximum area eligible for aid in each member state determined. Five thousand hectares will be eligible in the United Kingdom.

The Council discussed the Commission's green paper on the general principles of food law in the EU, in which I emphasised the UK Government's commitment to attaining very high levels of food safety. The Council also took note of Commission reports on genetic resources, BSE, and the state of play on veterinary and plant health negotiations with their countries.

Cattle Slaughter Scheme

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the average weight of cattle slaughtered under the over-30-months cattle slaughter scheme; and what proportion of the cattle slaughtered under the scheme exceeded that average weight. [10159]

Mr. Rooker [pursuant to his answer, 31 July 1997, c. 433]: The average weight of cattle slaughtered under the OTMS is as follows:

	Average weight (kgs)	Percentage exceeding average weight
Cows	600	47
Bulls	802	47
Heifers	549	49
Steers	632	49
All animals	604	47

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cattle weighing (a) between 560 and 609 kg, (b) between 610 and 659 kg, (c) between 660 and 709 kg, (d) between 710 and 759 kg and (e) over 760 kg live weight have been slaughtered under the over-30-months cattle slaughter scheme during 1997. [10160]

Mr. Rooker [pursuant to his answer, 31 July 1997, c. 433]: The information requested is as follows:

	560–609 kg	610–659 kg	660–709 kg	710–759 kg	Over 760 kg	Totals

International Whaling Commission

Ms Shipley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what the outcome was of the annual meeting of the International Whaling Commission held on 20 to 24 October in Monaco; and if he will make a statement. [13294]

Mr. Morley: The International Whaling Commission's 49th annual meeting was held in Monaco from 20 to 24 October. The United Kingdom delegation was composed of officials from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, assisted by officials from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions and representatives of environmental organisations and veterinary experts. I attended the first day of the conference and took the opportunity to meet with representatives of the environmental organisations and the chairman of the IWC.

At this meeting we made clear the United Kingdom's continued opposition to commercial whaling. We stressed that the UK does not believe that there is any justification for any whaling to take place, other than some subsistence whaling by indigenous peoples, and would like to see all other forms of whaling ended. We believe whaling does not serve any genuine need and involves unacceptable cruelty. We also emphasised our continuing support for the current moratorium on commercial whaling. I am pleased to say that a request by Japan for a quota of 50 minke whales, which we and many others considered would have breached the moratorium, was again defeated.

Before the meeting, Ireland had indicated that it intended to put forward a number of ideas for consideration. At the meeting Ireland explained that it was concerned that the inability of the IWC to reach agreement on fundamental issues relating to whale conservation made progress on this impossible and might lead to the break-up of the IWC. It wished, therefore, to explore whether there was any scope to reach an agreement between those opposed to and those in favour of whaling.

With this objective, Ireland suggested:

the revised management scheme (RMS) should be completed and adopted; the RMS, which is currently being developed by the IWC, is intended to ensure that any future whaling takes place only on a sustainable basis and under the full control of the IWC;

any quotas granted under the RMS should be restricted to coastal areas of nations that are currently whaling, creating a de facto ocean sanctuary; any quotas should be for local consumption only, to prevent the development of international trade in whalemeat;

so called "scientific whaling" should be phased out over a period; regulations for whalewatching should be prepared to minimise disturbance to whale populations.

There was a preliminary discussion of these ideas. The UK made it clear that, while we were ready to explore all ways of improving whale conservation, we would only support measures which we were convinced would contribute positively to this objective. We wished to see the current moratorium on commercial whaling made permanent, which we believed would be the most effective way of creating a global whale sanctuary, and we strongly supported ending scientific whaling. On the other hand, we had serious reservations about the Irish ideas on coastal whaling, and could not accept any definition of coastal whaling which allowed it to take place up to 200 miles from the coast.

While there was a good deal of support for Ireland's wish to break the current deadlock, a number of other delegations expressed reservations about particular aspects of the proposals. The Irish Commissioner, who was elected IWC chairman at the end of the meeting, will now consider how best to carry matters forward before the next IWC meeting in Oman in May 1998. The UK delegation remains to be convinced that aspects of the Irish proposal will assist whale conservation.

At recent IWC meetings the UK has, with New Zealand, been pressing Japan to end the use of the electric lance, a device used to kill whales wounded but not killed by an explosive harpoon. We believe that there is conclusive evidence that use of the electric lance is inhumane. At this year's meeting we again raised this issue, and I am pleased to say that Japan has undertaken to end use of the electric lance, except in exceptional circumstances, from the start of the next whaling season. I believe that this is a significant success and demonstrates what can be achieved by persistence linked to sound science.

As in previous years the UK delegation made clear our opposition to the whaling activities of Norway and Japan. We supported a resolution calling on Norway to reconsider its objection to the moratorium and to halt all commercial whaling operations. We also supported two resolutions strongly criticising Japan's scientific whaling programme and calling on Japan to end scientific whaling.

The IWC agreed a number of new aboriginal subsistence whaling quotas. These included a quota for grey whales, for which the United States have been seeking a small quota for use by the Makah Indians. Since the IWC sets quotas for particular stocks of whales, the quota ultimately agreed also took account of a bid by Russia for a quota for use by the indigenous people of the Chukotka peninsular in Siberia. In discussion the UK pressed for a reduction in the level of quota sought; we also argued that the Makah, who have not whaled for over 70 years, have not established a valid claim for an aboriginal quota. I am pleased to say that the quota finally agreed is significantly lower than was originally proposed; in agreeing it the UK made it clear that our agreement did not imply that we accepted the validity of the case made on behalf of the Makah.

New quotas were also agreed for bowhead whales and for whales hunted by aboriginal subsistence whalers in Greenland.

During these discussions the UK expressed concern about the humaneness of aboriginal subsistence whaling. In the light of these concerns we proposed a resolution which, while welcoming the steps taken so far to reduce the pain and distress caused to whales by these hunts, called for further improvements. The resolution, which was adopted by consensus, also ensures that this issue will be revisited annually by the IWC.

A number of other issues were discussed during the meeting. The UK promoted a resolution on small cetaceans calling on all member countries to take appropriate steps to reduce by catches and directed takes and to encourage further scientific research. We also supported a resolution endorsing the work of the Scientific Committee on threats posed to cetaceans by climate change and pollution and encouraging further research.

DEFENCE

Naval Bases and Supply Agency

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Naval Bases and Supply Agency for 1997–98. [13094]

Dr. Reid: The chief executive of the Naval Bases and Supply Agency has been set the following key targets:

1. To complete 92 per cent. of assisted maintenance periods for vessels to time, budget and standard.

2. To supply 92 per cent. of available material to rectify operational defects on vessels within required delivery dates.

3. To establish the NBSA cost per materially available vessel day by establishing a baseline for the unit cost of vessel repair and maintenance, and then setting targets for reducing this cost.

4. To complete integration of the Portsmouth naval base and director supply (south) management structures, and to consolidate the corporate management structure of the agency by reviewing opportunities for rationalisation of the HQ structure.

5. To establish the agency account via the CAPITAL Project, including the provision of an executive information system to meet business requirements, by March 2000. Progress report in March 1998.

6. To achieve year-on-year efficiency improvements of 2.3 per cent.

7. To achieve full accreditation of Investors in People by phased implementation by 2000. Progress report in March 1998.

Territorial Army and Volunteer Reserves

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total cost per year to his Department of each member of (a) the Territorial Army and (b) the volunteer reserves. [13092]

Dr. Reid: The information requested is set out in the table rounded to the nearest £100. The figures are calculated from the overall cost of the reserve force concerned for the financial year 1996–97 and its average membership for that year. They exclude provision for items whose costs cannot be identified separately from those incurred for the regular services.

Territorial Army	6,100
Royal Naval Reserve	6,700
Royal Marines Reserve	7,300
Royal Auxiliary Air Force[1]	7,400

[1] Figures relate to those personnel who could be called out to perform an operational role: they do not include RAF volunteer reserve (civilian component), RAF volunteer reserve (training) or RAF volunteer reserve (university air squadrons).

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, what is the current cost of the reserve forces, by type. [11023]

Dr. Reid [pursuant to his reply, 29 July 1997, c. 183]: I regret that my previous answer was incorrect because further information has been brought to light. The revised information for financial year 1996–97 is in the table. These figures exclude provision for those items whose costs cannot be identified separately from those incurred for the regular forces.

	£ million
Royal Fleet Reserve	0.04
Royal Naval Reserve	17.5
Royal Marines Reserve	6.6
Territorial Army Commando Units	1.8
Army Reserve	0.6
Territorial Army	341.3
Royal Air Force Reserve	0.4
Royal Auxiliary Air Force	9.5

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money is allocated to maintaining the Territorial Army in the current financial year; what is this sum as a percentage of the defence budget; and what the allocation will be in (a) cash and (b) as a percentage of the defence budget in the next three financial years. [8183]

Dr. Reid [pursuant to his reply, 16 July 1997, c. 234]: I regret that my previous answer was incorrect because further information on the costs of the Territorial Army has been brought to light. When this additional expenditure is taken into account it shows that the overall cost of the Territorial Army for financial year 1997–98 now stands at some £340.4 million (not £334 million) which still represents about 1.6 per cent. of the defence budget. This figure excludes provision for those items whose costs cannot be identified separately from those incurred for the regular Army.

The allocation of funds for the Territorial Army in the next three financial years will be determined as part of the MOD's long term costing, which is the process by which the Department recosts and adjusts its internal plans. The Department's internal plans represent projections and assumptions, which inform advice to Ministers on the affordability of particular elements of the defence programme, and it has been the policy of successive Governments not to publish detailed information arising from this. Accordingly, I am withholding the information requested in the second part of the question which constitutes internal discussion and advice, under exemption 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Army Equipment Support

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the future management of the Army's equipment support. [13093]

Dr. Reid: I have instigated a formal review of the Army's Equipment Support in order to determine whether agency status or other options for equipment support, including privatisation, contractorisation or partnering arrangements with Industry would best meet the Army's requirements.

Comments and contributions from those with an interest in the equipment support services provided by the Director General Equipment Support (Army) on behalf of the Quartermaster General Army will be welcomed and should be sent by 7 November to:

Major General P. V. R. Besgrove CBE
Director General Equipment Support (Army)
HQ QMG
Monxton Road
Andover
Hants SP11 8HT.

Ministry of Defence Police

Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has received the report of the inspection of the Ministry of Defence Police by Her Majesty's inspector of constabulary; and if he will make a statement. [13095]

Dr. Reid: My right hon. Friend has received the report by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary on the Ministry of Defence Police. A copy of the report has been placed in the Library of the House.

HEALTH

Nurse Recruitment

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nurses in England and Wales were recruited from (a) the Irish Republic and (b) Northern Ireland in each of the past five years. [12608]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested is not collected centrally. I refer my hon. Friend to the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting for statistics about nurses registered to practice in England and Wales.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Quota Hopping

16. Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reasons the agreement reached on quota hopping was not included in the Amsterdam treaty. [12129]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made to the House by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on 18 June, Official Report, columns 331–44, at Amsterdam. Not a single member state was willing to support the protocol to the treaty proposed by the previous Administration.

EU Enlargement

18. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what practical measures will be taken to ensue that new countries are helped to join the European Community. [12131]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The European Commission has proposed reinforcing the pre-accession strategy for Central European applicants to the European Union. This should lead to better targeted financial and technical assistance to help the applicants prepare for EU membership. The European Council will adopt a position on these proposals at Luxembourg in December.

30. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the policy of Her Majesty's Government on the expansion of the European Union. [12145]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I refer the hon. Member to the oral answer that I gave today to the hon. Member for West Lancashire (Mr. Pickthall).

Kashmir

19. Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his Department's policy towards Kashmir. [12132]

22. Mr. Hopkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his Department's policy towards Kashmir. [12135]

Mr. Fatchett: We are deeply concerned by the continuing conflict in Kashmir and support the search for a just and lasting solution. We condemn the acts of terrorism and the abuses of human rights which bring suffering to the population. We call for an end to all external support for violence in Kashmir. We welcome the dialogue between India and Pakistan and urge them to pursue meaningful talks on Kashmir and the other issues that divide them.

EU Common Foreign and Security Policy

20. Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what he expects will be Britain's (a) gross and (b) net contribution to the European Union's budget for common foreign and security policy matters for the year 1998–99. [12133]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The EC Preliminary Draft Budget (PDB) for calendar year 1998 makes provision for commitments of up to 30 Mecu (i.e. about £22.1 million) for CFSP actions. Britain's gross contribution is approximately 15 per cent. of the total budget, i.e. up to £3.32 million depending on the prevailing exchange rate. Britain does not benefit directly from CFSP expenditure.

European Court of Justice

21. Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the areas in which the European Court of Justice has gained jurisdiction under the terms of the Amsterdam treaty. [12134]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We believe that if the European Union is to work properly, the Court of Justice must have strong, if carefully circumscribed, powers. The new Treaty involves a limited extension of ECJ jurisdiction in a way which respects this balance.

Bosnia

23. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of the peace process in Bosnia. [12136]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to the oral answer that I gave today to the hon. Member for North-East Derbyshire, (Mr. Barnes).

Middle East Peace Process

25. Mr. Casale: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his assessment of progress in the middle east peace process. [12139]

26. Mr. Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of the middle east peace process. [12141]

33. Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received regarding the middle east peace process. [12148]

Mr. Fatchett: I refer hon. Members to the oral answer that my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary gave today to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. Burden).

Cyprus

27. Mr. Eric Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what initiatives he has put forward to try to solve the impasse over the re-unification of Cyprus. [12142]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We intend to remain active and creative in support of the UN Secretary-General's mission of good offices on Cyprus.

Indonesia

28. Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on human rights in Indonesia. [12143]

Mr. Fatchett: We remain concerned about the human rights situation in both Indonesia and East Timor. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary discussed the situation during his visit to Indonesia in August.

EU Budget

29. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to reduce incidents of fraud in relation to the EU budget. [12144]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We are committed to reducing fraud against the EU budget. Tackling fraud and financial mismanagement will be a priority for our Presidency next year and we will be announcing a package of measures which we intend to take forward.

Taiwan

31. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations with Taiwan. [12146]

Mr. Fatchett: While we have no diplomatic relations with Taiwan, we value our commercial and cultural ties. We welcome expanding trade links, the growing number of Taiwanese students and tourists who visit, and increasing Taiwanese inward investment in the United Kingdom.

UN Reform

32. Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the UN reform package. [12147]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary made clear at the UN General Assembly last month our strong support for the Secretary-General's reform package. It will give the UN the flexibility, competence and efficiency it needs for the next century. We are now working for its early endorsement.

EU Institutions (Communication)

34. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to improve communications between national parliamentarians and EU institutions. [12149]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We support closer contacts between national parliamentarians, in line with its commitment to enhance the role of national parliaments in the EU. The development of such contacts is principally a matter for national parliaments to pursue. I understand that the House authorities are considering the question of representation at the European Parliament and/or in Brussels for the House of Commons.

Cuba

35. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with representatives of the Cuban Government on relations with the European Union and the United Nations. [12150]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary met the Cuban Ambassador at the Diplomatic Reception in June and the Ambassador called on my noble Friend Baroness Symons, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, on 26 June. Officials frequently discuss with the Cuban Government their relations with the European Union and the United Nations.

We and EU partners share the goal of a peaceful transition to democracy in Cuba. We favour constructive engagement, not isolation. The EU adopted a Common Position on Cuba on 2 December 1996, reaffirming the EU's commitment to constructive engagement and to promoting political, economic and human rights reform in Cuba. This was presented to the Cuban Government on 21 July and we look forward to furthering this dialogue.

Strategic Defence Review

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations his Department has made on international controls on weapons proliferation to the strategic defence review. [12114]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have worked closely with the Ministry of Defence on all aspects of the Strategic Defence Review. We remain committed to maintaining and, where necessary, strengthening international controls on weapons proliferation. We are working in the relevant international fora to this end.

Kenya

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what support the United Kingdom Government are offering to the Kenyan election process. [12335]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Provided we are satisfied that there is the prospect of free and fair elections in Kenya, we will seek to contribute to international and local monitoring of them. Our exact plans have yet to be finalised.

We welcome reforms which will be relevant to electoral conditions agreed by the Inter-Parties Parliamentary Group in Nairobi and President Moi's acceptance of them. We look to all concerned to observe both the letter and the spirit of the reforms in the conduct of the elections themselves.

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the Kenyan Government. [12336]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have made clear to the Government of Kenya our views on the conditions that need to be established to ensure that the forthcoming Presidential and legislative elections are free and fair. We have welcomed reforms agreed by the Inter-Parties Parliamentary Group in Nairobi and President Moi's acceptance of them. We have urged that the necessary legislative and other measures be taken quickly to allow sufficient time for full implementation before the elections. We look to all concerned to observe both the letter and the spirit of the reforms in the conduct of the elections themselves. We have also made clear our concerns about human rights in Kenya, and about the economic issues which led the IMF to allow Kenya's Enhanced Statement Adjustment Facility to lapse.

NORTHERN IRELAND

School Enrolments

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the enrolment at (a) Brooklands primary school, Dundonald, and (b) Dundonald primary school at the beginning of the academic year 1997–98; how many pupils applied for places for that year; and how many applications were refused. [12772]

Mr. Worthington: The enrolment numbers at the beginning of the academic year 1997–98 for Brooklands primary school and Dundonald primary school were:

Brooklands Primary School: 602

Dundonald Primary School: 588

There were 104 applications for Brooklands primary school of which one was refused. There were 84 applications for Dundonald primary school and no refusals.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the enrolment at (a) Movilla high school, Newtonards, (b) Regent House grammar school and (c) Glastry high school at the beginning of the academic year 1997–98; how many pupils applied for places for that year and how many applications were refused; and if she will make a statement about the future provision of places at (a) to (c). [12773]

Mr. Worthington: The information requested is set out in the table.

1997–98 school year

	Number of applications received	Number of applications refused	Actual enrolment
Movilla High School	199	21	888
Regent House School	270	59	1,422
Glastry College	102	none	583

Movilla high school has been refurbished and extended to cater for an enrolment of 900 pupils. A capital scheme is planned to increase the size of Regent House grammar school to cater for 1,470 pupils. Glastry high school has the capacity to cater for 697 pupils.

Lanark Way, Belfast

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has to provide a school at Lanark way, Belfast. [12893]

Mr. Worthington [holding answer 27 October 1997]: The need for a new replacement primary school for pupils in the St. Paul's parish of West Belfast has been under consideration for some time. A number of possible options for the location of the school are being examined. These include a site adjacent to Lanark way-Springfield road, Belfast. However, no decisions have been taken. The outcome will be informed by consultations with relevant interests and the conclusions of an economic appraisal to determine the most cost-effective method of meeting the educational needs of the pupils in the area.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has for development at Lanark way, Belfast. [12894]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 27 October 1997]: The Department of the Environment (Northern Ireland) recently agreed the sale of three sites at Lanark way for commercial/industrial use. The Department plans in the near future to place on the open market a further area of 1.6 hectares for development purposes.

Central Services Agency

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which directorates have achieved benchmarking in the Central Services Agency. [12890]

Mr. Worthington: The information requested is as follows:

Regional Supplies

Medical and Ophthalmic Directorate

Finance and Administration Directorate

Human Resources Directorate

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many staff, broken down by their perceived religion, were employed in the Central Services Agency, Adelaide street, Belfast, in each of the last two years. [12888]

Mr. Worthington [holding answer 27 October 1997]: Based on the agency's fair employment monitoring returns for 1995 and 1996, the information is as follows:

	1995	1996
Male Protestant	102	88
Male Roman Catholic	83	72
Male not known	11	7
Female Protestant	183	167
Female Roman Catholic	147	141
Female not known	10	7

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many directors there are in the Central Services Agency, Adelaide street; and what is their perceived religion. [12891]

Mr. Worthington [holding answer 27 October 1997]: Of the agency's eight directors, four are perceived Protestant, three are perceived Roman Catholic and for the eighth the information is not known—the person is on secondment from the Department of Health and Social Services.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the schools sending pupils for work experience to the Central Services Agency, Adelaide street, Belfast. [12889]

Mr. Worthington [holding answer 27 October 1997]: The information is as follows:

St. Genevieve's comprehensive school

St. Louise's comprehensive school

Belfast institute of further and higher education

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many senior officers in the Central Services Agency are perceived to be Protestant though claim to be non-Christian. [12892]

Mr. Worthington [holding answer 27 October 1997]: The agency does not know how many senior offices are perceived to be Protestant though claim to be non-Christian—this information is not collated.

Grammar Schools, Belfast

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many primary school pupils transferred to Belfast grammar schools in 1997 from the Bangor and Ards area. [12752]

Mr. Worthington [holding answer 27 October 1997]: One hundred and eighty children transferred from primary schools in the North Down and Ards borough council areas to grammar schools in Belfast this year.

Prison Service

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to chapter 8 of the Prison Service annual report, what were the actual reductions in the cost of running the service in 1995–96. [12966]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 27 October 1997]: In 1995–96 there was a reduction in the total cost of the Northern Ireland Prison Service of £700,000 over the previous year. The equivalent figure for 1996–97 was £100,000 higher.

The reduction referred to in chapter 8 of the annual report for 1996–97 was primarily due to a recategorisation of part of the expenditure within the total cost, as well as a smaller sum reflecting lower staff-related costs consequent on the closure of Belfast prison.

Decommissioning Commission

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what public funding has been provided for the arms commission established in Northern Ireland; what are the salaries of those appointed to the commission; and what is the current annual budget for the arms commission. [12785]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 27 October 1997]: No annual budget has yet been determined for the independent international commission on decommissioning which was established on 24 September. However, in the UK capital and running costs, including salaries, are estimated to be some £1,200,000 until the end of May 1998. Most of the running costs will be shared equally with the Government of the Republic of Ireland who have provided the commission with an office in Dublin.

Training and Employment Agency

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many of the students selected for the Training and Employment Agency sponsored programme in the United States of America are from Northern Ireland, broken down by religious denomination. [12771]

Mr. Worthington: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Ian Walters. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Ian Walters to Mr. John D. Taylor, dated 22 October 1997:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me, as Chief Executive of the Training & Employment Agency (T&EA), to reply to your question about the number of students from Northern Ireland, by religious denomination, who are on T&EA sponsored programmes in the United States of America (USA).

The T&EA operates 4 USA programmes through its Business Support Division and 1 through its Training Division. The breakdown of these programmes, which are aimed at enhancing the skills and competences of young people, is as follows:

	Number
Business support division programmes
Catholics	80
Protestants	51
Not stated	20
Total	151
Training division programmes
Catholics	10
Protestants	14
Total	24

I hope you find this information helpful.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Trees

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the impact of non-indigenous trees on native species forming climax woodland; and what account of detrimental impact on native species is taken when considering tree preservation orders. [12496]

Angela Eagle: The Department has not commissioned any research directly, but the impact of non-native species on semi-natural vegetation is an active area of research by universities and others, including the statutory conservation agencies. Examples include work recently commissioned by English Nature on the recovery of ground flora of ancient broadleaved woodland following conifer removal, and work at the Oxford Forestry Institute on the interaction of sycamore and ash.

Tree preservation orders are made by local planning authorities to protect selected trees and woodlands in the interests of amenity. In deciding whether or not to make orders in respect of non-native trees, authorities are not required to consider the likely impact on native species.

Director of Transport Security Report

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he has published the 1996–97 annual report of the Director of Transport Security. [13298]

Mr. Prescott: Copies are available in the House Libraries.

Sustainable Development Unit

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has, on what time scale, to set up a sustainable development unit within his Department. [12710]

Angela Eagle: The Government's sustainable development unit was set up on 7 July 1997 in the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions. It reports to the Deputy Prime Minister and has a Government-wide remit to promote sustainable development.

Its main tasks in the new parliamentary Session are to lead a review of the UK sustainable development strategy, with extensive public consultation, and to take forward the "greening Government" initiative in conjunction with a strengthened system of Green Ministers.

Additional information on Greening Government and Green Ministers can be found in the reply by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment to my hon. Friend the Member for Worsley (Mr. Lewis) on 31 July 1997, Official Report, column 542.

Water and Sewerage

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the real level of average household bills for water and sewerage in Great Britain as a whole and for each region of Great Britain in each year since 1978. [12831]

Angela Eagle: No figures are available for the average unmeasured household bill for water and sewerage in Great Britain as a whole. No fully valid comparison is possible between water services bills in England and Wales and in Scotland, where the administrative and funding arrangements for water services have been and are quite different.

I am advised by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland that in Scotland the real levels of average water and sewerage charges for the years 1989–90 to 1996–97 are as given in the following list. Information is not yet available for the current year, or for the period prior to 1989–90.

Scotland: real levels of average water and sewerage charges to households (at 1997–98 prices)

1989–90: £90.21
1990–91: £89.68
1991–92: £100.40
1992–93: £106.14
1993–94: £106.21
1994–95: £109.57
1995–96: £112.91
1996–97: £120.75

In England and Wales the real levels of average unmeasured household water and sewerage charges for the years 1978–79 to 1997–98 are as given in the following table.

England and Wales: real levels of average unmeasured water and sewerage charges to households (at 1997–98 prices)

1. The table shows the average household bills, for those charged on an unmeasured basis only, of customers of the water and sewerage companies in England and Wales, and, before privatisation, of customers of the regional water authorities.

2. Charges before and after privatisation in 1989 are not strictly comparable. In particular regional water authorities charged for some services that were not transferred to the privatised water companies.

European Union

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list his Department's priorities for the United Kingdom presidency of the European Union. [12970]

Angela Eagle: The forthcoming presidency of the European Union will provide an excellent opportunity for the UK to lead discussions on a wide range of important environmental and transport issues. Discussion of the many possibilities are currently taking place and I will write to my hon. Friend when final decisions on the departmental priorities have been decided.

Railway Lines (Children)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps have been taken to ensure the continuation of the scheme operated by the British Railways Board for train drivers to visit schools to alert children to the dangers of trespassing on railway lines. [12884]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 15 July 1997, Official Report, column 131.

British Railways Board

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the value of the land owned by the British Railways Board. [12886]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The book value of the freehold properties held by the board at mid-October was £125 million.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what is the current acreage of land owned by the British Railways Board; [12885]

(2) how much of its land the British Railways Board disposed of in each of the last three years by (a) acreage and (b) value. [12887]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave on 15 July 1997, Official Report, columns 130-31.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what reviews his Department has undertaken of the transportation of radioactive waste by land, sea and air for reprocessing purposes to Sellafield. [12951]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The safety regulations for the transport of radioactive material, including radioactive waste, are reviewed nationally and internationally on an ongoing basis to ensure that the good safety record of this transport is maintained.

The then Advisory Committee on the Safe Transport of Radioactive Materials—ACTRAM—carried out an independent study of the safety of transport of low level waste, published in 1988 as "The Transport of Low Level Radioactive Waste in the UK, ISBN 0 11 752087", a copy of which is held in the Library.

In addition, the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee—RWMAC—has published a report, "The Import and Export of Radioactive Waste, ISBN 1 85112 0467 (September 1997)", a copy of which is in the Library. RWMAC recommends that special tests be applied to each application for the import or export of radioactive waste, to ensure it accords with Government policy.

The Department also commissions periodic studies of the radiological impact of the transport of radioactive material on a modal basis. The latest studies carried out by the National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB) on the Department's behalf are: "Radiological Impact of the Normal Transport of Radioactive Materials by Sea", by R. Gelder, NRPB Memorandum NRPB-M749 (December 1996); "Radiation Exposure from the Normal Transport of Radioactive Materials within the UK 1991 Review", by R. Gelder, NRPB Report NRPB-R255, ISBN 0 85951 351 3 (May 1992); and "Radiological Impact of the Normal Transport of Radioactive Materials by Air", by R. Gelder, NRPB Memorandum NRPB-M219 (March 1990).

Train Operating Companies

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the applications by some train operating companies to extend the duration of their franchise agreements. [12874]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My right hon. Friend has recently received such an application from Great North Eastern Railway Limited. Applications will be considered on their merits. However, there would need to be very convincing arguments of public interest and value for money to justify renegotiation of contracts which were freely entered into following a competitive process.

New Local Authorities

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate his Department has made of the additional annual revenue costs or savings achieved by new local authorities created since 1994 relative to the revenue costs of their predecessor authorities in their last year of operation. [12940]

Mr. Raynsford: The Department has made no estimates of this nature.

Radioactive Materials

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his Department's policy towards the proposed shipment of radioactive materials from Australia to Dounreay. [12952]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Department will ensure that any such shipments of irradiated nuclear fuel for reprocessing comply with the appropriate national and international safety regulations, current at the time of shipment, to ensure control of the hazards to persons, property and the environment. In keeping with Government policy, the contract to reprocess this fuel, if signed, will contain a clause to ensure the return of the separated wastes to Australia.

West Coast Main Line

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what arrangements he has made for the Exchequer to share in revenue generated by the Railtrack/Virgin scheme for the modernisation of the west coast main line railway. [12877]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The franchise agreement with Virgin Trains requires Virgin to introduce significantly accelerated and enhanced services following the upgrade of the west coast main line. The franchise was let through the competitive tender process and the winning bid from Virgin commits them to turn a subsidy of £76.8 million in 1997–98 to a premium payment of £220.3 million in 2011–12. There are no arrangements for the Exchequer to share in revenues.

M25

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the Highways Agency will place in the Library the names and addresses of the 4,000 people who objected to the M25 widening scheme between junctions 12 and 15 in the official consultation period that ended in July 1996. [12876]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 27 October 1997]: In accordance with registration under the Data Protection Act 1984, the names of the objectors were published with the decision letter issued on 18 March 1997, a copy of which was deposited in the Library. To place their addresses in the Library would contravene the provisions of the Act.

Motorway Drivers (Tests)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to ensure all newly qualified drivers pass a specific motorway test before being allowed to undertake unsupervised motorway driving; and if he will make a statement. [12899]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 27 October 1997]: My noble Friend the Minister for Roads announced on 15 October that the Government would be setting new road safety targets for the year 2010. Targets will be set within an outline strategy for achieving them. The questions of new drivers and motorway training will be considered in setting that strategy.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what have been the transitional costs of transferring services from preceding authorities to successor authorities in respect of each local authority reorganisation, including fire service reorganisation, in England in (a) 1995, (b) 1996 and (c) 1997; and what are the estimated transitional costs for each such reorganisation in 1998. [12939]

Mr. Raynsford: Resources in the form of supplementary credit approvals are made available to reorganising authorities under the local government reorganisation costs scheme. The supplementary credit approvals issued to each authority under the schemes for 1994–95, 1995–96, 1996–97 and the maximum amounts issued under the 1997–98 scheme are set out in the table. Figures for 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98 include supplementary credit approvals issued by the Home Office to combined fire authorities.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Road Scheme Tenders

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what has been the overall cost of compensation for abortive tenders as a result of the Government's announcements of deferrals under the accelerated consideration of major road schemes announced in July. [12263]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Relevant claims for compensation will be considered on their merits. Once agreement has been reached on any sums payable in compensation these will be made public.

West Coast Main Line

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for what reasons an advance warning note on the engineering work conducted on the west coast main line on the weekend of 18 to 19 October was not issued by Virgin Trains or Railtrack. [12878]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This is an operational matter for Railtrack and Virgin Trains.

Weald and Downland Roads Project

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Enviornment, Transport and the Regions what criteria will apply to the Weald and Downland design, build, finance and operate project under the general roads review; what is the timing of the roads review; and what is the earliest date by which tenders for the project could be revitalised. [12781]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Following the announcement in July of the decisions made under the accelerated review, the Weald and Downland design, build, finance and operate project is no longer being taken forward as a single project. The individual schemes which were included in the project are being considered as part of the main Roads Review and will be assessed along with all other schemes against the five criteria of accessibility, safety, economy, the enviornment and integration. We hope to announce the results of the review next year. Any revitalisation of tenders for the project would be dependent on the results of the Roads Review.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what compensation has been paid to companies involved with the Downland design, build, finance and operate scheme for the cancellation of the project. [12782]

Ms Glenda Jackson: No compensation has been paid. Relevant claims for compensation will be considered on their merits.

Environmental Health Regulations

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will require local authorities issuing enforcement notices to (a) hotels and (b) other establishments in respect of environmental health regulations to register such findings in the public register; and if he will make a statement. [12807]

Angela Eagle: The Environment and Safety Information Act 1988 requires all authorities, including local authorities, responsible for the issue of enforcement notices under the Fire Precautions Act 1971, the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974, the Safety of Sports Grounds Act 1975 and the Food and Environmental Protection Act 1985 to place details of the substance of such notices on a public register if the notices have public safety or environmental implications. This requirement applies to all types of premises. Each responsible authority maintains its own registers, which may be inspected free of charge.

Humber Bridge

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he intends to introduce legislation to obtain powers to suspend or write off part of the Humber bridge debt. [12854]

Ms Glenda Jackson: In the new year I hope to lay before Parliament, with the approval of HM Treasury, an Order under the Humber Bridge (Debts) Act 1996. This will provide that the Humber Bridge Board will not have to meet a proportion of its current debt or, on the residual debt, a proportion of the interest that would otherwise be due. Officials of my Department are currently considering options and financial projections with officers of the Board.

Sonus Studies

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what were the results of the Sonus studies. [12857]

Angela Eagle: The Sonus research programme is leading to a better understanding of the flux of nutrients, particularly nitrogen, from the land, though estuaries, to the sea, especially in relation to the nitrification/denitrification processes in estuaries. The main work in the Southampton Water/Solent region indicates that algal blooms of phytoplankton occur only when tidal energy is below a certain level and light levels are sufficiently high. We hope to extend this work to allow data from the whole of 1997 to be incorporated. A final report will be produced at the end of the contract.

Montserrat

Mr. John Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps his Department is proposing to ensure that adequate housing is available for evacuees from Montserrat. [13848]

Ms Armstrong: Local authorities need to be able to respond as flexibly as possible to the needs of Montserratians arriving here under the Government's Montserrat assisted passage scheme, which provides for voluntary evacuation.

We recognise that authorities will incur additional costs when making accommodation available to people who would not normally have applied to them for housing. Montserrat is a British Dependent Territory and the evacuees have lost their homes. We must do our best to ensure that evacuees coming here under the MAP Scheme are given as smooth a reception as possible, although it may not always be possible to accommodate them in the area they would prefer.

We are proposing to offer a special grant to encourage authorities to make vacant property more quickly available to house evacuees who have come to this country under the MAP Scheme and who have nowhere to stay. This should help settle evacuees throughout the country under arrangements set up by the Home Office. Evacuees with a Montserratian passport are already broadly eligible for the same welfare benefits, state education, healthcare and access to social housing as UK nationals.

The special grant would be provided under the Local Government Finance Act 1988, and we intend to submit a report for the House's approval early next year. The Department has written today to Chief Executives and Chief Housing Officers of English local housing authorities, setting out details of the scheme and arrangements for making claims. Copies of the letter have been placed in the Library. Subject to approval of the House, £1,500 will be made available for each unit of accommodation provided for qualifying households placed with local authorities by the Home Office between 27 August 1997 and 31 January 1998. The grant scheme has been drawn up after consultation with the Local Government Association.

Grant will be offered on a similar basis by the Housing Corporation to registered social landlords who independently offer to provide accommodation for evacuees under the Home Office's arrangements.

National Forest

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will report on the National Forest Company's progress in creating the national forest in the east midlands. [13849]

Angela Eagle: Copies of the National Forest Company's annual report and accounts for 1996–97 are to be placed in the House Libraries.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Trainees

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what his definition is of a trainee. [13043]

Dr. Howells: A trainee, as defined by the Oxford English Dictionary and myself, is a person undergoing training.

Social Affairs Council

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the EU Social Affairs Council on 7 October. [13738]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Minister of State at the Department of Trade and Industry and I represented the UK at the Social Affairs Council on 7 October.

A structured dialogue with Social Affairs and Employment Ministers from the applicant states in central and eastern Europe discussed the accession strategy in relation to health and safety for workers, equal opportunities for men and women, and social dialogue.

The presidency gave further details about the preparatory work for the Extraordinary European Council on Employment (taking place in Luxembourg on 20–21 November), and announced that there would be a supplementary meeting of the Social Affairs Council on 6 November to contribute to preparations.

Informal political agreement was reached on the proposed amendment to the regulation establishing the European Training Foundation. The amendment will extend the foundation's remit to provide vocational education and training assistance to the MEDA partnership countries and territories, and will introduce procedural changes to increase the foundation's efficient management.

Political agreement was reached on the proposal for a recommendation to introduce a Community model parking badge for people with disabilities, which will be recognised across member states.

There was continuing discussion of the proposals for a European company statute, following the report of the Davignon group.

The Council noted the work programme of the Employment and Labour Market Committee.

The Commission gave two presentations: first, on the draft directive to give effect to the social partners' framework agreement on ensuring that part-time workers should be treated no less favourably than full-time workers, and secondly on a White Paper on the sectors excluded from the working time directive—transport, sea fishing, offshore sectors, and doctors in training.

The presidency withdrew from the agenda an item on the programme for research, analysis and co-operation in employment.

Early Retirement

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list for each month from September 1996 to September 1997 the number of teachers, other than those in further or higher education or independent schools, who retired under the age of 60 years. [13048]

Mr. Byers: The number of retirements aged under 60 from the maintained schools sector in England and Wales between September 1996 and September 1997 are given in the following table:

Month[1]	Number of retirements[2, 3]
September 1996	7,880
October 1996	340
November 1996	420
December 1996	220
January 1997	1,800
February 1997	260
March 1997	2,460
April 1997	2,560
May 1997	590
June 1997	390
July 1997	270
August 1997	1,070
September 1997	8,920

[1] Represents the month in which benefits first become payable.

[2] Provisional. The figures for August and September 1997 are particularly likely to increase because of late notifications.

[3] Figures rounded to nearest 10.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Goods and Services (Payments)

Mr. Todd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list each of the functions relating to payment for goods or services supplied for which his Department is responsible, indicating the management systems purchased, all subcontractors involved in the work, co-operative arrangements with other Departments; and the costs of the systems and processes the last year for which figures are available. [12567]

Mr. Morley: MAFF has developed procurement procedures based upon guidance issued by the Central Unit on Purchasing in HM Treasury. These procedures are designed to ensure probity and fairness in all procurement decisions and provide the necessary checks and authorisations in accordance with Government Accounting and separate the functions of verification and authorisation from the process of payment.

MAFF has implemented a fully integrated computerised accounting system (RAMIS—Resource Accounting and Management Information System) running on proprietary software and hardware. Implementation of the system has been supported fully by the primary software and hardware suppliers supplemented with specialised external service providers as necessary. These have been provided for under contract. Generally the Ministry does not use subcontractors for payment work; the exception is the use of managing agents to pay small contractors for minor building maintenance work to ensure that they are paid quickly. Payments for goods and services are made using RAMIS either by bank transfer (CHAPS and BACS) or as system-generated payable orders. Significant work has been undertaken by Ministry staff to ensure that the system has been developed to meet initial and changing requirements.

As part of a suite of functions within RAMIS the Accounts Payable application is one element of a much wider financial management system and specific capital and development costs are therefore not readily available. However, information collected from within the management system suggests that the administrative costs of making payments via the system (for Headquarters Groups) is approximately £4 per payment based upon inner London staff costs.

MAFF is an active member of the Oracle Applications User Group in which other Government Departments may be involved.

Fur Farming

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what proposals he has made for improvement in fur farming husbandry to the Council of Europe; and what recommendations he has made relating to an increase in the present minimum cage dimensions; [12769]

(2) if, in the current discussions at the Council of Europe on fur farming, he will ensure that only housing systems which meet the biological needs of mink, pine martens and arctic foxes, with particular reference to the provision of (a) a stimulating environment, (b) social contact and (c) swimming water, will meet the statutory minimum standards; and if he will ensure that a timetable will be laid down for the phasing out of all housing for these animals which does not meet such standards. [12770]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 27 October 1997]: The Standing Committee of the European Convention on the Protection of Animals Kept for Farming Purposes is reviewing its 1991 recommendation on the welfare of animals farmed for fur. The text currently under discussion proposes detailed requirements for the welfare of mink, polecat, silver and Arctic fox, coypu and chinchilla. We shall be working to ensure that the outcome of this exercise is the adoption of the highest possible standards consistent with the scientific evidence and expert opinion.

We would support a timetable for the phasing out of all housing for these animals that does not meet the standards adopted by the Council of Europe.

River Medway

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what reports he has received from the Environment Agency, and on what dates, concerning the potential flood dangers in areas abutting the River Medway consequent on increasing sea levels and surge tides; and if he will make a statement. [12969]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 27 October 1997]: The Department has not received any specific reports from the Environment Agency on this subject.

TREASURY

Goods and Services (Payments)

Mr. Todd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list each of the functions relating to payment for goods or services supplied for which his Department is responsible indicating the management systems purchased, all subcontractors involved in the work, co-operative arrangements with other Departments; and the costs of the systems and processes in the last year for which figures are available. [12557]

Mrs. Liddell: The table lists the Treasury functions and management systems and their costs during 1996–97 that relate to the payment for goods and services in the Treasury:

£000

	Capital cost	Running cost
Functions
Goods receipt	—	17
Invoice registration	—	101
Budget holder confirmation	—	7
Payment of invoice	—	204
Management system
Financial and Management Information Systems (FAMIS)—Estimated cost of invoice processing elements	20	11
Totals	20	340

The FAMIS accounting system purchased runs the cfacs software from Cedardata plc. Their sub-contractors were The Oracle Corporation UK Ltd. and Waverley.

During the procurement process several Departments, including the Ministry of Defence and the Scottish Office, were approached for information on Cedardata and the cfacs product. Departments including the Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food and other organisations were consulted regarding the competing products.

Asbestos-related Diseases

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the figures for deaths through asbestos-related diseases in Norfolk over the last five years. [12954]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 27 October 1997]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Dr. Ian Gibson, dated 29 October 1997:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply, as Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), to your recent Parliamentary question asking for the figures for deaths through asbestos-related diseases in Norfolk over the last five years.

The latest data available are given in the following table:

Deaths from asbestos-related diseases in Norfolk 1993–1996

	Number
1993	12
1994	18
1995	24
1996	21

Note:

Since 1993, the ONS has coded all diseases, injuries, drugs, operations and external causes mentioned on death certificates. This information is held electronically and the ONS was able to extract data for 1993–1996. It is not possible to produce comparable figure for years prior to 1993, and any figures that could be produced would be in excess of the advisory limit for answering Parliamentary Questions.

Deaths from asbestos-related diseases were identified as those deaths certified with:

1. An underlying cause of asbestosis (International Classification of Diseases Ninth Revision [ICD9]501), or

2. An underlying cause of lung cancer (ICD9 162) with secondary cause accidental poisoning–other metals (ICD9 E866.4); or

3. Any other case where mesothelioma was mentioned on the death certificate.

CABINET OFFICE

Millennium Experience

Mr. Austin: To ask the Minister without Portfolio in respect of the millennium experience (1) what plans he has to ensure that the millennium experience is fully accessible to disabled people; and if he will make a statement; [12851]

(2) what consultations he has had with disabled people regarding accessibility to the millennium experience by disabled people; [12852]

(3) what plans he has to ensure that the millennium experience is available to people with a sensory impairment. [12853]

Mr. Mandelson: The Government and the New Millennium Experience Company aim to ensure that all who wish to visit the Millennium Experience can do so, regardless of any disability an individual may have. An Advisory Group has been established by the NMEC to consider accessibility and special needs issues, reflecting the NMEC's concern to meet all relevant statutory requirements and to apply, wherever possible, voluntary codes, guidance and specifications.

The Advisory Group held its first meeting on 24 June. It is chaired by David Phillips, Chief Executive of Holiday Care Service, and its members are drawn from a range of voluntary sector organisations covering physical, sensory and learning disabilities, mental health issues, and the needs of older people. The group will provide best practice guidance to the NMEC on a wide range of accessibility issues including transportation, parking, the natural and the built environment, displays and facilities, on-site information and promotional materials, ticketing arrangements, and disability awareness training.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Border Controls

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in respect of the opt-out from the general application of the treaties of the European Community and Union concerning control by (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the Republic of Ireland of their national borders, what rights will arise for (a) and (b), to (i) examine official identity documents carried by an entrant, (ii) search their person, (iii) examine their belongings, (iv) detain them temporarily for further inquiries and (v) detain them in custody; and if he will state for each of (i) to (v) the originating and authoritative national or Community-Union legislation providing such powers, and their manner of execution, in respect of (1) citizens of the European Union and (2) citizens of third nations. [12808]

Ms Quin: The Treaty of Amsterdam contains a Protocol which recognises the right of the United Kingdom to exercise, at its frontiers with other member states, such controls on persons seeking to enter the United Kingdom as it may consider necessary for the purpose of:

> verifying the right to enter the United Kingdom of European Union and other nationals of the European Economic Area and their dependants; and > determining whether or not to grant other persons permission to enter the United Kingdom.

The Protocol states that nothing in the Treaties, or in any measures deriving from the Treaties, prejudices the United Kingdom's right to exercise such controls.

No powers will arise as a direct result of the Protocol. The United Kingdom will, however, continue to maintain the controls provided for under the Immigration (European Economic Area) Order 1994 and the Immigration Act 1971. Schedule 2 to the Immigration Act 1971 provides powers for immigration officers to examine and identify documents of passengers arriving in the United Kingdom, to search their person and belongings and to detain them pending a decision to give or to refuse leave to enter.

The operation of immigration controls in the Republic of Ireland is a mater for the Irish authorities.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

British Aerospace Employees

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will name the British Aerospace employees who have been loaned to his Department to work on commercial projects setting out the embassies to which they are attached; whether they will work on (a) civil or (b) military projects; and if their function will be (i) executive or (ii) advisory. [12541]

Mr. Fatchett: The Chairman of British Aerospace has given support to our programme of business attachments to overseas posts by committing his company to providing a member of staff for secondment. BAe is still in the process of identifying suitable candidates to put forward for the scheme. No specific Posts or projects have been identified at this stage.

European Commission Committees

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many committees are appointed to assist the European Commission in implementing Community legislation; how often they meet; what is the nature of their (a) ministerial and (b) parliamentary supervision; and if he will make a statement. [12745]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Council comitology decision of 13 July 1987 provides for certain types of committee to assist the Commission in the implementation of Council legislation. The European Community budget for 1997 provides for 374 such committees. They meet as and when their opinion is required for the implementation of Council legislation. The majority of these committees are made up of officials who represent the Member States. UK officials are under the supervision of Government Ministers, who in turn are answerable to Parliament.

Kenya

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to meet representatives of the Kenyan Government to discuss human rights issues. [12549]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary raised human rights issues with the Kenyan Foreign Minister during the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting in Edinburgh. We shall follow this up vigorously in the run-up to the forthcoming Kenyan elections.

Kyoto Climate Change Conference

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the agenda for the Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting will include discussion relating to the Kyoto climate change conference. [12711]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the statement that my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister made to the House yesterday, Official Report, columns 707–19.

Electro-shock Weapons

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Portsmouth, North (Mr. Rapson), of 28 July, Official Report, columns 65–66, on the export of certain types of equipment, what is the evidence that equipment designed primarily for torture, sold abroad by Britain, has in the past been used for torture; and if he will place a copy of the evidence in the Library. [12592]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have received many reports of equipment being used overseas for torture from, for example, UN Rapporteurs, NGOs, the media and our Diplomatic Posts. Most of this information is publicly available.

We have decided on measures to prevent the export or transhipment from the UK of particular items of equipment where such reporting provides a clear pattern of abuse. These measures, announced on 28 July, Official Report, columns 65–66, are based on such reports of the use of similar equipment of any origin, not specifically the use of British equipment.

Dependent Territories

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a copy of the terms of reference of the review of the status of dependent territories. [12962]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 27 October 1997]: There are no formal terms of reference. However, a memorandum about the review has been submitted to the Foreign Affairs Committee.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Engineering Industry

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what support the Engineering Council received from her Department in developing its regulatory document, "Standards and Routes to Registration"; what is her Department's policy towards the document in respect of its application to the engineering profession and the engineering industry in the United Kingdom; and if she will make a statement. [12799]

Mr. Battle: The Department of Trade and Industry has provided strategic advice to the Engineering Council during the drafting of the revised edition of Standards and Routes to Registration (SARTOR)—especially concerning the needs of industry. I support the requirements set out in the revised SARTOR in so far as they aim to raise standards within engineering to improve the UK's competitiveness.

Torture Equipment

Ann Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will estimate the monetary value of torture equipment, as defined under the Government's new arms export criteria, exported overseas, in each of the last five years. [12340]

Mrs. Roche: The criteria that were announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on 28 July, Official Report, columns 26–29, do not include any definition of "torture equipment".

In a separate announcement on 28 July, Official Report, columns 65–66, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs identified certain equipment for which there is evidence of its use for torture or other abuses, and whose export the Government were banning. As my right hon. Friend made clear, some of this equipment is not at present controlled and the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994 will be amended to bring them under control; this will be done soon. As companies are generally not required to report exports to my Department, we do not know the extent or value of any exports from the UK of equipment covered by the ban.

Biotechnology

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to the Minister of State's letter of 23 August to the Member for Linlithgow, what assessments she has made of proposals she has received from (a) the Gaia Foundation and (b) other organisations concerning the European Commission's proposed directive on the Legal Protection of Biotechnological Inventions; and what reply her Department has sent. [12860]

Mr. Battle: Consultation on the proposed directive has so far involved written representations from well over 100 interest groups, including those concerned with health care, the environment, animal welfare and the Church. There has also been a special meeting of the Standing Advisory Committee on Industrial Property which advises the Government on matters relating to patents, at which the Gaia Foundation and others gave their views on the proposed Directive. Following this meeting, the Gaia Foundation, the Women's Environmental Network and others met my officials at the Patent Office to discuss the directive. During this consultation, there has been ongoing discussions with all other Government Departments having an interest in the directive.

Coal Industry Social Welfare Organisation

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are her plans for the future of the Coal Industry Social Welfare Organisation; and if she will make a statement. [12480]

Mr. Battle: The Charity Commission is currently reviewing the role of the Coal Industry Social Welfare Organisation and the associated mining charities and are due to report soon. I wish to await the outcome of the review and assess its implications before taking a view on the way forward.

Ministerial Working Arrangements

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many days she spent in the office between 1 August and 5 October inclusive, counting a working day as eight hours of meetings or working on papers in the office. [13046]

Mrs. Beckett: I have not worked it out and have no intention of spending the time required to do so.

Ministers' Shareholdings

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list all the shareholdings of Ministers in her Department and their wives or husbands, whether now held in a blind trust or not, including where they have been transferred, and the shares held at the point of transfer. [13045]

Mrs. Beckett: No. The Government have published the requirements on Ministers in the ministerial code; DTI Ministers are acting in accordance with these requirements. It has never been the practice of previous Ministers, including DTI Ministers, to publish details of their shareholdings, except insofar as this is required by the Register of Members' Interests; they have from time to time made public statements about their decision to stand aside from particular issues where that has been thought desirable in particular circumstances. This approach, reflecting that of previous Administrations to this issue, seems to the Government to satisfy the public interest.

HEALTH

Hepatitis C

Miss Melanie Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's policy in respect of screening for, and treatment of, hepatitis C. [12300]

Ms Jowell: Blood donations have been screened for antibodies to hepatitis C virus since September 1991 when reliable tests first became available. Recipients of blood or blood components donated before that date from donors since found to be carriers of hepatitis C virus are being traced in order to provide counselling, testing and specialist referral as appropriate. Organs and tissue, resulting from either live or cadaveric donations, are also screened for hepatitis C.

Injecting drug misusers who share contaminated equipment are at increased risk of acquiring hepatitis C infection. The guidance to purchasers of drug treatment and care services, which the Department issued in March 1997, included advice for purchasers on dealing with those who seek testing for hepatitis C. The "Guidelines for Doctors on the Clinical Management of Drug Misusers" last issued in 1991 are currently being revised and will be published next year. They will include updated advice on the management of hepatitis C in drug misusers.

There is a need to increase knowledge about the natural history, prevalence, transmission and treatment of hepatitis C so that the National Health Service is equipped to deliver services based on the best scientific advice available about the disease. In 1996, the Department made £1 million available for research in these areas. The results of the research commissioned so far will become available over the next three years. A further £500,000 will be allocated this year to expand the research programme.

In addition, the NHS Health Technology Assessment is considering research proposals to establish the effectiveness of the early treatment of chronic hepatitis C with alpha interferon. The NHS Executive is funding the Royal College of Physicians to facilitate the development of clinical guidelines on the appropriate use of alpha interferon in patients with hepatitis C.

Miss Melanie Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment his Department has made as to the economic and social consequences to individuals and to the Exchequer of not treating hepatitis C. [12301]

Ms Jowell: Attempts to estimate the long term consequences of hepatitis C to the individual and the Exchequer are confounded by the unpredictability of the progression of the disease. Some individuals will clear the virus naturally, developing no long term symptoms, and others will go on to develop liver disease but often not for 20 to 30 years after initial infection with the virus. A proportion of those with liver disease will go on to develop liver failure or liver cancer.

Current knowledge about the natural history is insufficient to make firm estimates of the type requested. There is a comprehensive programme of research in place examining the natural history, transmission and prevalence of hepatitis C. Consideration is also being given through the Health Technology Assessment Programme to funding a clinical trail to examine the clinical and the cost effectiveness of treating hepatitis C with drug therapy at an earlier stage than is current clinical practice. These studies should enable some comparison to be made about the relative clinical effectiveness of treatment at different stages of the disease and will facilitate the evaluation of the economic and social costs of hepatitis C.

Drinking Water (Phosphates)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his Department's letter of 24 September (POH/3/5437/14), if he has taken steeps to ascertain the background and results of Finnish research on phosphates in drinking water. [12858]

Ms Jowell: The background and results of the Finnish research have been considered. We do not believe that they have any implications for the levels of phosphorus present in United Kingdom drinking water supplies.

Hospital and Community Health Services

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will announce the 1998–99 hospital and community health services revenue allocations for health authorities. [13394]

Mr. Dobson: The 1998–99 hospital and community health services revenue allocations for weighted populations are given, by health authority, in the following table.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Economic Policies

7. Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the Government's economic policies for Northern Ireland. [12413]

Mr. Ingram: The main thrust of our economic policies is in line with that applying to the rest of the United Kingdom.

We will put in place measures to improve the skill base and to tackle the deep-rooted problem of unemployment among young people and the long-term unemployed.

We will also implement programmes to encourage investment to achieve economic growth and improvement of the international competitiveness of Northern Ireland business and industry.

Comprehensive Spending Review

10. Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the impact on Northern Ireland of the Government's spending review. [12416]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Northern Ireland Ministers and their Departments are examining the inherited spending plans for Northern Ireland to ensure that they align with the Government's objectives and to see how better use can be made of resources. I expect that the outcome of this review will have a positive impact on Northern Ireland.

Peace Process

11. Mr. White: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in the multi-party talks on the future of Northern Ireland. [12417]

12. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement about developments in the peace process. [12418]

15. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on progress in the peace process and the decommissioning of weapons. [12421]

18. Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in multi-party talks on the future of Northern Ireland. [12424]

19. Mr. Pound: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the peace process in Northern Ireland. [12425]

Marjorie Mowlam: I refer hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier to my hon. Friends the Members for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn), for Glasgow, Maryhill (Mrs. Fyfe), for Northampton, South (Mr. Clarke) and for Ealing, Acton and Shepherds Bush (Mr. Soley).

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the Government's plans for the next steps in all-party talks in Northern Ireland. [12422]

Marjorie Mowlam: The multi-party talks are now addressing issues of substance. The Governments will make every effort to facilitate the process of reaching a settlement which would be acceptable on both sides of the community in Northern Ireland, and more widely.

Anglo-Irish Conference

13. Mr. Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, if she will make public the agendas, deliberations and decisions of the meetings of the Anglo-Irish conference and the activities of the Maryfield secretariat. [12419]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Government are committed to greater openness and transparency in the workings of the Anglo-Irish agreement and this issue will be discussed at the next meeting of the conference. Statements are already issued by the two Governments recording the agendas, deliberations and decisions reached at meetings of the conference and a list [illegible] the subjects on which briefings take place in the Secretariat involving officials is published quarterly.

Terrorist Arms and Explosives

14. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment her Department has made of the amount of arms and explosives which terrorist organisations currently hold; and if she will make a statement. [12420]

Mr. Ingram: The security forces maintain information about terrorist weaponry but it would not be appropriate for me to make this public. Terrorists retain sufficient arms and explosives to mount a sustained campaign of violence and bombing. There is no justification for this. The Government, together with the Government of the Republic of Ireland, have put in place the mechanisms for decommissioning and, though it is necessarily a voluntary process, those in possession of paramilitary weapons need to avail themselves of this unique opportunity to build confidence and contribute to lasting peace.

Decommissioning

17. Siobhain McDonagh: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress is being made on the decommissioning of illegal weapons in Northern Ireland. [12423]

Mr. Ingram: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for South Ribble (Mr. Borrow).

Northern Ireland Assembly

20. Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she last met the Taoiseach and Tanaiste to discuss matters relating to the creation of a Northern Ireland Assembly. [12426]

Marjorie Mowlam: I last met the Taoiseach on 1 July 1997 and the Tanaiste on 25 October 1997. At neither meeting did I discuss the creation of a Northern Ireland Assembly.

It will be for strand one of the multi-party talks, in which the Irish Government do not participate, to consider what political arrangements might be established for Northern Ireland.

Parades

21. Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps are being taken to reduce tensions over parades in Northern Ireland. [12427]

22. Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps are being taken to reduce tensions over parades in Northern Ireland. [12428]

24. Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps are being taken to reduce tensions over parades in Northern Ireland. [12430]

Marjorie Mowlam: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer I gave earlier to my hon. Friends the Members for Bristol, East (Ms Corston) and for Aberdeen, North (Mr. Savidge).

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in the implementation of the recommendations of the North report. [12432]

Marjorie Mowlam: As the hon. Member will know, the Public Processions etc. (Northern Ireland) Bill received its second reading in another place yesterday in line with the Government's commitment to the implementation of the North report's recommendations.

Unemployment

23. Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the trends are in long-term unemployment in Northern Ireland. [12429]

Mr. Ingram: The latest available information relates to September 1997 and at that time there were 29,509 claimant long-term unemployed in Northern Ireland. This represents a reduction of 15,821 compared with a year earlier and reflects a generally downward trend in claimant long-term unemployment since spring 1993.

Energy Market

25. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment she has made of the energy market in Northern Ireland. [12431]

Mr. Ingram: Northern Ireland's energy market is characterised by lack of competition, diseconomies of scale and isolation from other markets. Considerable progress is being made, within the region's energy strategy, to redress these problems.

Education

27. Mrs. McKenna: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on education in Northern Ireland. [12434]

Mr. Worthington: Education standards in Northern Ireland are generally good and are reflected in the level of participation in higher education, the standards achieved in GCE A level and GCSE and the levels achieved by 8,11 and 14-year-olds in the first year of statutory assessment in schools. These standards must, however, be improved if Northern Ireland is to compete successfully with the rest of Europe and plans are already being put in place to accelerate the rate of improvement. Particular priority will be given to measures to address underachievement which is a matter for concern in many schools.

Terrorism

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the number of (a) punishment beatings and (b) other terrorist activities since the first IRA ceasefire was declared. [12406]

Mr. Ingram: From 1 September 1994 to 12 October 1997, 685 paramilitary assaults have been recorded: 279 are attributed to loyalist groups and 406 to republican groups. In addition, there have been a further 100 punishment shooting attacks. A total of 331 shooting incidents, 231 bombings and 42 deaths have been recorded during the same period and have been attributed to the security situation.

The security forces will continue to seek ways to deter and detect such crimes while the political parties work towards achieving a lasting and peaceful settlement.

SCOTLAND

Learning Difficulties (Adults)

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy regarding future provision of residential care for adults with learning difficulties; and if he will make a statement. [12699]

Mr. Galbraith: The way in which people with learning difficulties are cared for, including where they live, is best determined by what best meets their needs. Local authorities, in consultation with their planning partners, will continue to have responsibility for ensuring that an appropriate range and volume of community care services are in place to respond to individuals' assessed needs and local circumstances. This includes residential accommodation for people with learning disabilities.

The Department of Health has commissioned research into the costs and outcomes of various types of residential accommodation for people with learning disabilities in England and Ireland. The research is expected to be completed around the end of 1998. We will give careful consideration to the findings.

Constables (Oath)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the oath taken by constables in Scotland and give the reasons why it differs from the oath taken in (a) England and Wales and (b) Northern Ireland. [12308]

Mr. McLeish: A person appointed to the office of constable of a police force in Scotland is required to make the following declaration, prescribed in regulation 10 of the Police (Scotland) Regulations 1976, before a sheriff or justice of the peace:

> "I hereby do solemnly and sincerely and truly declare and affirm that I will faithfully discharge the duties of the office of constable."

It differs from the oath in England and Wales, or the declaration in Northern Ireland, because ir derives from separate Scottish legislation. The declaration, largely in its current form, was first given statutory force by the Police (Scotland) Act 1857.

Ecstasy

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what follow-up action has been taken in respect of the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs report on Ecstasy misuse. [12855]

Mr. Galbraith: The results of this work were made known to Parliament on 28 February 1997 in a written answer to the hon. Member for Essex, North (Mr. Jenkin), Official Report, columns 442–43. The Government are using the Advisory Council's advice to inform work on future drug education strategies and campaigns and ensure that messages and advice for young people and parents about the risks associated with Ecstasy are as well informed and accurate as possible. The information was shared with the Health Education Board for Scotland, The Scottish Advisory Committee on Drug Misuse and the Scottish Against Drugs Campaign.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his Department's letter of 21 March, Ref. MMM 51837, what were the results of the research on the fingerprinting methods based on DNA technology in relation to E. coli. [12856]

Mr. Chisholm: Although the Department has not yet received final reports for these projects, interim results obtained from the two groups indicate that using a combination of different methods, both phenotypic and genotypic (DNA-based) isolates from three Scottish E.coli 0157 outbreaks—West Lothian, Central Scotland and Highland—although closely related were distinguishable from each other.

Kidney Services

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his letter of 19 August, when he expects to receive the result of the consideration by the sub-group on renal services in respect of (a) organ donation rates, (b) the quality of organs retrieved and (c) the effectiveness of the retrieval arrangements. [12859]

Mr. Galbraith: The Renal Disease Sub-Group is part of the Acute Services Review which is chaired by the Chief Medical Officer at The Scottish Office Department of Health. The Sub-Group's recommendations will be taken into account in the report which the Review is expected to present to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland in May 1998.

Written Answers to Questions

DEFENCE

Cyprus

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions during October (a) Greek and (b) Greek Cypriot military aircraft flew over United Kingdom sovereign base territory on the island of Cyprus; what representations were made; and if he will make a statement. [12872]

Dr. Reid: Two Hellenic Air Force F-16 fighter aircraft which were participating in a joint military exercise with the Republic of Cyprus overflew the Akrotiri sovereign base area at low altitude on Tuesday 14 October. The British high commission in Nicosia wrote to the Government of the Republic on 16 October reminding them of the existence of sovereign airspace over the SBAs and of the safety requirements.

Security Clearances

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will review the procedures whereby individuals with dual nationality, with security clearance to access MOD and NATO protectively marked material, are precluded from access to internal caveat information. [12800]

Mr. Spellar: The Ministry of Defence recently revised policy on access by dual nationals to national caveat information. Under the new policy there is no general ban on access by dual nationals to national caveat information. Decisions on access are made on a case-by-case basis. In the case of contractors' employees, the Department is required to seek the permission of the originator of the material before granting access.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Works of Art (Exports)

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when the 1996–97 annual report of the reviewing committee on the export of works of art will be published. [14159]

Mr. Chris Smith: The reviewing committee's annual report for 1996–97 has been published today and copies have been laid before Parliament.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Public Record Office

Mr. Baker: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what factors he takes into account when considering appeals against the non-release of documents from the Public Record Office. [13214]

Mr. Hoon: Neither the Lord Chancellor nor I have considered any such appeals. The Advisory Council on Public Records advises on requests for the release of records made by historians and other members of the public which Departments reject, but the final responsibility for the release or otherwise of withheld records rests with the Ministers of the Departments concerned.

Magistrates (Warrington)

Helen Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many women magistrates were appointed to the Warrington bench in the past year; and what proportion of women applicants for that year this figure represents. [13193]

Mr. Hoon: One woman was appointed to the Warrington bench in 1997 out of 13 women applicants. One man was also appointed out of a total of 18 male applicants. Following the appointments, there were 55 women and 56 men on the Warrington bench.

Helen Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many magistrates currently serving on the Warrington bench are resident in the Warrington, North constituency; and what proportion of serving magistrates in Warrington this represents. [13194]

Mr. Hoon: Forty magistrates on the Warrington bench are resident in the Warrington, North constituency—36 per cent. of the Warrington bench.

Late Payments

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the suppliers to his Department who are owed outstanding amounts, indicating the amounts and the due date on which the account should have been settled. [13549]

Mr. Hoon: All Departments are required to pay all their bills within agreed contract terms, or 30 days from receipt of the goods or service or a valid invoice, whichever is later, where no such terms exist. Such detailed information on payment performance for the current financial year could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The Treasury will shortly be publishing a league table of departmental payment performance for 1996–97.

Immigration Appeals

Mr. Malins: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many appeals in immigration cases, excluding asylum cases, are currently outstanding. [13345]

Mr. Hoon: At the end of September 1997, there were 9,410 non-asylum appeals outstanding.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Criminal Justice System

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 30 July, Official Report, column 263, to the hon. Member for South Derbyshire (Mr. Todd), on the review of delay in the criminal justice system, which recommendations for procedural changes in the youth court will be contained in the Crime and Disorder Bill. [12730]

Mr. Michael: The Crime and Disorder Bill will introduce wide-ranging reform of the youth justice system. The measures in the Bill, including the new final warning scheme and a range of new sentencing options, will improve the effectiveness of the youth justice system and the speed with which cases can be concluded.

The Bill will include the legislative provisions necessary to implement the following recommendations from the review of delay in the criminal justice system for procedural reform in the youth court:

> recommendation 31: stipendiary magistrates should be able to sit alone in the youth court and should specialise in the management of particularly complex cases;
> recommendation 32: when the Crown Court deals with a grave offence it should also deal with other related charges;
> recommendation 33: the requirement that there should be an hour's interval between sittings of the magistrates' court and the youth court in a courtroom should be abolished.

The Government also intend to give the youth court discretion to remit a case to the adult court where a juvenile, aged under 18 at the outset of his case, is likely to turn 18 during the course of the proceedings. This is a modification of recommendation 26 from the review of delay in the youth justice system. The necessary legislative changes will be included in the Crime and Disorder Bill.

In addition to these measures, the Crime and Disorder Bill will include legislative provision to give effect to a number of other recommendations from the review of delay in the criminal justice system which apply to both youth and adult proceedings. The Government's response to all the recommendations of the review is set out in a document which has been placed in the Library.

Electronic Tagging

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of (a) the average cost per case of electronic tagging and (b) the costs to the police of dealing with an offender who breaks the terms of the tagging. [12732]

Ms Quin: (a) Based on the experience of the first year of the trials of curfew orders with electronic monitoring, the estimated cost per order for a national roll-out was estimated to be about £2,300. Better estimates based on the second year of the trials will be published shortly.

(b) An offender who breaches the terms of the order is returned to court by the electronic monitoring contractors and the police are not involved. However, if an offender then fails to appear in court, a warrant for arrest is issued. Too few such cases have arisen during the current trials of electronic monitoring to enable a meaningful estimate of police costs to be made.

Chief Constables

Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, by constabulary, the length of service at Association of Chief Police Officers rank prior to their current appointment of each (a) chief constable and (b) assistant chief constable designated as deputy, indicating for each the date of appointment to their present position. [12354]

Mr. Michael: The information requested is shown in the tables.

Prisoners (Release)

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners not excluded by paragraph 2.3 of IG 36/95 have left prison since April 1995 without resettlement leave having been granted. [13055]

Ms Quin: The information requested is not recorded centrally and could be made available only at disproportionate cost by an examination of individual prisoner records.

Prisons (Psychiatric Services)

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of doctors currently working in the Prison Service are qualified in psychiatry; and what plans he has to increase the numbers qualified. [13197]

Ms Quin: Twenty-one out of 197 doctors employed by the Prison Service are either members of the Royal College of Psychiatrists or holders of the diploma in psychiatric medicine. In addition, visiting specialists from the national health service provide the Prison Service with specialist psychiatric services.

The Prison Service, in conjunction with Nottingham university, introduced the diploma in prison medicine in October 1996. The aim of the diploma is to support the professional development of prison doctors. It has a significant psychiatric component which should be helpful to those doctors who are not specifically qualified in psychiatry.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners in England and Wales are currently awaiting transfer to NHS psychiatric hospitals; and what is the average waiting time for such a transfer. [13195]

Ms Quin: On 28 October 1997, 49 prisoners—25 sentenced and 24 unsentenced—were awaiting transfer to a national health service psychiatric hospital. The average time taken in 1996 between receipt in the Home Office of an application for transfer, which includes the two medical reports required under the Mental Health Act 1983, and the issue of a warrant authorising transfer to hospital, was eight days in the case of unsentenced prisoners and 16 days for sentenced prisoners.

Only in very exceptional circumstances would transfer not take place within 14 days of the issue of a warrant.

European Convention on Human Rights

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultations he has conducted and with whom concerning the most effective manner of incorporating the European convention on human rights into United Kingdom statute law. [13556]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Maidenhead (Mrs. May) on 31 July 1997, Official Report, column 567.

Identity Cards

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will assess the advantages of introducing identity cards to assist the prohibition of the sale of (a) cigarettes, (b) alcohol and (c) solvents and other volatile substances to those under age. [13131]

Mr. George Howarth: We are considering the options but have yet to decide whether identity cards should be introduced in the United Kingdom. The issues go far wider than proof of age for purchases. However, the fact that an identity card scheme could help to prevent the sale of age-restricted goods such as tobacco, alcohol and solvents to youngsters is one of the potential benefits which will be taken into account.

Fire Safety

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list his Department's priorities in relation to fire safety for the United Kingdom presidency of the EU. [12983]

Mr. George Howarth: We do not propose any initiative relating to fire safety specifically as a result of the United Kingdom presidency of the European Union. However, on the domestic front, as I announced in a reply to a question from the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith) on 23 June, Official Report, column 360, we are developing proposals to consolidate and rationalise our fire safety legislation. We hope shortly to publish a consultative document setting out our proposals.

Fire Service

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the financial difficulties facing the London fire service and on his response to it. [13224]

Mr. George Howarth: I have received representations from the London fire and civil defence authority about expected future funding difficulties. The revenue provision for the authority in 1998–99 will be announced in the coming weeks as part of the provisional local government settlement for England. I understand that the authority is making a number of proposals for reductions in firefighting resources. Before these could be implemented, they would require the approval of my right hon. Friend under the provisions of section 19 of the Fire Services Act 1947.

Mr. Horam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will set out the calculations by which a fire service in a C risk category area must meet its attendance time requirement of eight to 10 minutes under Home Office standards; [13485]

(2) if, when a fire service in a C risk category area is moved from round-the-clock cover to a retained basis, it is still expected to meet its attendance time target of eight to 10 minutes; and what the revised time calculations are; [13481]

(3) what action is taken if a fire service in a C risk category area does not meet its eight to 10 minute attendance time standard. [13487]

Mr. George Howarth: Statutory responsibility for the provision of a fire service to meet efficiently all normal requirements rests locally with the fire authority. In performance of their duties, fire authorities have regard to the national standards of fire cover, which have been endorsed by the Central Fire Brigades Advisory Council and are recommended by the Home Secretary.

The national standards set out for fires in each category of fire risk the recommended minimum number of firefighting appliances which should attend within predetermined times. The recommended response is the same whatever time of day an incident takes place. In conducting reviews of fire risk, brigades carry out timed runs, making assumptions about the time it will take for a fire appliance to reach a given point in accordance with local traffic conditions. Such evidence will also be supported by an examination of actual attendance times.

The national standards are not statutory and they do allow for the possibility of brigades not meeting the recommended response time for every fire call, for example in circumstances where a number of simultaneous incidents occur. For each response to a fire call, brigades record the time from the despatch of the applicant to arrival at the incident and it is the practice to investigate the reasons if in the case the national recommended response times have not been met.

Each brigade is inspected annually by Her Majesty's inspectorate of fire services to monitor, among other things, whether the national recommended standards are in general being maintained.

The overall performance of brigades in meeting the recommended response times is also monitored by the Audit Commission, which publishes the results of its findings. The Audit Commission said earlier this year that the fire service was one of the most consistently high performing services in local government.

A fire authority may not change the staffing of a fire station from whole-time to day-crewed or retained without the approval of the Home Secretary under section 19(4) of the Fire Services Act 1947. He will approve only if he is satisfied that the fire authority has consulted about its proposals and, on the advice of Her Majesty's inspectorate, that the national standards will continue to be maintained.

Mr. Horam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out the pension arrangements for firemen in the London area. [13486]

Mr. George Howarth: Regular firefighters in London, as elsewhere in England and Wales, are members of the firemen's pension scheme, the current provisions of which are set out in the Firemen's Pension Scheme Order 1992, as amended.

Mr. Horam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimates he had made of the forward cost of pensions for firemen retiring in the London area; and what assessment he has made of the impact of that cost on the provision of fire services. [13480]

Mr. George Howarth: In reaching its decisions on the provisional local government settlement for 1998–99, the Government will have regard to the pressures on the fire service, as on other local authority services. These pressures include the increasing pension commitments of fire authorities.

The Government take into account both estimates of future pensions expenditure provided by the Local Government Association and detailed projections of net pensions expenditure provided by the Government Actuary's Department. For London, they also have estimates of future pensions expenditure provided by the London fire and civil defence authority.

Immigration

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the latest position regarding restoring a right of appeal for those refused entry clearance for visiting the United Kingdom. [13200]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Our manifesto commits us to providing a streamlined system of appeals for visitors denied a visa. We are examining the options for doing this.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in relation to the concessionary arrangements outside the immigration rules of 13 October; if he will define a relationship akin to marriage with a person of either sex, and specify the criteria to be used to establish such a relationship. [13348]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: A relationship akin to marriage is one which is similar in its nature to a marriage in that it involves a committed relationship which can be demonstrated by evidence such as joint commitments, financial or otherwise. In order to benefit under the new concession, an unmarried couple will need to demonstrate, among other matters, that they are legally unable to marry; that they have been living together for four years or more; that they intend to live together permanently; that any previous marriage or similar relationship has permanently broken down and that they will be able to maintain and accommodate themselves without recourse to public funds.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what percentage of the current serving prison population lacks entry clearance certificates; [13343]

(2) how many persons were convicted of or pleaded guilty to indictable offences who lacked entry clearance certificates; how many of these were recommended for deportation by the courts; and how many have been deported in each of the last four years. [13341]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I regret that the information is not held on the relevant computer databases but the great majority of prisoners will not have entry clearance certificates and do not require them.

Police Constables

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police constables were in post (a) in May 1992 and (b) in May 1997. [13318]

Mr. Michael: At the end of April 1992, there were 95,810 constables in England and Wales. By the end of March 1997, the latest date for which figures are available, this had increased by 2,322 to 98,132. Between March 1996 and March 1997, overall police numbers fell by 469 to 127,158.

Licensing Hours

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received to allow extensions of licensing hours where the provision of liquor is ancillary to performances of live music. [13311]

Mr. George Howarth: Licensing law already provides for extensions of licensing hours as an ancillary to live music. We are considering representations received from the restaurant and entertainments industries to relax some of the restrictions on the grant of such extensions.

Surveillance Systems

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many chief officer authorisations by (a) the police, and (b) HM Customs and Excise and (c) both, of intrusive surveillance operations were made which affected Sussex for the most recent year for which figures are available. [13355]

Mr. Michael: Figures on the total number of authorisations of intrusive surveillance operations are not collected centrally but a review undertaken to inform parliamentary debate of part III of the Police Act 1997 estimated that there were around 2,550 chief officer authorisations by police and Customs in the United Kingdom in 1996.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will amend the terms of the Interception of Communications Act 1985 to cover interception of telephone communication other than by a physical tap. [13223]

Mr. Straw: The Interception of Communications Act 1985 applies to the intentional interception of communications in the course of their transmission by means of a public telecommunications system however the interception is effected. It is not therefore necessary to consider an amendment of the kind proposed by my hon. Friend.

Deportation

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his policy in relation to deportation is the same for those aged under 60 years as it is for those aged over 60 years. [13347]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The age of 60 is not of itself significant. Each case is considered on its individual merits. This means that all relevant factors, including the age of the person, will be taken into account when deciding whether deportation is appropriate. The general policy of the previous Government was not to remove those aged 65 or more. I am examining all aspects of this issue as part of our general review of immigration and asylum policy.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum appeals are currently outstanding. [13344]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: As at 30 September 1997, an estimated 26,500 asylum appeals, excluding dependants, were awaiting determination.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the number of persons who have sought asylum in the United Kingdom in the last five years, and give the proportion whose whereabouts are known to the authorities. [13349]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: During the period 1 January 1993 to 30 September 1997, approximately 153,000 asylum applications, excluding dependants, were lodged in the United Kingdom. I regret that the other information requested is not available.

Prison Population

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the prison population has been in each of the last six months. [13342]

Ms Quin: The information requested is given in the table.

Population in prisons in England and Wales on the last day of the month, April to September 1997

On last day of month	Number
April	60,131
May	60,335
June	61,467
July	62,324
August	61,940
September	62,652

Mr. Shayler

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which friends and associates of Mr. Shayler were questioned by the police; when the questioning occurred; and what were the reasons for it. [13424]

Mr. Straw: This investigation is a matter for the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis. I understand from the commissioner that inquiries are proceeding and the Metropolitan police will report in the normal way to the Crown Prosecution Service.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if it is his policy that Mr. Shayler will be arrested if he returns to the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [13527]

Mr. Straw: This is not a matter for me but for the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis. I understand from the commissioner that the Metropolitan police would like to interview Mr. Shayler in connection with a possible offence under section 1 of the Official Secrets Act 1989.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

International Whaling Commission

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the members of the British delegation to the annual meeting of the International

Whaling Commission, and identify (a) their qualifications, (b) their other paid or voluntary employment and (c) their other current appointments. [12929]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 27 October 1997]: The members of the official UK delegation to the International Whaling Commission and current appointments were as follows:

Mr. C. I. Llewelyn: (UK Commissioner, MAFF, Fisheries Division II)

Mr. R. W. Bowman: (Alternate Commissioner, MAFF, Fisheries Division II)

Mrs. F. A. Walters: (MAFF, Fisheries Division II)

Miss S. Jeyabalan: (MAFF, Fisheries Division II)

Dr. J. T. Addison: (MAFF, Fisheries Scientist (CEFAS))

Mr. I. G. Muchmore: (DETR, Global Wildlife Division)

Mr. M. G. Whatley: (FCO, Environment, Science and Energy Department)

Professor P. W. Birnie: (Visiting Fellow at London School of Economics)

Ms H. McLachlan: (Senior Scientific Officer, RSPCA)

Mr. C. Stroud: (Campaigns Director, Whale and Dolphin Conservation Society).

None had other paid or voluntary employment.

The following also acted at technical advisers to the UK delegation at the humane killing working group:

Mr. K. Meldrum: (former Chief Veterinary Officer, MAFF)

Mr. M. Cooke: (Veterinary Adviser)

Mr. W. Swann: (Head of Veterinary Department, RSPCA).

For reasons of confidentiality I am unable to provide further details of qualifications or other paid or voluntary employment.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to encourage the International Whaling Commission to ban the use of the electric lance at its annual meeting; and if he will make a statement. [12928]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 27 October 1997]: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Stourbridge (Ms Shipley) on 28 October 1997, Official Report, columns 789–92.

Chocolate Directive

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his Ministry plans to (a) support the European Commission's draft chocolate directive, (b) oppose the European Parliament's amendments to the draft directive and (c) make a statement about the Government's policy on the draft directive. [13350]

Mr. Rooker: The Government broadly support the European Commission's proposals on chocolate and are opposed to a number of the amendments proposed by the European Parliament, particularly those which would have the effect of discriminating against chocolate containing small additions of vegetable fat and against high-quality UK "milk chocolate". As my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food announced on 23 October, the Government will continue to press strongly for a new directive which protects names traditionally used in the UK and resist measures which would mislead consumers and unfairly penalise our chocolate industry.

Hunt Kennels

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will assess the extra costs which will fall on farmers from the closure of hunt kennels; and if he will make a statement. [13209]

Mr. Rooker: MAFF figures are not available. The private Member's Bill of my hon. Friend the Member for Worcester (Mr. Foster) is due to receive its Second Reading on 28 November. The Government's stance is neither to support nor to oppose a ban on hunting but to allow a free vote. The Bill will provide Parliament with an opportunity to study the pros and cons of any ban on hunting, including the ramifications on the service offered by hunt kennels to the farming community.

Thames (Flooding)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what reports he has received from the Environment Agency into the potential flooding dangers posed to areas abutting the Thames estuary, east of the Thames barrier, consequent upon the increase of sea levels and dangers of surge tides; and if he will make a statement. [13215]

Mr. Morley: The Department has not received any specific reports from the Environment Agency.

Food Safety

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if it is his Department's policy to separate risk assessment and risk management in matters of food safety. [13184]

Mr. Rooker: The process of risk analysis, which comprises risk assessment, risk management and the third component of risk communication, is, in the case of food safety, the joint responsibility of my Ministry and the Department of Health. In general we seek to ensure that risk assessment and risk management are considered separately, although they do also have a measure of interdependence, as has been made clear in recent expert FAO/WHO consultations on risk analysis and risk management. Officials in the joint MAFF/DH food safety and standards group are, however, studying current procedures in the light of recent developments in thinking to ensure that best practice is being followed.

Late Payments

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the suppliers to his Department who are owed outstanding amounts, indicating the amounts and the due date on which the account should have been settled. [13545]

Mr. Rooker: All Departments are required to pay all their bills within agreed contract terms, or 30 days from receipt of the goods or service or a valid invoice, whichever is later, where no such terms exist. Such detailed information on payment performance for the current financial year could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The Treasury will shortly be publishing a league table of departmental payment performance for 1996–97.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Six-month Entry Visas

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many six-month entry visas to the United Kingdom were granted in each of the last two years for which statistics are available. [12575]

Mr. Fatchett: The majority of visas for the UK are valid for presentation at a port within six months of date of issue. In the last two years for which statistics are available, entry clearance posts issued the following:

	1995	1996
Total number issued	1,076,531	1,273,156
Number of non-settlement	1,042,667	1,240,341
Number of multiple entry visas valid for presentation within six months	168,711	221,001

Goods and Services (Payments)

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list each of the functions relating to payment for goods or services supplied for which his Department is responsible indicating the management systems purchased, all sub-contractors involved in the work, co-operative arrangements with other Departments; and the costs of the systems and processes in the last year for which figures are available. [12560]

Mr. Fatchett: This Department makes payments both in the United Kingdom and through embassies and high commissions overseas. No sub-contractors are involved. We also make a large number of payments overseas on behalf of other Government Departments.

In the United Kingdom, spending Departments input the invoice details electronically, but actual payment is issued centrally. During 1996–97, 33,517 payments—covering one or more invoice—were issued at a cost of £124,533 in central staff costs.

No figures are available for payments made overseas and to obtain the information required would involve disproportionate cost.

Argentina

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what new exceptions to the arms embargo on Argentina there have been since 1 May. [13766]

Mr. Fatchett: We have recently approved the export of a single sporting rifle to Argentina following its repair by the original manufacturer in the UK. This is an exception, but not a change, to the embargo.

Rwanda

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will notify his decision on licensing the export of armoured Land Rover vehicles to the UN High Commission for Refugees in Rwanda. [13902]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has recommended approval of an export licence for this item, which has been issued by the Department of Trade and Industry. UN Security Council resolution 1011 prohibits the export of military goods to non-governmental agents in Rwanda. However, the UN secretariat has confirmed that this embargo does not cover the export of equipment destined for UN operations. This export follows similar exemptions made for UNHCR in the Former Republic of Yugoslavia.

Bosnia and Herzegovina

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the approval of an export licence for the supply of riot shields to the United States army in Bosnia and Herzegovina. [13850]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We recently approved the export of 340 riot shields of UK manufacture to the US Army for use in Bosnia to protect US SFOR troops. Given the tension in Bosnia around the time of the municipal elections on 13 to 14 September, we were glad to be able to approve this export as an exception to the EU common position on arms exports to the former Yugoslavia. This decision does not affect the Government's continued support of the EU common position.

Late Payments

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the suppliers to his Department who are owed outstanding amounts, indicating the amounts and the due date on which the account should have been settled. [13550]

Mr. Fatchett: All Departments are required to pay all their bills within agreed contract terms, or 30 days from receipt of the goods or service or a valid invoice, whichever is later, where no such terms exist. Such detailed information on payment performance for the current financial year could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The Treasury will shortly be publishing a league table of departmental payment performance for 1996–97.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensioner Savings

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate she has made of the mean and median level of savings held by pensioners aged (a) 60 to 64 years, (b) 65 to 69 years, (c) 70 to 74 years, (d) 75 to 79 years and (e) 80 years and over (i) in total and (ii) for (1) single male pensioners, (2) singe female pensioners and (3) married pensioners. [12824]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the following tables.

Independent Tribunal Service

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will review the operation of the independent tribunal service in order to reduce waiting times. [12762]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The Social Security Bill, which will be debated in Committee from 28 October, contains measures to provide a more efficient and faster appeals system for social security benefits, child support and vaccine damage payments. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has said that she will take personal responsibility for the administration of the new system and will set and publish demanding targets for clearing appeals and report on the results achieved.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of gross rents in (a) the private rented, (b) local authority and (c) the housing association sectors is met by housing benefit. [12817]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is in the table.

Proportion of total rental income covered by housing benefit Great Britain 1995–96

Private rented sector	Local Authority sector	Housing association sector
38 per cent.	58 per cent.	53 per cent.

Note:

The information is based on housing benefit expenditure in Great Britain as a proportion of estimated total rental income in each sector, including tenants not in receipt of any housing benefit.

Source:

Figures based on the 1995–96 family resources survey. The number of housing benefit recipients has been calibrated to match 1995–96 local authority case load counts.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate the effect on the number of recipients of housing benefit of cutting the taper to (a) 60 per cent., (b) 55 per cent. and (c) 50 per cent. [12815]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is in the table.

Estimated effect on case load of reducing the housing benefit taper

Taper (per cent.)	Housing benefit case load	Increase on current case load
Current taper 65	4,700,000	—
60	4,725,000	25,000
55	4,770,000	70,000
50	4,825,000	125,000

1. Estimates obtained from policy simulation model based on the 1995–96 family resources survey uprated to 1997–98 case load levels.

2. Figures are rounded to the nearest 5,000.

Mr. Hope: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she plans to publish the Social Security Advisory Committee's 1996 report on proposed amendments to the housing benefit regulations governing service charge eligibility; and if she will make a statement. [14186]

Ms Harman: The committee's report was published today. It provides valuable insight into the interaction of the various funding streams in supported housing. It is vital that such an important document is in the public domain to feed into the group's discussions on long-term funding arrangements.

The inter-departmental group is seeking to implement a sustainable long-term funding arrangement for this valuable social provision. The work of the inter-departmental group is unlikely to conclude this year. We inherited a situation whereby many people relied on a benefit designed to meet housing costs to meet charges for services which bear little relation to the provision of accommodation. A recent divisional court ruling has confirmed that this is clearly an unsatisfactory arrangement. We have introduced interim measures to protect the many thousands of vulnerable people living in supported accommodation and stabilise the position of existing supported housing provision until such time as we can implement a sustainable long-term funding arrangement. We shall shortly announce our objectives for these arrangements and we shall be seeking the views of stakeholders on how best to translate them into a modern, practical and sustainable funding mechanism.

Means-tested Benefits

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assumptions about the take-up of means-tested benefits underlie (a) the most recent departmental spending plans and (b) the previous year's spending plans; and if she will make a statement. [12820]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The Department's estimates of expenditure on means-tested benefits do not make any assumptions about the level of take-up. Estimates are based on information drawn from the administrative data sets for individual benefits and reflect the level of take-up that exists at the time the data are collected.

Notes:

1. Further information can be found in the Department's "Income Related Benefits Estimates of Take-Up" publications. A copy of the newly published 1995–96 report is available the Library.

2. The expenditure forecasts assume that recent trends, including trends in take-up rates, continue into the future. There has been no change in the relevant methodology between the latest plans and the previous year's plans.

Lone Parents

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many lone parents in receipt of income support have a youngest child below school age; and what proportion this represents of all lone parents on income support. [12821]

Mr. Keith Bradley: As at November 1996 there were 517,000 lone parents with a youngest child below school age. This figure represents 50.5 per cent. of all lone parents on income support.

Notes:

1. Below school age is defined as under five years of age.

2. Figures have been rounded to the nearest thousand and percentages to one decimal place.

3. Lone parents are those receiving the lone parent premium.

4. Sample size 5 per cent.

Social Security Advisory Committee

Ms Stuart: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she will respond to the eleventh report from the Social Security Advisory Committee, published on 5 August; and if she will make a statement on the future role and membership of the committee. [12787]

Mr. Field: The eleventh report of the Social Security Advisory Committee gave an account of the committee's work since November 1995 and no response was required. The committee is an independent statutory body whose role and membership criteria are set out in the Social Security Administration Act 1992. There are no plans to amend the legislation.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will assess the appropriateness of using weather stations in (a) Bradford and (b) Manchester airport to determine cold weather payments in High Peak. [12758]

Mr. Denham: Entitlement to cold weather payments is based on either the recorded or forecast temperature data at one of 72 weather stations throughout Great Britain. Each weather station is considered to reflect fairly the temperatures of the area it covers. Postcode districts are linked to weather stations, taking into account expert advice from the Meteorological Office.

The list of weather stations to be used this winter and their respective linked postcode districts are contained within the amending regulations which were laid on 9 October, S.I. 1997 No. 2311. The weather stations at Bingley and Ringway—Manchester airport—will continue to be used for postcode districts in the High Peak constituency.

After the end of each winter, representations made regarding the suitability of individual weather stations or their respective links with individual postcode districts are reviewed. Expert advice is sought from the Meteorological Office.

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she expects to announce the outcome of the annual review of the cold weather payments and if she will make a statement. [14188]

Mr. Denham: The annual review has taken place against a backdrop of successful Government moves to cut fuel costs and a wide-ranging programme to make homes easier to heat. The Government are determined to tackle the problems associated with vulnerable people keeping warm during cold weather. Action will go well beyond the scope of cold weather payments.

Fuel costs for many of the poorest claimants are falling. The annual fuel bills for people eligible for CWPs are estimated to be £60 million less this year than last. This fall itself is equivalent to nearly three CWPs. Last year eligible people received an average of two payments.

This winter, fuel bills will fall due to the Chancellor of the Exchequer's reduction in VAT on fuel bills from eight to 5 per cent., removal of the gas levy, and recent reductions in the cost of fuel and light.

Help with energy efficiency grants will continue for householders on low income benefits, disability allowances, or who are aged 60 or over. A further 400,000 vulnerable households will receive help this year. The grants have been extended to cover two new main measures—cavity wall insulation and upgrading of heating system controls.

The environmental task force element of the Government's welfare-to-work new deal is now taking shape. It is expected to include a programme of energy efficiency improvements in homes of the elderly.

This year's review also concluded that two further changes could not be implemented without increasing the complexity and uncertainty of the scheme and would not have provided a guaranteed improvement in the perceived fairness of the scheme.

The first proposed change made use of a new product from the Meteorological Office, which would have removed the need for an annual review of post code to weather station links, but would have lead to the number of post code groups within Great Britain increasing from the present 70 to over 600. Increasing the number of areas would have created far more occasions when people in neighbouring streets received a different number of payments and made the scheme far more difficult to understand. Therefore, we decided not to introduce this change, but to keep the current arrangements under review.

We also considered a new report commissioned from the Building Research Establishment into the effect of wind speed on domestic heating needs during very cold weather. Copies of the BRE report have been placed in the Library. The report was considered alongside the action the Government have already taken to cut fuel bills and promote energy efficiency. We were also mindful of our manifesto commitment to live within inherited expenditure plans.

Allowing for the effects of wind speed would increase the complexity and uncertainty of the scheme without ensuring that the payments went to those with the greatest need for additional heating. The amount of additional heating required depends on a number of varying factors, including the house type, insulation standard, method of heating used and its efficiency.

If the current level of expenditure was maintained, but the scheme was changed to take into account wind speed, it is highly likely that many people in less windy areas would lose payments which they could expect to receive under the current arrangements.

Taking into account all the relevant considerations we have decided not to amend the scheme to take account of wind speed.

The annual review of the CWP scheme has now been completed. The review involved consideration of representations made during last winter regarding the suitability of individual weather stations or their respective links with post code districts. Amending regulations were laid on 9 October.

In line with the Meterological Office expert advice, we have increased the number of weather stations used in the scheme from 70—the number used last winter—to 72. The two additional weather stations will improve the fairness with which payments are made in the affected areas. The two additional weather stations will be in Scotland. One at Waterstein head will represent most of the Isle of Skye and the other at Salsburgh will represent some inland areas in the south of Scotland.

Income Support Mortgage Interest Scheme

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to change the way that standard interest rate used in the income support mortgage interest scheme is calculated. [14184]

Mr. Keith Bradley: We have no current plans to change the existing arrangements for calculating the standard interest rate.

Late Payments

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list the suppliers to her Department who are owed outstanding amounts, indicating the amounts and the due date on which the account should have been settled. [13540]

Mr. Field: All Departments are required to pay all their bills within agreed contract terms, or 30 days from receipt of the goods or service or a valid invoice, whichever is later, where no such terms exist. Such detailed information on payment performance for the current financial year could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The Treasury will shortly be publishing a league table of departmental payment performance for 1996–97.

PRIME MINSTER

Computers (Century Date Change)

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Prime Minster what proposals he has to address the century date change problem relating to computer systems during the British presidency of the European Union; and if he will make a statement. [13151]

The Prime Minister: The Government have launched Action 2000, a new initiative to provide UK businesses with the help that they need to tackle the century date change problem.

We intend to raise with colleagues in Europe the need for all Governments to address this issue urgently.

Ministers (Conflict of Interest)

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the responsibility of the President of the Board of Trade for ensuring that her Ministers do not see papers or attend meetings which may cause them to have a conflict of interest. [12463]

The Prime Minister: In accordance with the ministerial code, all Ministers have an individual responsibility for ensuring that they do not see papers or attend meetings which may cause them to have a conflict of interest

WPC Yvonne Fletcher

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to the Adjournment debate of 23 July, Official Report, columns 994–1022, if following the meeting between Assistant Commissioner David Veness and the hon. Member for Linlithgow in Scotland Yard on 10 July, concerning the murder of WPC Yvonne Fletcher, he will reconsider Her Majesty's Government's policy towards UN sanctions against Libya. [12539]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 27 October 1997]: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, North (Mr. Henderson) the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, on 30 June, Official Report, column 38.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to the Adjournment debate of 23 July, Official Report, columns 994–1022, if he will set out what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken to consider circumstances which have come to light since the fatal accident inquiry on the destruction of Pan Am 103 over Lockerbie; and the application of UN sanctions against Libya. [12538]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 27 October 1997]: Any new information is scrutinised carefully. The Lockerbie investigation remains open and its work is kept under constant review. The Lord Advocate has stated that he is satisfied, on the information available to him, that there is no reason not to proceed with the petitions against the Libyans accused of the Lockerbie bombing. Until Libya complies with the relevant United Nations Security Council resolutions, sanctions should be maintained.

Written Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he or his Ministers had with the hon. Member for Coventry, South (Mr. Cunningham) prior to the tabling of the question by the hon. Member for answer by the Prime Minister on 31 July; and what was the purpose of such discussion. [12735]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 27 October 1997]: As far as I am aware, none.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Coventry, South (Mr. Cunningham) of 31 July, Official Report, column 495, and the answer by the Chancellor of the Exchequer of 21 July, Official Report, column 442, what was the basis of the calculation in the answer of 31 July. [12736]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 27 October 1997]: The average cost of answering a written parliamentary question is £107.

The average cost was multiplied by the number of questions the hon. Member had tabled, 295, to give an estimated total cost of £30,000 since the beginning of May.

The cost detailed on 21 July, Official Report, column 442, applies to direct staff costs only.

Chequers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the (a) official entertainment functions and (b) conferences which have been held at Chequers since May. [12919]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 27 October 1997]: Since the general election, my family and I have used Chequers in a variety of ways, both official and private, consistent with the wishes of the donor, Lord Lee, and the Chequers Estate Acts.

Social Exclusion Unit

Mr. Webb: To ask the Prime Minister what are the terms of reference of the social exclusion unit; how many full-time equivalent staff it will have; and what estimate he has made of its annual running cost. [12825]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 27 October 1997]: The full membership of the unit and its precise terms of reference will be announced shortly. Its budget is currently being determined, but will be funded from within existing resources.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Prime Minister what is Her Majesty's Government's definition of social exclusion. [12827]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 27 October 1997]: Social exclusion can be broadly defined as covering those people who do not have the means, material and otherwise, to participate in social, economic, political and cultural life.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Prime Minister how he will assess whether social exclusion has decreased as a result of the work of the social exclusion unit. [12826]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 27 October 1997]: The social exclusion unit will have clear public terms of reference, against which its work can be judged.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Prime Minister what estimate he has made of the number of people experiencing social exclusion at present; and what are the principal causes of that social exclusion. [12828]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 27 October 1997]: One of the social exclusion unit's key tasks will be to draw together information on the key indicators of social exclusion and improve understanding of its causes.

Unpaid Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Prime Minister what has been the cost to public funds of official secretarial support to unpaid advisers; and from what source these sums are met. [12524]

The Prime Minister: Unpaid special advisers may have access to departmental typing facilities. In practice, only one unpaid adviser currently has requested access to typing facilities and this is being provided from a shared resource with other special advisers. It is not possible to distinguish the precise cost to departmental resources of this support to the unpaid adviser.

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 22 July, Official Report, columns 556–57, if Ministers with unpaid advisers have procured a list of private concerns for each relevant adviser and a list of issues on which conflict with those concerns may arise. [12520]

The Prime Minister: Yes. Ministers and their unpaid advisers are required before any appointment is confirmed to ensure that no conflict arises, or appears to arise, between their public duties and of their private interests.

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Prime Minister if the notification of the Prime Minister prior to appointments of unpaid advisers constitutes approval by the Prime Minister of each appointment. [12521]

The Prime Minister: Before agreeing to the appointment of an unpaid adviser, the appointing Minister has to satisfy me that the appointment is necessary, and that arrangements have been put in place to ensure that no conflict arises, or appears to arise, between their public duties and any of their private interests.

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if unpaid advisers have been or may be subject to positive vetting; and who pays for the vetting; [12522]

(2) if a ministerial instruction is needed in each case before an unpaid adviser may see classified papers; and if unpaid advisers who have not been positively vetted are permitted to see papers normally seen only by officials and advisers who have been positively vetted. [12523]

The Prime Minister: It is for the appointing Minister to determine the papers to which an unpaid adviser may have access. If this involves access to classified papers, then the adviser will be subject to appropriate vetting clearance, the cost of which will be met from the relevant departmental budget.

Special Advisers

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the special advisers in his Department and indicate the subjects on which they advise. [12330]

The Prime Minister: The special advisers in No. 10 Downing street and their responsibilities are as follows:

	Responsibility
Jonathan Powell	Chief of Staff
Kate Garvey	Diary
Anji Hunter	Planning and Visits
Fiona Miller (part time)	Assistants to Mrs. Blair
Roz Preston (part time)
No. 10 Policy Unit
David Milliband	Director of Policy, Education
Derek Scott	Economy
James Purnell	Culture, Media and Sport and Office of Public Service
Robert Hill	Health and Local Government
Liz Lloyd	Agriculture, Environment and Home Affairs
Pat McFadden	Constitutional Reform
Geoffrey Norris	Trade and Industry, Transport and Regional Policy
Roger Liddle	Europe, Defence
Peter Hyman	Communications
Geoff Mulgan	Social Exclusion
No. 10 Press Office
Alastair Campbell	Press Secretary
Tim Allan	No. 10 Press Office
Hillary Coffman	No. 10 Press Office

Security Service

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister what files on individuals held by the Security Service were brought into the public domain as a result of the statement made by Mr. Shayler; and if he will make a statement. [13356]

The Prime Minister: No files have been released into the public domain as a result of Mr. Shayler's statements to the press.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the prime Minister if Mr. Shayler is to be allowed to give evidence to the Intelligence and Security Committee. [13425]

The Prime Minister: This is a matter for the Committee itself to decide.

Telephone Tapping

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister if it is Govnerment policy that interception of telephones of hon. Members by the Security Service requires his authorisation; and if he will make a statement. [13358]

The Prime Minister: This Government's policy on the interception of telephones of Members of Parliament remains as stated in 1966 by the then Prime Minister, the Lord Wilson of Rievaulx, and as applied by successive Governments since. In answer to questions on 17 November 1966, Lord Wilson said that he had given instructions that there was to be no tapping of the telephones of Members of Parliament and that, if there were a development which required such a change of policy, he would at such moment as seemed compatible with the security of the country, on his own initiative, make a statement in the House about it.

Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting in Edinburgh. [13003]

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the Statement I made in the House, Official Report, columns 707–709.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Grace and Favour Residences

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission, which Officers of the House enjoy grace and favour residences; and what is (a) their rateable value, (b) their market rent, (c) the rent actually paid and (d) the total amount of public funds spent on renovation of each property over the past 10 years. [12457]

Mr. Kirkwood [holding answer 31 July 1997]: There are no grace and favour residences in the parliamentary precincts. However, certain Officers of the House are required to reside in the precincts when the House is in session. It is not the practice to give details of the conditions of service of individual staff.

Expenditure on the refurbishment of the residences since 1 April 1993 has totalled £169,000. Figures for earlier years are not available.

HEALTH

Childbirth Costs

Dr. Vis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average cost of childbirth in the NHS in England and Wales including ante-natal and post-natal care for each of the last five years. [12956]

Mr. Boateng: The average cost of childbirth in the national health service in England, including ante-natal and post-natal care provided both in hospitals and the community, is shown in the attached table. Questions relating to Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97
Total expenditure on maternity services (hospital and community)—in £000s	1,011,857	1,007,065	1,006,546	1,012,530	[1]1,048,651
	1992	1993	1994	1995	1996
Total numbers of births (livebirths and stillbirths)	654,561	640,094	632,539	616,663	617,529
Average cost per birth	£1,546	£1,573	£1,591	£1,642	£1,698

Annual financial returns of health authority directly managed units and NHS trusts.

Hospital Appointment Cancellations

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to issue guidance to health authorities and NHS trusts on methods to reduce cancellations by hospital outpatients, with specific reference to the use of post and phone reminder systems. [12810]

Mr. Boateng: Best practice guidance, including the issuing of reminder letters and the use of freephones and answer-phones, to reduce non-attendance in outpatients clinics was issued by the NHS executive's north-west office and has been widely distributed throughout the NHS. Copies are available in the Library.

The Government are developing a new NHS charter which, among other things, will be looking for a proper balance between patients' rights and their responsibilities towards the NHS. This includes keeping appointments or informing the NHS if they are unable to do so.

Abortions

Dr. Vis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average cost of a first trimester NHS abortion in England and Wales for each of the last five years. [12957]

Ms Jowell: Information on the costs of specific operations is not held centrally because of a number of factors including the many different types of operations, the variation in cost from hospital to hospital and the logistics of administering such a diverse range of data.

Charging Policy (Disabled People)

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the impact of current charging policies on disabled people and carers; and if he will introduce national guidelines on charging. [13308]

Mr. Boateng: Under the current system whereby local authorities have complete discretion, there are considerable variations in local authority charging practices. We are looking at how this may be addressed both in the short-term and as part of a fundamental review of long-term care.

Hospitals (Cornwall)

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if the statements made by the Minister of State in Torbay on 23 October 1997 in response to questions about the threatened closures and cuts in Cornwall's community hospitals represent Government policy; [13180]

(2) if it is his intention that Ministers who have expressed views on the merits of proposed closures and cuts in Cornwall's community hospital services should play any part in the approval process for these proposals. [13179]

Mr. Boateng: During media interviews on 23 October, my noble Friend the Minister of State made general points about the need to see improved community services to enable patients to be treated in their own homes, rather than in hospital. My noble Friend did not comment upon, or pass judgment on, the service review of the Cornwall and Isles of Scilly health authority.

Dental Health (Children)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies his Department has evaluated relating to the level of plutonium in the teeth of children (a) in the Sellafield area and (b) elsewhere in the Untied Kingdom; what were the results of these surveys; and if he will make a statement. [13210]

Ms. Jowell: A study, jointly funded by the Department of Health, the Department of Trade and Industry and the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Agency entitled "Variations in the concentration of plutonium, strontium-90 and total alpha-emitters in human teeth collected within the British Isles" was published in "The Science of the Total Environment 201 (1997) 235–243". Copies of the study have been placed in the Library.

The results of the study suggest that the Sellafield nuclear reprocessing plant may contribute to the plutonium found in teeth in the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland. However the levels of plutonium measured were 1,000 times less than other radioactive substances also present in teeth from natural sources. The authors have acknowledged that the levels of plutonium were so low that they present an insignificant risk to health.

Trusts (Appointments)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) in which instance the final interviews for trust non-executive directors' posts in the North Thames region have been conducted during the appointment process for the new chairman of the trust, and before the Secretary of State made the appointment; [13204]

(2) when he made the appointment of the new chairman of the Basildon and Thurrock Hospital trust; and when the final interviews for non-executive directors for the Basildon and Thurrock Hospital trust were conducted. [13203]

Mr. Milburn: In the current round of appointments to national health service trusts in the North Thames region, there are vacancies for 24 chairmen and 91 non-executive directors. All these appointments are made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health on the advice of the regional chairman. Given the time constraints for this year's trust exercise, it has not always been possible to involve new chairmen in shortlisting candidates for non-executive directors for their trusts. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State wrote on 30 October inviting a candidate to accept the post of chairman of Basildon and Thurrock General Hospitals NHS trust. The new chairman's views will be taken into account on who should fill the two non-executive posts at the trust which fall vacant on 1 December.

Late Payments

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the suppliers to whom payments from NHS trusts are outstanding beyond the due date for payment, indicating in each case the name of the trust and when the payment was due. [13526]

Mr. Milburn: National health service trusts make over 3 million payments per quarter to a very large number of suppliers. The details are not therefore collected by the Department. In the first quarter of 1997–98, approximately 80 per cent. of payments were made on time.

Information on the compliance of individual NHS trusts with the public sector payment policy is collected quarterly. The information provides the numbers of bills paid, the numbers paid within the prompt payment target and the percentage paid within target.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the suppliers to his Department who are owed outstanding amounts, indicating the amounts and the due date on which the account should have been settled. [13542]

Ms Jowell: All Departments are required to pay all their bills within agreed contract terms, or 30 days from receipt of the goods or service or a valid invoice, whichever is later, where no such terms exist. Such detailed information on payment performance for the current financial year could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The Treasury will shortly be publishing a league table of departmental payment performance for 1996–97.

Transplants

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how may (a) kidney, (b) heart, (c) lung, (d) heart–lung, (e) liver and (f) other transplants have been carried out in each of the last 10 years, broken down into health authority district; and if he will make a statement. [12906]

Mr. Boateng [holding answer 27 October 1997]: The information available on numbers of transplants has been placed in the Library. These show the numbers of transplants carried out for the last 10 years broken down by region. Many hospitals do not perform kidney transplants, and there are just eight designated cardiothoracic transplant units and six designated liver units in England. This is the main reason for the considerable variation in the numbers of transplants performed in different regions.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the Transport costs incurred by jobseeker's allowance claimants in rural areas in meeting the requirement regularly to sign on at their local jobcentre by virtue of their residence within four hours' travelling distance; and if he will make a statement. [13218]

Mr. Alan Howarth: We want as many jobseekers as possible to have regular access to jobcentre advice and services, to help them return to work as quickly possible. The great majority therefore attend each fortnight. However, a small minority sign by post instead, because of the distance they live from the jobcentre. Postal signing is normally agreed for anyone whose normal door-to-door journey to the jobcentre using public transport using public transport would take more than an hour in either direction, or would have to be away from home for more than four hours in total.

We have made no estimate of the costs incurred in fortnightly attendance at the jobcentre. Most people incur some costs, and it has never been the practice to refund them. Jobcentres can of course consider accommodating jobseekers' normal day of attendance to any weekday on which they may regularly travel to the town concerned.

Southampton University (Merger)

Mrs. Betty Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what arrangements have been made to transfer the relevant assets from La Sainte Union college of higher education to the university of Southampton following the merger of the college with the university. [14239]

Dr. Howells: La Sainte Union college of higher education merged with university of Southampton on 1 September 1997. The congregation of La Sainte Union des Sacrés Coeurs owns the land and buildings used by the college. The congregation has agreed to sell the academic and associated buildings to the university and to grant the university an option to purchase the student residence at a later date. The estate has been partly financed by public funds and Government have an interest in ensuring that any disposals or transfers comply with requirements for propriety, regularity and value for money.

The Government have agreed that the Higher Education Funding Council for England may waive the standard condition in its financial memorandum with the college requiring it to repay the Government interest in the estate to the Exchequer when it is transferred to the university. In return, the university has agreed that the estate will continue to be used for higher education, and has accepted responsibility to repay the Government interest in the estate to the Exchequer if it is disposed of in the future.

TEC Efficiency Scrutiny

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will place in the Library a copy of his Department's implementation report following the efficiency scrutiny into the training and enterprise company contract and management fee; and if he will make a statement. [14238]

Dr. Howells: A copy of the implementation report that his Department has produced in response to the findings of the above scrutiny has been placed in the Library.

The great majority of the scrutiny's 40 recommendations have been implemented in line with the agreed action plan. The overall result is a less bureaucratic and more productive relationship between his Department and TECs.

The Government will continue to seek ways to ensure that the cost of administering programmes is the minimum that is necessary, consistent with proper accountability for public funds.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the total additional budget allocation for grant-maintained schools in England, in addition to that which they received through their local management of schools funding allocation, for (a) 1989–90, (b) 1990–91, (c) 1991–92, (d) 1992–93 and (e) 1993–94. [13176]

Mr. Byers: For the years in question, the annual maintenance grant for grant-maintained schools consisted of three principal elements. The first—direct AMG—is what the GM school would have received under the local management of schools scheme of its former maintaining LEA. The second—meals AMG—consisted of an amount for school meals reflecting subsidy levels in the relevant LEA for net expenditure on school meals. The third—central AMG—is an amount for services which LEA schools received free of charge but for which GM schools assumed direct responsibility, and was a simple percentage of the first sum. The central percentage is determined by the Secretary of State and under current arrangements is calculated for individual local education authorities by reference to the financial returns that they make.

We recognise that the current arrangements for funding GM schools treat them differently from LEA schools, and can lead to unwarranted financial advantage to some GM schools. We are proposing in 1998–99 to move to a fairer funding system and we are presently considering the responses to consultation on our proposals. These proposals include transitional arrangements, where necessary, to minimise disruption to individual GM school budgets.

Tuition Fees

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how he intends to deal with those students who fail to meet their repayments on tuition fees; what provision he has made for this; and if he will make a statement. [13160]

Dr. Howells: Universities and colleges will be responsible for collecting tuition fees from their students and for deciding what should happen in the case of students who fail to pay their fees, bearing in mind that their grants from the Higher Education Funding Council for England will assume this new source of income.

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if all university students from throughout the United Kingdom will be charged a flat rate tuition fee of £3,000 for a degree level course. [13361]

Dr. Howells: Full-time undergraduate students will be required to contribute up to £1,000 a year towards tuition fees, depending on the assessment of parental or spouse's income. It will be possible for full-time undergraduate students from England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland to undertake a degree course for a maximum contribution of £3,000 to tuition fees, but students may opt for degree courses lasting longer than three years. In that case, the total level of contribution, depending on assessment of parental or spouse's income, will be higher, subject to the special arrangements which will apply to students on medical and dental courses in year five and beyond and to Scottish students taking four-year honours degrees, in recognition of the fact that many Scottish students will have spent only one year in the sixth form. No contributions will be required from students from low-income families.

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has made to the Scottish Office in respect of university tuition fees for students from England and Wales. [13362]

Dr. Howells: We have asked the Scottish Office to encourage Scottish universities, where they do not do so already, to admit English and Welsh students with appropriate A-levels into the second year of their four-year honours degree courses, so that English and Welsh students will be able to obtain a Scottish honours degree for the same maximum contribution—£3,000—towards tuition fees as Scottish students. Students from low-income families will not, however, be required to contribute to fees.

Late Payments

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the suppliers to his Department who are owed outstanding amounts, indicating the amounts and the due date on which the account should have been settled. [13547]

Dr. Howells: All Departments are required to pay all their bills within agreed contract terms, or 30 days from receipt of the goods or service or a valid invoice, which ever is later, where no such terms exist. Such detailed information on payment performance for the current financial year could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The Treasury will shortly be publishing a league table of departmental payment performance for 1996–97.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Timeshare Industry

Mr. Levitt: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the regulation of the timeshare industry. [12757]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: The timeshare industry in the United Kingdom is regulated by the Timeshare Act 1992, as amended by the Timeshare Regulations 1997, which implemented the EU timeshare directive. Member states were required to implement the directive by 29 April 1997. A number have not yet done so, including Spain where many UK citizens buy timeshares. I have written to the Spanish Government about this and will raise the matter when I meet the Spanish Consumer Minister later this month.

Minister's Unpublished Articles

Mr. Paterson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list those articles written by the Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Griffiths), awaiting publication. [12542]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: I have written a number of articles awaiting publication, in accordance with paragraphs 101, 102, 104–106 of the ministerial code: "A Code of Conduct and Guidance on Procedures for Ministers".

Inward Investors

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps she is taking to establish a code of practice on the offering of state aids to inward investors; and when she expects to report to Parliament on this matter. [12977]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 27 October 1997]: As foreshadowed in the Scotland and Wales White Papers on devolution, common UK guidelines and consultation arrangements on financial assistance to industry will be set out in a published concordat, which is currently being prepared. I shall report to Parliament when that concordat is published.

Competition Policy

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will place in the Library copies of the responses to the draft Bill on competition policy. [12987]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: Copies of the responses to the consultation document "A prohibition approach to anti-competitive agreements and abuse of a dominant position: draft bill" will be placed in the Library shortly with the exception of the responses from those respondents who have requested that their responses be kept confidential. Copies will also be placed in the library of the Department of Trade and Industry, which is open to the public. In the consultation document, we said it would be helpful to have responses by September 30. However, we said that responses received after that date would still be considered, and responses are accordingly still being received.

Used Car Sales

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action she proposes to take following the publication of the Office of Fair Trading report on the sale of used cars. [12989]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: I have asked the Director General of Fair Trading to bring forward detailed proposals on the legislative changes he sees as necessary to implement the recommendations contained in his report.

Consumer Affairs

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list her Department's priorities in relation to consumer affairs for the United Kingdom presidency of the EU. [12985]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: While preparations are well under way to conduct a successful presidency of the Consumer Council, with over a third of the Luxembourg presidency still to run, we have not finalised our plans. I am to pursue the Government's policy of ensuring that UK consumers achieve the best possible consumer protection.

Goods and Services (Payments)

Mr. Todd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list each of the functions relating to payment for goods or services supplied for which her Department is responsible indicating the management systems purchased, all sub-contractors involved in the work, co-operative arrangements with other Departments; and the costs of the systems and processes in the last year for which figures are available. [12572]

Mrs. Roche: In line with other Government Departments, the DTI is responsible for payments relating to the goods and services it procures. There are well-established procedures aimed at promoting efficient and effective procurement and prompt payment. In general, each management unit within the Department is responsible for purchases in relation to its own needs. The Department's central procurement standards unit formulates overall policy and disseminates best practice. Payments of invoices are contracted out to CSL Managed Services, which provides the Department's accounts services and similar services to a range of other public sector bodies. As procurement is an integral part of each management unit's activity, it is not possible to disaggregate the costs.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if it is her policy to implement whatever recommendation the Low Pay Commission makes on the minimum wage. [13044]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 29 October 1997]: The Government will decide the level at which the national minimum wage will be set after considering the Low Pay Commission's recommendations.

Export Licences

Caroline Flint: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the statistics on export licences issued and refused for the second half of 1996 will be placed in the Library. [14185]

Mrs. Roche: 1. It has been normal practice for statistics relating to decisions on applications for standard individual export licences for strategic goods to be placed periodically in the Library. However, a number of problems have been identified with the export control licence information processing system, ECLIPS, which came into operation in March 1995, on which details of such applications are recorded.

2. It should be made clear that the problems identified relate to the accuracy of recording and subsequent retrieval of information from the databases; they have not affected the processing of, and decision-making on, individual export licence applications. They fall into three main categories:

(i) In general, over the last few years, where a single application has involved a range of goods, only the major item of goods on the application has been recorded on ECLIPS, together with the entry in the legislation under which this item is controlled (known as the 'rating'). Any other goods on the application have been considered in the licensing process, but not recorded on the computer system.

(ii) Conversion and input errors have been found in data transferred to ECLIPS from earlier computer systems.

(iii) Errors and omissions have been found in the entry and updating of information on ECLIPS since it came into operation.

The House will be aware that it has been necessary in the past to correct a number of answers to questions, for example the question asked by the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell), Official Report, 13 June 1996 column 263.

3. Data integrity problems also arise with the separately recorded data on applications for open individual export licences, on which information has not been included in the statistics placed in the Library.

4. Having identified these problems, this Government have taken urgent steps to improve the situation:

Checks have been made on all answers given to parliamentary questions since this Government took office;

New procedures have been put in place to ensure that all goods listed on export licence applications and their ratings will be recorded for all applications in future, and this work will be backdated to cover all applications on which a decision has been taken since 2 May;

> Data input procedures and their enforcement have been reviewed and strengthened;
> In order to assist industry and minimise input errors, work is in hand to allow companies to complete standard individual export licence applications electronically and it is hoped that this will be ready for testing in the new year; and
> In the same time scale, a new database is being developed to hold the data. All this work is being undertaken to a rigorous timetable and the result will be a significant advance on the present situation. However, some goods on an application may be listed under a range of different terms or even brand names.

While these can be searched by rating, comparison with a generic or specific description may be possible only in some cases by examining the original paper records.

5. As a result of checking answers given to parliamentary questions since this Government took office, three errors have now been identified affecting the answer to five separate questions; four asked by the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) and one by the hon. Member for Westbury (Mr. Faber). Both have been informed by letter, copies of which have been placed in the Library of both Houses. Apart from this, however, as it is now clear that the databases do not provide a fully accurate record, some previous answers, using information obtained from the databases, could be proved wrong if recourse were made to the original paper records, of which there are some 280,000. In the light of this, all information given by this and previous Administrations—either in answer to parliamentary questions, or in correspondence, or elsewhere—relying on data obtained from these databases, should be read in conjunction with the following caveat:

> "This information is based on data retrieved from computer databases that have been found not to be fully comprehensive. It should therefore be treated as indicative only. For any single application involving a range of goods, all of the entries in the legislation under which all of these goods were controlled may not have been recorded. Additionally, there may have been errors and omissions in recording some information. The information could only be verified by undertaking a complete search of all paper records, which would entail excessive cost".

6. However, while it would not be cost-effective to seek to correct all the data available in the Library, the data for the second half of 1996 is being corrected by examination of the paper records. This work will be completed as soon as possible and the aim is to place in the Library before the end of the year statistics covering this period, albeit subject to the above caveat.

For the first time, these will include statistics on open individual export licences granted; copies of all current open general export licences will also be provided.

7. The Government are committed, in spirit of openness, to reporting annually on the state of strategic export controls and their application.

Late Payments

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the suppliers to her Department who are owed outstanding amounts, indicating the amounts and the due date on which the account should have been settled. [13546]

Mrs. Roche: All Departments are required to pay all their bills within agreed contract terms, or 30 days from receipt of the goods or service or a valid invoice, whichever is the later, where no such terms exist. The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The Government will publish a league table of departmental payment performance for 1996–97 shortly.

Export Credits (Indonesia)

Ann Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the value of the export credits furnished to Indonesia in each of the last five years; and what percentage of these were allocated to defence exports. [12342]

Mrs. Roche: According to readily available information, figures show that the value of ECGD supported export credits to Indonesia in each of the past five years was as follows:

Year	Total £ million	Per cent. attributable to defence
1993	100.0	8
1994	232.9	47
1995	649.8	64
1996	337.0	43
1997 to date	56.9	2

NORTHERN IRELAND

Sex Offenders

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people have been (a) charged and (b) convicted under the Sex Offenders Act 1997 in relation to Northern Ireland. [12753]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 27 October 1997]: The Sex Offenders Act 1997 came into being on 1 September 1997 and to date no persons have been charged or convicted under the Act in Northern Ireland.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many sex offenders have registered their place of abode by category of offence. [12754]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 27 October 1997]: A total of 49 persons in Northern Ireland have registered as required under current legislation. This figure is made up as follows:

	Number
Indecent assault on children	33
Indecent assault	7
Gross indecency	4
Rape	1
Attempted rape	1
Incest	1
Unlawful carnal knowledge	1
Taking indecent photographs	1

Drumcree Disturbances

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many prosecutions of (a) members of the loyalist community and (b) members of the nationalist community have taken place in respect of the Drumcree disturbances. [12864]

Mr. Ingram: As a result of disturbances during the period 5 to 13 July 1997, 35 persons have been prosecuted. Of these police perceive 19 to come from the loyalist community and 16 to come from the nationalist community.

WALES

Voluntary Sector

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his proposals to promote and create partnerships between his Department and the voluntary sector, and for the allocation of funding to the voluntary sector in Wales. [12861]

Mr. Ron Davies: Officials are currently discussing with representatives of the voluntary sector the development of a compact between the Government and the voluntary sector in Wales. I expect this compact to set out the principles, including those relating to funding, which will govern our future relationship. We will consult on the final form which the compact should take.

Late Payment

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the suppliers to his Department who are owed outstanding amounts, indicating the amounts and the due date on which the account should have been settled. [13538]

Mr. Ron Davies: All Departments are required to pay all their bills within agreed contract terms, or 30 days from receipt of the goods or service or a valid invoice, whichever is later, where no such terms exist. Such detailed information on payment performance for the current financial year could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The Treasury will shortly be publishing a league table of departmental payment performance for 1996–97.

Local Government Funding

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from local authorities in Wales concerning the negative impact of proposed changes in the distribution of financial support to local government in Wales with particular reference to the more economically deprived counties. [13360]

Mr. Ron Davies: In addition to comments and proposals on the distribution arrangements for the forthcoming revenue settlement from the Welsh Local Government Association, I have received representations from a number of individual local authorities. I discussed the arrangements with the association on 27 October. I will also be consulting Cardiff county council and Rhondda Cynon Taff county borough council on the options

I am considering a package of measures which will implement the proposed changes to the distribution formula whilst protecting individual authorities' spending power and limiting the impact on council tax payers. For the longer term, I propose to commission, jointly with the Welsh Local Government Association, an independent review of the concept of expenditure need and the main factors that influence it. This review should be completed in time for early consideration by the Welsh Assembly.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what resources he will make available to authorities that have been or are to be reorganised on 1 April 1995, 1996, 1997 or 1998 for reorganisation costs incurred by them in 1997–98; and if he will make a statement. [14067]

Ms Armstrong: On 18 July I invited authorities that have been or are to be reorganised on or before 1 April 1998 to submit estimates of the amount of expenditure they expect to incur on transitional costs of reorganisation in 1997–98. On the basis, inter alia, of the information provided by the authorities, I have decided the revised maximum amounts that it would be appropriate to allocate towards such costs in 1997–98. In the initial round, priority was given to authorities that were reorganised on 1 April 1997 and will be reorganising on 1 April 1998; I have adopted the same priorities for the mid-year stage of the scheme. The majority of the authorities to be reorganised in 1998 requested at the beginning of the scheme that allocations in respect of redundancy be deferred until this round. Accordingly, the allocations listed below for authorities reorganising in 1998 are intended to cover redundancy costs.

The amounts are as follows:

Maximum amounts: £000s rounded

SCOTLAND

Land Ownership and Management

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how the Government plan to take forward their commitment to initiate a study of land ownership and management in Scotland. [14189]

Mr. Dewar: I am establishing a land reform policy group, under the chairmanship of my noble Friend the Scottish Office Minister for Agriculture, the Environment and Fisheries, which will have the following remit:

> to identify and assess proposals for land reform in rural Scotland taking account of their cost, legislative and administrative implications and their likely impact on the social and economic development of rural communities and on the natural heritage.

The group comprises senior officials from the Scottish Office and the Forestry Commission; and Professor John Bryden of Aberdeen university, who has long experience of land tenure issues, will act as external assessor. Over the next year the group will assess carefully the range of available options and I expect is report to provide a sound basis for early action by the new Scottish Parliament. Along with two related reports from the Scottish Law Commission on the abolition of feudal tenure and on reform of the law on real burdens, this should pave the way for early land reform legislation for the new millennium.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Crown Office has access to all the United States evidence relating to Lockerbie. [13212]

Mr. McLeish: As has been repeatedly stated, there has been very full co-operation throughout between the Scottish and United States authorities. Appropriate arrangements have been made for sharing of information and evidence and many inquiries have been pursued jointly or in parallel with those of the United States authorities.

Pupils with Medical Needs

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he proposes to issue guidance to social work departments on supporting pupils with medical needs. [13217]

Mr. Galbraith: There are no plans to issue such guidance to social work departments. However, my officials are currently discussing with directors of education in Scotland draft guidance on legal and administrative issues related to the administration of medicine in schools.

Travellers

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to extend the work of the advisory committee on Scotland's travelling people in Scotland beyond the end of 1997. [13221]

Mr. Chisholm: This is currently under consideration. My right hon. Friend expects to reach a decision shortly.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what evidence the advisory committee on Scotland's travelling people in Scotland has received about the location and availability to travelling people of pitches within Highland council area. [13222]

Mr. Chisholm: The advisory committee receives information on pitches across Scotland from its own members and, from time to time, from a range of other sources. In May 1997, the Scottish Office published a report on "Local Authority Sites for Travellers" intended to assist the advisory committee in its work. The report included a survey of all local authority sites then open, including those in Highland council's area. A copy has been placed in the Library.

Highlands and Islands Airports Ltd.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by airport the Scottish Office grant made available to Highlands and Islands Airports Ltd. in (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97. [13220]

Mr. Chisholm: Scottish Office grant to Highlands and Islands Airports Ltd. is not hypothecated in respect of individual airports. The amount of deficit subsidy attributed by HIAL to each airport operated by the company was as follows:

	1995–96 £	1996–97 £
Barra	426,000	864,000
Benbecula	637,000	708,000
Campbeltown	899,000	856,000
Inverness	2,651,000	1,075,000
Islay	509,000	457,000
Kirkwall	2,722,000	926,000
Stornoway	430,000	408,000
Sumburgh (non-oil[1])	340,000	270,000
Tiree	510,000	388,000
Wick	741,000	1,052,000

[1] Sumburgh's oil-related activities are not subsidised and in the years in question made a positive contribution to HIAL's overall finances of £1,475,000 in 1995–96 and £367,000 in 1996–97.

Woodland Sales

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) the areas of Forestry Commission woodland that are currently being advertised for sale and (b) the steps being taken to safeguard public access in these areas. [13413]

Mr. Chisholm: We imposed a moratorium on the sale of Forestry Commission land when we took up office. The commission and its selling agents therefore explain to anyone making inquiries about buying woodlands that there are currently no Forestry Commission woodlands available for purchase.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Montserrat

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what are her current plans for the development of Montserrat; and if she will make a statement. [13351]

Clare Short: We have always made clear that we are committed to maintaining a viable community in the north of the island as long as it is safe for people to live there. This assurance means that essential facilities including health care, education, utilities and internal and external communications will be available for Montserratians who wish to remain on the island.

As we have agreed with the Government of Montserrat, the next major step is the preparation and agreement—in consultation with the people of Montserrat—of a long-term sustainable development plan for the island to provide the level of services and infrastructure appropriate to the needs of the community. Work on the preparation of the SDP is now under way and is expected to be completed early in the new year.

Commonwealth Development Corporation

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what are her plans for the future of the Commonwealth Development Corporation; and if she will make a statement. [13352]

Clare Short: As the Prime Minister announced on 22 October, my intention is that the CDC should develop a new partnership with the private sector in order to increase the flow of investment into the least developed countries. This will require legislation to allow private investors to invest in the CDC. The Government will retain a substantial minority holding and a golden share and will continue to set a framework for the corporation's operations in order to preserve its developmental character and special skills.

Bananas

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what are the (a) current activities and (b) future plans for expenditure arising from the proposal of the Commission of the European Community for the creation of an Africa, Caribbean and Pacific diversification and development programme for banana producers in Latin America in document COM(92) 496 and any subsequent measure; and if she will list for each state concerned (i) the finance committed and already expended and for what purposes and (ii) the authorising body and budget lines in the Community Budget. [13412]

Clare Short: We understand the proposal of the Commission of the European Communities for a Council regulation—COM(92) 496—to introduce a diversification and development programme for certain banana-producing countries of Latin America in document COM(92) 496 was not taken forward. There are therefore no current activities or future plans for expenditure.

Late Payments

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the suppliers to her Department who are owed outstanding amounts, indicating the amounts and the due date on which the account should have been settled. [13537]

Clare Short: All Departments are required to pay all their bills within agreed contract terms, or 30 days from receipt of the goods or service or a valid invoice, whichever is later, where no such terms exist. Such detailed information on payment performance for the current financial year could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The Treasury will shortly be publishing a league table of departmental payment performance for 1996–97.

Kenya

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans her Department has to review its policy towards Kenya in respect of its human rights record. [12552]

Mr. Foulkes: My Department will be reviewing Britain's development assistance programmes, including that for Kenya, in the light of the White Paper on international development. Our future policies towards Kenya will take account of the Kenyan Government's commitment to poverty eradication, which will include respect of human rights and the rule of law.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Small Businesses

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) how many regulations affecting small businesses have come into effect since 1 May; and if he will list them; [13482]

(2) how many regulations affecting small businesses have been abolished since 1 May; and if he will list them. [13483]

Dr. David Clark: This information is not held centrally in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. We are committed to reducing the burden of unnecessary regulation, particularly on small business, and ensuring that regulation delivers benefits to ordinary citizens. As promised in our manifesto, we have established the new better regulation task force with half of its members with small business interests. The access business group led by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary is overseeing a range of projects with clear benefits to small business.

Late Payments

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the suppliers to his Department who are owed outstanding amounts, indicating the amounts and the due date on which the account should have been settled. [13536]

Dr. David Clark: For this purpose, I have responsibility for the Cabinet Office, including the Prime Minister's Office and the Office of Public Service and its agencies and the Central Office of Information.

All Departments are required to pay their bills within agreed contract terms, or 30 days from recept of the goods or services or a valid invoice, whichever is the later, where no such terms exist. Such detailed information on payment performance for the current financial year could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The Treasury will shortly be publishing a league table of departmental payment performance for 1996–97.

TREASURY

Welfare to Work

17. Mr. Reed: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has had about the implementation of his welfare-to-work strategy. [12665]

20. Mr. Coaker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with industry about his welfare-to-work strategy. [12668]

21. Mrs. Heal: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with employers about his welfare-to-work strategy. [12669]

23. Laura Moffatt: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with employers about his welfare-to-work strategy. [12671]

32. Ms Kelly: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with business about his welfare-to-work strategy. [12680]

36. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with business about the implementation of his welfare-to-work strategy. [12684]

Mr. Gordon Brown: The participation of employers is crucial to the success of the welfare-to-work programme. Since I launched the welfare-to-work programme at a business breakfast at No. 11, the Government have had extensive contacts with a wide range of employers—nationally and locally; in small firms and large—and in every sector of the economy and every region of the country.

The response and good will has been extremely encouraging, Sainsbury's, Tesco, BT, Lloyds bank, Ford, Rover, Marks and Spencer, Unipart, WH Smith—and many others—are coming up with ways that they can help the new deal. They realise that helping young people move from welfare to work is in the interest of business as well as the young people themselves. It is only by helping to improve the skills and employability of our young people that we can address the long-standing weaknesses of our economy and allow businesses to thrive.

Foreign Income Dividends

18. Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made regarding the consultation process on the budget proposals for the future of FIDs. [12666]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: In response to the invitation I announced in the Finance Bill Standing Committee on 22 July, we have received a number of representations on behalf of UK-owned companies and UK investment funds that obtain a high proportion of their profits from overseas. These representations are being carefully considered with a view to finding a way forward following the abolition of FIDs in 1999 in 1999 that balances the interests of the Exchequer with those of the companies involved.

Advance Corporation Tax

19. Mr. Brake: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the London borough of Sutton concerning the effect of abolition of the advance corporation tax refund on local authorities. [12667]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The leader of the council of the London borough of Sutton wrote to the Government on 22 July about the impact of the loss of these tax credits to local authority pension funds. In my reply to him, I explained that the extent to which these changes affect local authority budgets will depend on the overall judgments made by the funds' actuaries as they undertake revaluations due from next year.

37. Mr. Paice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the total pension fund available at the age of 65 years to an individual currently aged 35 years who remains on average earnings throughout his working life as a result of his changes to ACT. [12685]

Dawn Primarolo: No estimate is available.

Single Currency

22. Mr. Walter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on the consequences of British entry into the European single currency in 1999. [12670]

Mr. Gordon Brown: I have received a wide range of representations on the consequences of British entry into the European single currency.

Tax and National Insurance

25. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what actions he has taken against employers who deduct tax and national insurance contributions from their employees but fail to pass them on the Inland Revenue; and if he will make a statement. [12673]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue will take appropriate action to secure payment of unpaid pay-as-you-earn and associated national insurance contributions, commensurate with the amount outstanding and the period during which it remains unpaid. The decision on what enforcement action is appropriate is made in the light of the particular circumstances of each case.

The Inland Revenue publishes a code of practice on collection of amounts due from employers—code of practice 7—which is available from tax offices and explains the recovery action it will take and taxpayer's rights and obligations.

Public Investment Projects

26. Mr. Quinn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made in attracting private participation in public investment projects. [12674]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: Implementation of the Bates review of the private finance initiative is streamlining the initiative, reducing costs to the public and private sectors and making such investment a much more attractive proposition. Recent major contracts, such as Dartford and Gravesham hospital and Clarendon school, provide real evidence of the benefits to be gained from public-private partnerships.

Securities and Investments Board

27. Mr. Khabra: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next plans to meet the chairman of the Securities and Investments Board. [12675]

Mrs. Liddell: The Chancellor meets with the chairman of the Securities and Investments Board from time to time.

Bank of England

28. Ms Kingham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the representations he has received on his reforms to the Bank of England. [12676]

Mr. Darling: The Bill that was published on 28 October will put on a statutory footing the important reforms to the Bank of England, which we announced in May. These reforms have been widely welcomed and will be a significant step towards reducing short-termism and putting decision making on the right basis to deliver the long-term growth and employment that is a major objective of our economic policy. The Bill also represents a major move toward creating the single regulator that will deliver more effective and efficient regulation for financial services.

Economic Stability

29. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures he is taking to ensure economic stability. [12677]

Mrs. Liddell: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Dudley, North (Mr. Cranston).

Sterling Exchange Rate

30. Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current sterling exchange rate. [12678]

Mrs. Liddell: Sterling has fallen back in recent months and has been more stable. The Government want to see a stable and competitive pound over the medium term, consistent with the objective of price stability.

35. Ms Stuart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures he intends to take to protect manufacturing industry in the west midlands from the adverse effects of the current sterling exchange rate. [12683]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government want a stable competitive pound over the medium term, consistent with the objective of price stability. Industry is best helped by Government preventing any return to the cycle of boom and bust, and to pursue sound, long-term macroeconomic policies.

Inflation

31. Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest inflation forecast. [12679]

Mrs. Liddell: The July Budget forecast, published in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report", showed underlying retail price—RPI ex MIPs—inflation at 2½ per cent. in the fourth quarter of 1997, before edging up temporarily to 2¾ per cent. in both the second and fourth quarters of 1998.

VAT (Domestic Fuel)

33. Gillian Merron: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his reduction in VAT on domestic fuel from 8 per cent. to 5 per cent. [12681]

Dawn Primarolo: The change to a 5 per cent. rate came into effect on 1 September, benefiting all households well in time for winter fuel bills. I have received a few representations on the implementation of the measure.

Small and Medium Enterprises

34. Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about the increase in capital allowances for SMEs which he announced in the Budget. [12682]

Dawn Primarolo: I have received representations from a range of individuals and business organisations, mainly those with a particular interest in the small businesses sector who welcomed the useful cash flow advantage and boost to investment this measure provides.

VAT Crime Prevention Devices

38. Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will assess the advantages of reducing or removing VAT on crime prevention devices when these are purchased by local crime prevention panels for fitting in the homes of pensioners at no cost to those pensioners. [12686]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government are committed to reducing crime and creating safer communities through a wide range of strategies. EC law does not allow the introduction of new VAT zero rates, nor does the directive provide for a reduced rate to be introduced for purchases of crime prevention devices.

Private Health Insurance

39. Mr. Brady: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the public expenditure implications of the withdrawal of tax relief for private health insurance for pensioners. [12687]

Dawn Primarolo: No firm estimate is available of the public expenditure costs arising from the withdrawal of tax relief for private medical insurance for those aged over 60. This depends on the number of those affected who give up their policies. In the light of past experience, we believe that no more than a small proportion will give up their policies so that the public expenditure cost will be significantly lower than the full-year saving of £140 million. Details of the public expenditure element of that saving are given at paragraph 2A.6 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1997".

Capital Gains Tax (Avoidance)

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he has taken to counter Jersey-based capital gains tax avoidance schemes. [12661]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The Chancellor said in his Budget Statement that he had asked the Inland Revenue to review all areas of tax avoidance. Specific measures arising from that review will be announced as necessary.

Environment (Tax Incentives)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to introduce tax (a) incentives and (b) disincentives to encourage good environmental practice. [12672]

Dawn Primarolo: On Budget day in July we issued a statement of intent on the use of environmental taxes, which said that we will aim to reform the tax system to increase incentives to reduce environmental damage. We also outline, specific areas where we were taking this forward.

Aviation Fuel

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to tax aviation fuel. [12656]

Dawn Primarolo: We have no plan to tax aviation fuel at present.

Consultation Paper

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will publish the consultative paper foreshadowed in paragraph 1.30 of the July 1997 "Financial Statement and Budget Report"; and if he will make a statement. [14156]

Mr. Gordon Brown: It will be published on Tuesday 25 November.

Its purpose will be to begin a national debate on major economic issues in advance of the spring 1998 Budget and to report on the state of the economy including the forecast for the coming year.

The analysis in the paper will form the Background to the policy measures to be announced in the Spring Budget.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which other reviews have been set up as part of the comprehensive spending review since the Chief Secretary's answer on 24 July; and if he will make the terms of reference available. [14157]

Mr. Darling: Five further reviews have been set up. They are departmental spending reviews of the Crown Office (Scotland) and the Northern Ireland criminal justice system and cross-departmental reviews of the intelligence agencies, provision for young children and illegal drugs. The terms of reference have been placed in the Library today.

The collected set of terms of reference also includes a correct copy of those for the review of the criminal justice system. I regret that an incorrect early draft of the terms of reference was mistakenly included in the set deposited in the Library on 24 July. The changes are highlighted in italics.

These additional reviews underline the commitment of the Government to look at all items of public spending and produce spending plans for the long term. In particular, the cross-departmental reviews announced today further reinforce the commitment to a truly comprehensive review throughout all parts of government and across traditional departmental boundaries.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 299

SESSION 1997–98

28th July—30th October 1997

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker's rulings and statements'.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Comm = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
